Be great in act, as you have been in thought.

—King John, Act V., Sc. I.

The world is full of men who have "nothing done but great things undone." Imagination creates great poems, makes eloquent speeches, paints magnificent pictures, invents splendid instruments. Potential poets, orators, artists and inventors abound. Here and there a Shakespeare, or a Milton, a Raphael or a Titian, a Burke or a Webster, a Watt or an Edison raises his head out of a crowd of dreamers and takes his place among the illustrious men of action.

Not infrequently some youth is described as a promising lad, a young genius. He is remarkably precocious in thought, far in advance of his years. When he reaches maturity, his friends are amazed to find that some comrade of whom nothing was expected has passed him in the race for distinction. He may have had breadth of mind, predominating imagination; the other may have had narrowness of soul, but he was developed on the side of will, which so far as this practical world is concerned is infinitely better than imagination. The greatest men are those in whom penetrating imagination and strength of will are equally combined.

Shakespeare is supreme in literature. There is the clearest evidence that hi sdramas are not the product of mere imaginative genius. They are more largely the product of his genius for work. His series of eight historical dramas is, in many ways, his greatest achievement. Wherein lies this greatness? In the profound grasp of social and political questions, in an intimate knowledge of the facts and characters of each historical period. He conceived a great series of dramas, his imagination bodied them forth, and he at once went to work to prepare himself to give them tangible form. The very firstlings of his heart were the firstlings of his hand. He studied the history of his country; he reconstructed the characters of by-gone ages; he made us of any historical studies he found at hand. Shakespeare's plays are all evidences that he was great in act as he was in thought. Milton for many years had been dreaming of producing a great epic. Opportunity was lacking, but, when the fitting moment arrived, he acted, and produced an immortal poem. Epics and dramas have been and are being dreamt out daily; the man of action is required to give them form.

Thousands have gazed upon noble statues, sublime paintings, and listened to inspiring music and have been impelled to create, in their imaginations, statues, paintings, and music. But they fail to put their tohughts into action. Doubtless some of these dreamers are the imaginative equals of the great poets, painters and musicians under whose influence they have come, but they lack the patient industry, the power of taking infinite pains, the determination not to be overcome. In every great artist's career there have been times when he has felt that he could never approximate his ideal. If he were less than the greatest he allowed the difficulties to conquer him, if he were of the stuff that heroes and masters are made of, he braced himself and with renewed energy faced his difficulties and usually won.

Every great invention is an evidence that some man was as great in act as he was in thought. From the beginning of the nineteenth century occasional dreamers conceived that sound might be carried to a distance over a wire and reproduced. Alexander Graham Bell, a Scotch lad, had his imagination stirred by this thought. To think with him was to act. Laboriously he toiled to give material shape to his dream. It took years of experimenting, study and privation, but continuous action, combined with buoyant imagination and faith in himself, brought success. A thousand examples might be given from the modern world to prove that it is only by being as great in act as in thought that anything worth while is achieved. The failures are fo rthe most part those who dreamt, but did not act. King Richard II. was a dreamer with a lofty conception of kingship, but he never got farther than the conception. Henry V. had an equally lofty ideal, but with him thought and action went hand in hand.

The greatness of the Elizabethan age lies in the fact that it was a time of action. England conceived it possible to take first place among the nations, her seamen promptly sailed forth to explore th eends of the earth.

Often some individual is pointed out as a pronounced failure; he had great promise, but he lacked the energy to act. Many a tramp on the wayside has had dreams of a Shakespeare or Wordsworth. It is often the case that men who can rise to the most sublime heights may, under other circumstances, sink to the lowest depths. It is action that saves. When the wheels of industry are whirring and the rattle of the reaper is heard in the fields, there is happiness in the nation; when the factories are silent and the fields uncultivated, there is sorrow. The greatness of nations and individuals can be measured by the action they display in working out their thoughts.

Some Strenuous Election Fights

One of the most capable and popular wardens in the province, is Mr. T. A. Kelly, reeve of the Township of Cavan who has just been elected to preside over the Counties' Council of Northumberland and Durham. One is safe in assuming that the member of the Counties' Council of Northumberland and Durham who is honored by his election as Warden(is a man of good sound business ability and a thorough knowledge of municipal government, or he would not be filling the job; for as a matter of fact there is no County Council in the province that at all times contains more capable men. The Council of the united Counties of Northumberland and Durham is one of the largest municipal bodies in Ontario, comprising 38 members, including representatives from a number of good sized towns, such as Bowmanville, Port Hope, Cobourg, Brighton and Campbellford, as well as from half a dozen thriving villages and prosperous townships. Many very able men have passed through the Warden's chair of these united Counties, not a few of whom have later on taken a prominent part in the House of Commons and local legislature.

Mr. Kelly, who is a successful farmer is one of Cavan's most enterprising young men. He has served in the Township Council for a number of years and for the past four years as Reeve. He has also taken a deep interest in the affairs of his district generally, being at the present time President of the Millbrook Agricultural Society, one of the most flourishing institutions of its kind in the Midland district. He is prominent in several fraternal societies and extremely popular with the people of his township. Mr. Kelly is a Presbyterian in religion and is unmarried.

Dr. Might, one of the oldest residents of Port Hope became reminiscent a few days ago while talking to the Port Hope Times and related a few very interesting incidents that occurred in the Newcastle district in days of long ago. Dr. Might, who was born in the year 1829 has lived in Port Hope since 1838.

He remembers the rebellion of 1837, recalls the men drilling near where Mr. Brown's coal sheds now are, and referred to the guard houses here. He tells how he went to the Guide Board to welcome the returning soldiers, who were armed with flint lock muskets.

Dr. Might says that about 1840, the sign "Cash for wheat" was first seen in Port Hope, and it occasioned no little stir, and was hailed with joy. Before this time wheat was bartered for half cash and half trade in the store.

The Doctor says that about 1840 there were seven distilleries and three breweries in Port Hope. Whisky sold at from twenty to twenty-five cents per gallon. The principal exports of Port Hope were whisky and potash, the imports were apples from the United States, and Genesee flour.

Dr. Might recalls an election held before 1850 for a seat in Parliament. The candidates were John Tucker Williams, John Brown, and George Boulton. The voting was at Newcastle, and lasted for a week.

A man named Marshall went up to vote, and on returning from the polls was struck behind the ear with a stick, by a member of the opposite party and killed.

Williams was elected.

Some Interesting Historical Facts

Many officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the 3rd Prince of Wales' Canadian Dragoons who have attended the Royal School of Cavalry, Toronto, remember Sergt.-Major Widgery. He has been a prominent figure at the Toronto barracks for many years, and many a recruit has been put through his facings, regardless of their feelings, by "old Widg." At last, however, Sergt.-Major Widgery has stepped down and out. A few months ago his friends thought they would be blowing the "Last Post" for him long before this. Last spring he was thrown off a car, sustaining an injury that nearly cost him his life. But he pulled through, and is now—in the enthusiastic words of a comrade—"just as fit as they make 'em."

Mr. Widgery has been in the saddle for twehtyseven years. "In the saddle" is the correct expression in this case, too, for a better cavalryman than he seldom put his foot into the stirrup. In the period in which Widgery has been a member of the regulars, Canada has ben engaged in a couple of real wars, and a good many strike riots, and Widgery has generally been on the job.

STARTED AS A PRINTER

Widgery was a printer on the Hamilton Times when he took a liking for soldiering, and enlisted in the Cavalry School Corps then being formed. He had served in the Thirteenth Regiment and the artillery. He swore in at the old drill shed in Toronto, and moved to Quebec, got his baptism of fire at the North-West Rebellion. The Cavalry School moved to Toronto in 1893, and he has lived there ever since, excepting during the year he spent with the Dragoons in South Africa, the coronation contingents, and the various trips taken by the corps to obtain order among rebellious citizens.

At Niagara Camp every year Widgery exercised a remarkable influence for orderly conduct over the variegated crowd of militiamen who gather there year after year. All he had to do was to ride up to the hotel door and give the word, and there was a general trek to the camp. They couldn't dodge Widgery, as many a goose-stepper ascertained to his sorrow. He was one of the best police chiefs who ever guarded the morals and general behaviour of a Canadian military camp.

STILL IN GOOD SHAPE

But Widgery is getting out of the service, although still in good shape and fettle. There are other fellows entitled to promotion—and that reward is slow at the best of times in the Canadian regulars. He is to get a fair pension, of course, but he is mighty sorry to leave the service, and his old comrades are, too.

Things In General

The contract for the building of the new factory of the Lakefield Canoe Building and Manufacturing Co. has been let to Messrs. Baptie Bros., who have already commenced operations. The new building will be built on the site of the old one, and will be of solid brick, 40 x 60 feet, and two storeys high. When completed the factory will be fitted with all the latest machinery for the turning out of the celebrated canoes made by the Company.

The marriage of Miss Margaret J. Noble, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Noble, Port Hope, to Mr Chas. McNeil, Cavan, took place on Wednesday of this week. Mr. McNeil was once Warden of Northumberland and Durham.

Peterborough must have alert firemen, and a good system of fire protection, or both; for, while 131 fire alarms were sent in, fire damages amount to less than $19,000.00. — The Bowmanville News.

It looks very much as if even the Town of Trenton, a much smaller place than Peterborough, is going to beat us out in the matter of having paved streets. The Trenton Courier says: We understand that a representative of a peving firm was in town last week for the purpose of ascertaining if any business in their line was procurable. We were given to understand that calculating roughly, it would cost about $12,000 to pave from the Bridge to the Gilbert House on Dundas street, and from the Molsons Bank to the Stratheona Hotel on Front street.

It is estimated that the expense of developing and utilizing the Trent River powers, by the Seymour Power Co., will be a sum in the neighbourhood of $15,000,000.00.

Mr. Frank Post of Oak Lake, East Peterborough, has lately made a discovery of asbestos on his property. The vein will be thoroughly investigated in the spring to ascertain the probable deposit.

The Warder suggests that the Mayor of Lindsay wear "a gown and a chain of office". The Lindsay papers already make their Town Councillors look silly enough by dubbing them "aldermen," says the Orillia Packet. A few steps further and they would be fitted for the sideshow of a circus.

Insurance men, as a rule, are poor advertisers. A notable exception in the Midland district is Mr. W. H. Hill of Peterborough, who, for some years has made liberal use of newspaper space, "in season and out of season," evidently giving as much care and attention to this detail of his business as to any other. It would be interesting to know what Mr. Hill's experience has been in the way of results.—Orillia Packet.

ROYAL BODGUARDS

The Oldest Established are the "Beefeaters," Who Wear the Tudor Uniform

The honor of being the oldest established of the sovereign's bodyguards in England belongs to the Yeomen of the Guard, "beefeaters" or "beaufetiers," whose quaint Tudor uniform is one of the most cherished landmarks of historic London. They were founded as long ago as the reign of Henry VII., when they were instituted as a kind of palace guard, and no doubt might easily have been required to defend the King's person against partisans of the defeated House of York. The duty of acting as a guard has, of course, long since passed over to others, except on ceremonial occasions, such as the opening of Parliament and similar State pageants; but there was an historical appropriateness in the part which members of this old corps took in providing a guard of honor for King Edward VII.'s coffin during the lying-in-state at Westminster Hall. The Yeomen of the Guard are now quartered at the Tower, and most of them are old soldiers who have seen service.

The Household Cavalry (the Horse Guards, the First and Second Life Guards) were in the first place the nucleus of our present standing Army. The Horse Guards were also originated in Tudor days, but were disbanded, only to be revived by Charles II. after his exile. There were originally several troops of Horse Guards, which were changed into Life Guards during the latter part of the eighteenth century.

Among the customs which still remain from the days of warring dynasties, one may be mentioned which was observed on the occasion of King George's accession. A squadron of Horse Guards keep watch, booted and spurred, in Albany Street Barracks, until the new Sovereign has been proclaimed, in readiness to issue forth and resist any attempt to proclaim a Pretender. This custom dates from Queen Anne's day, when the proclamation of the Old Pretender might have been attended with grave consequences to the Hanoverian dynasty.

It is still the proud privilege of the Household Cavalry to provide an escort for the King's carriage on State occasions, but loyal British subjects are proud to remember the many occasions on which the Sovereign has passed among the people without even the semblance of armed protection. Many people there were who viewed with apprehension Queen Victoria's resolution to trust the chivalry of her Irish subjects on her memorable visit to Ireland; but the event justified the discernment of her choice. And one of the most cherished recollections of many who were present at Epsom in the June of 1909 is the complete trust in his people which King Edward VII. so unmistakably showed when he led his Derby winner in through a closely packed multitude of all sorts and conditions of men.

NURSERY RHYMES

The Same Trifles Have for Centuries Pleased the Infants of Many Countries

It is not often that one associates the nursery rhymes and tales that from our childhood have been "familiar in our mouths as household words" with those of other nations, or that we picture the little ones of Sweden and other countries as having sung to them those self-same ditties with which our nurses soothed our own baby slumbers. Yet the common origin and great antiquity of some of even the less well-known ones is extremely interesting and curious to follow. Take, for instance, the pretty stanzas on

Lady-bird, lady-bird, fly away home,
Thy house is on fire, thy children all gone,
All but one that lies under a stone,
Fly thee home, lady-bird, ere it be gone!

There are variations of this little verse throughout the Northern States of Europe, England, Germany, Denmark, and Sweden, besides two other versions of it in the Scottish dialect. In the County of Norfolk, where the lady-bird is locally known as the "burnie-bee," the children chant these lines when, after capturing one of these tiny insects, they toss it into the air again:—

Burnie-bee, burnie-bee,
Tell me when your wedding be!
If it be to-morrow day,
Take your wings and fly away.

In Sweden the lady-bird is known as the "gold hen," "gold cow," or "Virgin Mary's maid," and two pretty little versions of it are common one in the north and one in the south, as follows:

Gold hen, fly east, fly west,
You will fly where your sweetheart is.

And again:—

Fly, lady-bird, fly,
North, south, east, west,
Fly to the pretty girl
That I love best.

And there are numerous other more or less well-known examples of "Nonsense verses" of English and Sweden belonging to a common origin, which only goes to prove that the same trifles have for centuries lulled to sleep the infants of both countries, thus boasting a hoary antiquity and venerable old age, which entitles them surely to our respect.

ALL DRUGGISTS

HE DETESTED WOMEN

Bachelor Who Bequeathed All His Estate to His Twelve Horses

The highly-original will of an eccentric bachelor, Emil von Bizony, is reported by a Vienna correspondent. The deceased, the brother of a well-known Hungarian deputy, was sixty-five years old, detested women, and lived on a war-footing with all his relations. In his will he bequeathed all his real and personal estate, worth about $200,000, to his twelve draught horses. As executors of the will he named the Society for th Protection of Animals at Budapest, stipulating that the interest on his property should be devoted to the care of these twelve animals, and that upon the death of one of them another aged horse was to be taken in and cared for, so that the number of twelve might always be maintained. Herr von Bizony's relatives were naturally amazed at the contents of the will, and the deputy, Herr Alusius Bizony, will dispute it. Negotiations have been commenced with the above-mentioned society, and $20,000 was offered it, but refused.

REVEALED BY A DREAM

Webdale's Body Was Found Hanging From a Beam

A remarkable dream has led to the discovery of the body of Mr. Thomas Cook Webdale, London. Mrs. Copperwheat, a prominent member of the mission, dreamed one night that she went to the mission hall and found Mr. Webdale seated in front of the rostrum. His head was bowed, and she went up to him and placed a handkerchief over his neck. When she awoke she was greatly perturbed, and at her urgent request her husband went with another member of the mission to the hall, and spoke to the tenant of a shop beneath the mission building. They were told that Mr. Webdale had been seen to enter the hall, and they tried to gain an entrance, but found the door locked. When the door was eventually forced open Mr. Webdale's body was found hanging in front of the rostrum, suspended from a beam by a handkerchief knotted round his neck.

CHIEF FOOD SOURCE

New York Commercial Says it Will Change to Canada

The difference between Canada and the United States in the matter of grain production, according to the "New York Commercial," is this: "While the available areas are about all occupied and production has practically reached the maximum in the States, Canada, with 50 per cent. greater productive capacity, will be a long way off from her maximum yield in twenty years to come. And it is largely a question of land conditions. Canada's wheat growing belt is four times greater than that of the United States and only five per cent. of Canada's western agricultural area is under cultivation. There are 71,000,000 acres of wheat lands which will make these western provinces richer, more populous, more dependable for food supplies than the Western States can ever become. The centre of food supremacy will change to Canada."

A FATAL JOKE

A Fancy-Dress Prank that Ended in a Sad Tragedy

The terrible outcome of a holiday joke is reported from the wilds of Sicily. Two young women who had taken part in some holiday festivities had ended up at a masked ball. Anna Ripiti and her niece, Antonina Polizi, a girl of 16, thought it would be a grand joke to visit a relative, Luigi Savarino, steward on the big estate near Parinico, dressed as Sicilian brigands. Their disguise was all too effective, for when they approached Savarino's house he mistook them for the real article (devote Calabrian outlaws), and, gun in hand, called out "Who's that?" The two women did not reply, but pointed their harmless unloaded weapons straight at the frightened steward. Savarino then fired two shots. One killed the younger woman, and the other seriously injured her aunt. On discovering his mistake Savarino took to his heels. He is still in hiding.

STREET ICE CREAM

In the forthcoming Government of London Bill a set of clauses is intended to strengthen the powers of the Council in dealing with the ice-cream barrows and stalls. It will subject to a penalty any manufacturer or dealer who makes or stores ice-cream or the materials used in making it "in a place likely to render them injurious to health, or expose such commodity or materials to infection."

THE EYES OF THE SOUL

In a little book just published, entitled "The Deathless Soul," the writer gives many reasons for believing in existence after death. Dreams, he contends, show the independence of the soul from the body. "Think out your dreams," he says, "for they will prove to you that in your soul dwell miraculous powers. In your waking hours, you see by the aid of your physical eyes. In your dreams, when your physical eyes are closed, you see with equal clearness of view. With what eyes do you see? Unquestionably with the eyes of the soul. In dreams the soul overcomes the law of death. This is only one of the miraculous revelations of the soul's power afforded by dreams. Its marvellous annihilation of time and space has already been referred to. In an hour, in a minute, in a moment, we travel far, and accomplish superhuman deeds."

QUEEN ALEXANDRA

A Third Throne for her at the Coronation Next June

There is a curious mystery about the Coronation. Nobody knows for certain whether Queen Alexandra will attend it, says "London Opinion." This is because Queen Alexandra herself has not decided the point. On behalf of her Majesty it has been suggested that, should she attend, a third throne for her shall be placed on the King's left exactly corresponding in size and position with that of Queen Mary on the right. Probably that is what will occur, but these matters of procedure take a lot of arranging. There are wet towels around the heads of some of the greatest functionaries already over the happenings of next June, and the Lord Great Chamberlain's cat has even now to look lively at times to escape the missile of wrath.

Could Not Walk Ten Yards Without Resting.

WEAK HEART WAS THE CAUSE.

Mrs. Robinson Collette, Rogersville, N.B., writes: "I am now enjoying the best of health after having used your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I was troubled with a weak heart and was afraid to draw a long breath for the pain it would cause me. I could not sleep at night, and it was impossible for me to walk ten yards without resting myself. I cannot speak too highly of your Heart and Nerve Pills, for they are the greatest pill I have ever used and I can recommend them to all sufferers."

Thousands of people go about their daily work on the verge of death and yet do not know it.

Little attention is paid to the slight weakness of the heart for the simple reason that one thinks it will right itself, but there is where the mistake is made. It is only when a violent shock comes that the weakness of the heart becomes apparent.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, flagging energy or physical breakdown, the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will soon produce a quick and permanent cure.

PROTECTION OF CROWNED HEADS

The Care and Cares of Monarchs—Great Watchfulness of the Royal Guards

Most spirited monarchs rebel more or less against being taken care of, although their rebelling is the cause of much anxiety and worry to those upon whom rests the responsibility of their safety. A truly difficult task is reported to be that of the plain-clothes officers who are told off to "shadow" King Alfonso of Spain when he visits this country, for the adventurous young monarch takes so keen an interest in everything that takes his fancy that he often runs what are under the circumstances very serious risks. On one occasion, when there were decided possibilities of a determined attempt upon the young King's life, he terrified the detectives by strolling into a penny shooting gallery on the Edgware Road and making quite a lengthy stay there, his personality being very easily recognizable by the rather peculiar features with which the public are familiar through the illustrated papers.

Few people realize the amount of work which the visits of foreign rulers mean to the New Scotland Yard authorities, nor the risks which have to be run by detectives, in frequenting the haunts of well-known revolutionists to discover if any plans of violence are afoot. Most of the leaders in such movements are well known to the police of all countries, and any unusual activity in the way of communications between or visits from such known characters, is notified immediately to the country apparently the object of concentration. No known Anarchist or Nihilist is ever free from the vigilance of the police, or leaves one shore for another without a notification being flashed across to his destination by the sleepless watchers whose care, all unknown to the cheering crowds, has many a time prevented a national gala-day from becoming a scene of bloodshed, panic, and carnage.

Few sovereigns and their families are less to be envied by the ordinary irresponsible person than the Czar of all the Russias, his frail wife, and little children. The watchfulness of his guards is never for a moment relaxed. Even in his country residence of Tsarskoe Selo armed soldiers are always within earshot, and the royal children are not left unescorted at their childish games. The effect of this constant anxiety and suspense is reported to have a terrible depressing influence upon the beautiful Czarina's health, and there is a certain rather unchild-like gravity on the faces of the boy Czarevitch and the little Grand Duchesses which is intensely pathetic.

"ONE MORE CHANCE"

A Funny Story at the Expense of a Man Who Imbibed Too Freely

An amusing story, which has the merit of being true, is told of a gentleman well known in a town not far from Birmingham. He had entered into festivities with such zest that he found himself strangely drowsy when he boarded his motor-car. Telling the chauffeur to drive on, he lay down on the floor of the car, and soon was fast asleep. The car sped away on its journey, and the chauffeur, peering ahead, thought he saw an unusual glare in the sky in the direction of his master's house. As he approached nearer he saw that the glare was caused by a big fire. There were crowds of curious sightseers, and a posse of police blocked the further progress of the car. It was at this point that the slumbering gentleman awoke. The flames, ascending through the Stygian night, shadowy forms dodging in and out amidst the smoke, and the confused murmur of many tongues broke in upon his dazed consciousness. He moaned, and then, kneeling down in an attitude of entreaty, was heard to say: "O, Lord, give me one more chance!"

SOME ANCIENT BREAD

Two loaves of bread baked ninety-three years ago in Germany form the relic contained in a glass case at the home of Joseph Hummel, a business man in the States. They are reminders of the faming that swept Germany in 1816 and 1817. Wheat then sold for $85 a bushel. The loaves were heirlooms in the Hummel family, and came into Mr. Hummel's hands when he was visiting his old home in Wurtemberg twenty years ago.

GUELPH STATION OLD LANDMARK

One of the famous landmarks of Ontario is the beautiful old manor house now used, in all its rustic dress, by the Canadian Pacific Railway at Guelph. It was built upwards of a hundred years ago by the late Mr. John Galt when Commissioner of the Canada Company, one of the pioneer land companies of this country. This famous old structure is soon to be abandoned, it appears, for more modern and commodious quarters, but steps are being taken to preserve the present historic spot as an interesting link between the past and the present. It is one of the oldest houses in this part of Canada, still has the old 7 x 9 windows, its log arches, and other adornments of the early nineteenth century. Mr. Galt, who left more than one of these footprints on the sands of Time, was father of Sir Thomas Galt, late Chief Justice of Common Pleas, and also of Sir A. T. Galt, one time Finance Minister of Canada. The late Mr. Galt was the happy possessor of much Scotch humor, and left a legacy of writings of much merit, notably, "The Annals of the Parish."

Mr. Galt, in his autobiography, gives a graphic story of his joys and sorrows in the prosecution of his arduous duties of Commissioner. Arriving in Upper Canada in 1827 he began his work of colonization, and obtaining information respecting the country. Having received permission to attempt a settlement he directed an inspection of a block or tract of upwards of fifty thousand acres of the Company's purchase for the purpose of finding within it an eligible situation for a town. All reports agreed in recommending the spot where Guelph now stands. As it was too early in the year to undertake field operations, he decided to wait a few weeks, and gave orders that operations should commence on St. George's Day, April 23rd, 1827, and appointed a national holiday for the ceremony. "In the meantime," writes Mr. Galt, "as I imagined it would not be difficult to persuade the directors to erect a central office for the Company there, and as a tavern and hotel were indispensable, I set about procuring plans." Mr. Galt was the architect, and, as he believed "the style of a building should always indicate and be appropriate to its purpose," on every corner of the building he placed rows of glasses, bottles, punch-bowls and wine decanters. "Such an exhibition," he says, "as did not require a man to be a god to tell it was an inn." On April 22nd he went to Galt, "a town named after me long before the Canada Company was imagined." The next morning, in company with Dr. Dunlop, whom he met at Hon. Wm. Dixon's, they walked towards the site (Guelph), some eighteen miles away, half of which was through forest. They lost their way and wandered alone like "babes in the woods," until they discovered a hut inhabited by a Dutch shoemaker, who directed them to the outskirts of the forest. Next they came to the cabin of a squatter, who informed them that all the men had gone forward. About sunset, dripping wet, they arrived near the spot they were in quest of, and found the men, under Mr. Prior, whom he had employed, kindling a roaring fire. After drying out, Mr. Galt proposed that they go to the spot chosen for the town. "By this time," writes Mr. Galt, "the sun was set, and Dr. Dunlop, with his characteristic drollery, having doffed his wet garb and dressed himself, Indian fashion, in blankets, we proceeded, with Mr. Prior, attended by two woodmen with their axes.

"It was consistent with my plan to invest our ceremony with a little mystery, the better to make it remembered. So, intimating that the main body of the men were not to come, we walked to the brow of the neighboring rising ground, and Mr. Prior having shown the site selected for the town, a large maple tree was chosen, on which, taking an axe from one of the woodmen, I struck the first stroke. To me, at least, the moment was impressive, and the silence of the woods, that echoed to the sound, was as the sigh of the solemn genius of the wilderness departing forever.

"I do not suppose that the sublimity of the occasion was unfelt by the others, for I noticed that after the tree fell there was a funereal pause as when the coffin is lowered into the grave. It was, however, of short duration, for the doctor pulled a flask of whiskey from his bosom, and we drank prosperity to the City of Guelph."

The first emigrants were from La Guayra in South America, 57 in number, and on August 12th, the King's birthday, Mr. Galt invited a number of friends and gave a public dinner in the market house to the inhabitants. Subsequently Mr. Galt removed his family to Guelph, being induced to repair, for a residence, the receiving house which Mr. Prior had erected for settlers, as it was much better than such sort of buildings usually are. He had hoped that ultimately the house would make a good residence for Mr. Weld, of Lulworth Castle, latterly Cardinal Weld, whom he desired to allure to Guelph. Here is Mr. Galt's description of the residence which, as stated before, is now used as a C.P.R. station:

"Having in some sort a kind of taste in architecture, it seemed to me that the house could be made into a comfortable ecclesiastical abode, and, accordingly, although it was only ten feet high in the ceiling, I employed my best skill in laying it out. The reader will please to recollect that it was but a cottage of one story and formed of trunks of trees. As I have said, however, before, it was of its kind very beautifully constructed by Mr. Prior. Externally, I only added a rustic portico to it of trees with the bark, but illustrative of the origin of the Ionic order. It did not cost five pounds. The interior was planned for effect, and on entering was imposing, but the hall and two principal rooms were only twenty feet some inches square."

Scratched Until I Tore The Flesh

"It was in the latter end of the year 1908 that a nasty itch came through my skin, and I scratched it until I tore the flesh. I tried several ointments to no effect. I went to a skin hospital. They advised me to go to the ——— Hospital, but I refused. I could not sleep with the constant itch. I was that way until on or about the month of January. One day I chanced to see in the papers a case like mine, but I gave it no credence. At last I said, 'I will try the Cuticura Remedies.' With the first wash and Cuticura Ointment I used, I found their effects. I got one box of the Ointment more, and in less than one week the skin was all right, and left no traces after it. I have not had a return of the same since, and I shall always praise the Cuticura Remedies as being the means of my cure."

(Signed) JOHN TYRRELL,
94, Scotland Road, Liverpool.

In a further letter Mr. Tyrrell adds: "The first appearance of my skin eczema, was a burning itch which I tore and left my body, legs and arms one mass of sores. It caused sleepless nights, but now I can sleep as well as ever."

ALL CANADIAN ROUTE

Remarkable Development in Traffic to Halifax to and From the Old Country

Mails and passengers from Great Britain now reach Montreal, Toronto, and the Canadian West, and even to portions of the United States, more promptly and quickly via the Canadian Steamship routes than by the liners to New York, and the manner in which transportation facilities between Great Britain and Canada have progressed in order to meet the ever-growing needs of the rapidly developing Dominion is really remarkable. The Royal Mail Steamers leaving Liverpool for Halifax, N.S., now make the passage in from five to six days, and it is possible for a traveller to reach Toronto, or even farther, in seven days' journey from Liverpool. Halifax is 2,485 miles distant from Liverpool. From Halifax to Montreal via the Intercolonial Railway is 836 miles, and to Toronto is 338 miles farther. On the arrival of the Mail Steamers at Halifax mails and passengers are promptly transferred to a waiting special train at the dock. These trains have the most modern and comfortable type of passenger cars, through colonist and sleeping cars, and dining car, and trains are greatest possible speed, twenty-three to twenty-four hours being the average time for the run from Halifax to Montreal. At Montreal there is direct connection with trains of the Grand Trunk Railway for western points, and thus the whole of Canada is being splendidly served by the Steamship Lines and by the Intercolonial Railway, which has the important task of carrying the mails and passengers between the seaport and the metropolis of Canada.

The development of traffic by the "All Canadian Route" is shown by the increasing number of passengers landing at Halifax by these Steamers, while the tremendous increase in the amount of mail matter carried testifies eloquently to the strengthening of the ties between Canada and the Motherland, and to the great growth of commercial, social and personal correspondence. Recently the "Hesperian," of the Allan Line landed over 4,000 bags of mail at Halifax, enough to tax the carrying capacity of fifteen mail cars. The "Empress of Ireland" on a recent trip carried 2,100 bags and 1,250 packages. The finest steamers afloat have brought the Shores of Canada within six days' sail of England. From the Atlantic port of Halifax, railway trains, the equal of any in regard to speed and equipment, rush travellers to the interior. The I. C. R. Maritime Express, leaving Montreal Fridays, carries many passengers to Halifax to sail by the steamers departing for Liverpool, and thus there is a constant flow of travel to and fro during the winter season that is drawing Canada and Great Britain together in a closer bond of union.

Many offers have been made for the use of these trained decoys, but their owner prefers to keep them under the cover of his own gun.

KING AND SCOTLAND

Holy Rood Palace Has Been a Royal Residence Since James IV.'s Reign

Soon after the Coronation the King and Queen will visit Scotland and hold a Levee and a Court in Holyrood Palace. The date of the visit is not yet fixed, but it is possible that it will take place during July. It is expected that the King and Queen will reside in the Palace during their stay in Edinburgh. It will be remembered that in May, 1903, nine months after their Coronation, King Edward and Queen Alexandra went to Scotland and held a Levee and a Court at Holyrood—for the first time for 80 years. Their Majesties did not, however, take up their residence in the Palace, but occupied Dalkeith House, which was placed at their disposal by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. Holyrood Palace has been a Royal residence since the days of James IV. Portions of it were destroyed by fire in 1544 and in 1650, and were rebuilt, on the second occasion by Sir William Bruce and Robert Myine, the King's Master-Mason for Scotland. It continued to be the home of the King of Scotland until James VI. succeeded to the Throne of England. After James VI. came to England Holyrood was only used occasionally as a Royal residence. In August, 1860, and again in 1881 the Queen held reviews of Scottish Volunteers at Holyrood. King Edward and his brother the Duke of Edinburgh, lived in the Palace while attending Edinburgh University.

Had a Distressing, Tickling Sensation in The Throat.

COULD NOT SLEEP AT NIGHT.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is rich in the lung-healing virtues of the Norway pine tree. It is a pleasant, safe and effectual medicine that may be confidentially relied upon as a specific for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Quinsy, and all Throat and Lung Troubles.

It will stop that tickling in the throat which causes the dry cough that keeps you awake at night.

Mrs. J. A. Smith, Marshville, Ont., writes:—"I had a very bad cough and that distressing tickling sensation in my throat. It was so bad I could not sleep at night and my lungs were so sore I had to give up work.

"Our doctor gave me medicine but it did me no good, so I got a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and by the time I had used two bottles I was entirely cured. I am always recommending it to my friends."

Do not be humbugged into buying the so-called Norway Pine Syrups but be sure and insist on "Dr. Wood's." It is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; the price 25c.

WAS REDUCED TO A SKELETON

GIVEN UP BY THE DOCTORS AND PREPARED TO DIE

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" SAVED HER LIFE

The days of the miracle have not passed away. Every day—almost every hour—"Fruit-a-tives" is performing miracles of healing in some part of our country! One does not ordinarily think of miracles in connection with fruit juices—and yet it is fruit juices that are changing sick, helpless, and sometimes dying, people into happy, healthy men and women. Here is just one case in which the cure made by "Fruit-a-tives" was nothing short of a miracle.

MADAME ARTHUR TOURANGEAU.

Madame Tourangeau suffered for eleven years and was finally given up to die by her physicians. Yet "Fruit-a-tives"—the marvellous remedy made of fruit juices—completely cured her and restored her to health.

RIVIÈRE À PIERRE, CO. PORTNEUF, QUE., May 9th, 1910

"I look upon my recovery as nothing short of a miracle. I was for eleven years, constantly suffering from Chronic Dyspepsia and Indigestion with Constipation. The last two years of my illness, I was confined to my bed nearly all the time. I was treated by several doctors and they simply did me no good. During the latter part of my illness, I was so thin that I weighed only 90 pounds, and I vomited everything I ate. Even water would not stay on my stomach.

The doctors gave me up to die as the stomach trouble produced heart weakness and I was frequently unconscious. I received the Last Rites of The Church and looked forward to death in a short time. I was reduced to a skeleton.

At this time, a lady friend strongly urged me to try "Fruit-a-tives" and how thankful I am that I did so. When I had taken one box, I was much better and after three boxes, I was practically well again and had gained 20 pounds. I have taken 13 boxes in all and now weigh 150 pounds and am absolutely well—no pain—no indigestion—no constipation—my heart is sound—and complexion clear.

For the sake of other sufferers, I give you permission to publish my letter and photograph."

MADAME ARTHUR TOURANGEAU.

The stomach is a bag about a foot long and six inches wide, covered by a muscular coat and lined with delicate membrane. This lining membrane should pour out for each meal about a pint of Digestive Fluid called Gastric Juice, which dissolves or digests the food.

During digestion, the muscular coat squeezes and presses the food from one end of the stomach to the other, and this churning mixes the food with the Gastric Juice. If the food is not churned properly, or if the Gastric Juice is weak—then the food is not dissolved properly and Indigestion and Chronic Dyspepsia result.

Gastric Juice comes from the blood—and the only way to have strong, active Gastric Juice is to keep the blood pure by keeping the bowels and kidneys regular, and the skin active.

"Fruit-a-tives" will always cure Indigestion, Sour Stomach and Chronic Dyspepsia because the fruit juices act on liver, bowels, kidneys and skin, purifying the blood. "Fruit-a-tives" relieves any irritation in the stomach—strengthens the muscular coat—and ensures the Gastric Juice being full strength and abundant. If you have any Stomach Weakness or Trouble of Digestion, by all means take "Fruit-a-tives". 50c a box—6 for $2.50—trial size, 25c. Sent on receipt of price, if your dealer does not handle them, by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

"BAA, BAA, BLACK SHEEP!"

George IV., when Prince Regent, is said to have bet Sheridan a hundred guineas that he would introduce the words "Baa, Baa, black sheep!" into the King's Speech without arousing comment or surprise. He won his bet, and afterwards, when Sheridan asked Canning whether he did not think it extraordinary that no one should have noticed so strange an interpolation, "Did you not hear His Royal Highness say, 'Baa, baa, black sheep'?" he asked. "Yes," replied Canning, "but as he was looking straight in your direction at the moment I deemed it merely a personal allusion, and thought no more about it."

A LIGHTING DISCOVERY

When the mercury vapor lamp was invented, and it was discovered that the light was lacking in red rays, it was thought by the uninitiated that the light could be improved by the use of red glass about the lamp. This, of course, was impossible, for the reason that red glass acts merely as a filter of the light passing through it, cutting off all rays except the red. As there were no red rays in the mercury vapor lamp, the effect of putting red glass around it was to cut off practically all the light. Recently Dr. Peter Cooper Hewitt, the inventor of the lamp, has devised a means for adding red rays to the light emitted by the lamp. He uses a reflector coated with material, which is of such a character as to transform the wave length of certain rays falling upon it, so that red rays are reflected. The fluorescent material is painted on sheets of cardboard, which may be removed from the reflector frame when they show any deterioration, and be replaced with fresh sheets.

Wonderful Nervous System

EARLY INDISCRETIONS AND EXCESSES HAVE UNDERMINED YOUR SYSTEM

The nerves control all actions of the body so that anything that debilitates them will weaken all organs of the system. Early Indiscretions and Excesses have ruined thousands of promising young men. Unnatural Drains sap their vigor and vitality and they never develop to a proper condition of manhood. They remain weaklings, mentally, physically and sexually. How you feel? Are you nervous and weak, despondent and gloomy, specks before the eyes with dark circles under them, weak back, kidneys irritable, palpitation of the heart, bashful, debilitating dreams, sediment in urine, pimples on the face, eyes sunken, hollow cheeks, careworn expression, poor memory, lifeless, distrustful, lack energy and strength, tired mornings, restless nights, changeable moods, premature decay, bone pains, hair loose, etc.

This is the condition our New Method Treatment is GUARANTEED TO CURE

CORONATION IS THE BIG LONDON THEME

All Festivities Being Planned with Reference to the Royal Ceremony.

THE AUTOMOBILE PLAN

Question Has Arisen as to Whether Owners of These Will Be Allowed to Ride to the Abbey.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

WHEN the London season opens, about the middle of May, King George will give a series of private dinner parties to his more intimate friends at Buckingham Palace and a large number of guests will thus be entertained. The state apartments will not be used on these occasions, the parties being held in the dining room attached to the King's private suite on the first floor of the palace, overlooking the gardens. There are to be at least two state dinner parties in connection with the coronation, one of these on the eve of the ceremony, when all the royal and distinguished guests will have arrived.

The Lord Chamberlain's office, in St. James' Palace, is now busily engaged in preparing outline lists of names to be included in the courts of May and June. Many ladies who have been to court within the last three seasons, even though without the official status, have asked to attend this year, but in many instances they will have to defer their presence owing to the paramount claims of ladies from afar who will be in London primarily because of the coronation.

The tickets of invitation for the coronation ceremony in Westminster Abbey soon will be ready for issue by the officials of the Lord Chamberlain's department. They are thick cream cards, with gilt edges, and printed in gold. In the centre, at the top, is the imperial crown, surmounting the royal cypher.

These tickets will be carefully numbered and a record kept of those to whom they have been sent, and they will bear the signature of the Duke of Norfolk, as Earl Marshal of England. Arrangements are being made whereby it will not be necessary to deliver up these tickets upon arrival at the Abbey, so that they will probably become valuable souvenirs.

MANY GAY EVENTS.

Coronation balls and receptions are to be given by most of the Ambassadors, and festivities in honor of the event will also be given by the Duchess of Devonshire, Mistress of the Robes; the Duchess of Norfolk, the Duchess of Sutherland, the Marchioness of Lansdowne, the Marchioness of Londonderry and the Countess of Londesborough.

The great international horse show at Olympia is to be opened the week before the coronation, but there will be numerous counter attractions. Ascot meeting has been so arranged that it also comes the week before the coronation. By that time, too, most of the visitors will have arrived in London, and Lord Churchill will have a very difficult task before him in distributing vouchers for the royal enclosure. It is expected that the King and Queen will entertain a large party at Windsor for the race week and, following the precedence of other years, their Majesties will drive in semi-state from the castle to the royal heath in open landaus on the Tuesday and Thursday of the meeting.

Interesting events in connection with the coronation season will doubtless be the receptions at the various government offices, but there is some disappointment that so few Indian princes are expected to attend the ceremony, and that, therefore, there will be no function at the Indian office, which is looked back upon as the most brilliant of all the receptions held in 1902, when Lord George Hamilton was Minister for India. The scene in the quadrangle was one of almost unsurpassable beauty, and the dresses and jewels of the Indian princes have never been forgotten by those who were present.

AS TO AUTOMOBILES.

A question which is seriously troubling many personages who will take part in the coronation ceremonies is, will they be allowed to ride to the Abbey in their automobiles?

When King Edward was crowned the distinguished guests at the Abbey service were not permitted to use their automobiles, and there seems some doubt as to whether the same course will not be decided upon this year.

"At such a ceremony," said a highly placed official in discussing the matter, "there is bound to be a lot of congestion, and if any of the horses were frightened by automobiles serious accidents might happen. Automobiles have, of course, multiplied enormously during the last ten years, and some families have dispensed entirely with their carriage horses, but if the worst comes to the worst and automobiles are forbidden those bidden to Westminster will have to hire their conveyances."

"If that be the case, where will the carriages and horses be obtained" That is a serious question, too, for the proprietor of big livery stables in the West End said:—"I doubt if all the livery stables in the metropolis could supply sufficient horses and carriages if the edict does go forth against automobiles. Some of the nobility would have to ride to Westminster in broughams and landaus of the year one, that's certain, and the horseflesh won't be exactly aristocratic in many cases."

King George will, of course, have to name the date for the gala performance at the opera, which will be within what may be termed the coronation fortnight—that is, between June 13 and the end of the month. On the occasion of a gala performance the owners of boxes for the regular opera season are compelled to resign their loges for that evening, though when possible they are given the first offer for securing them for the eventful night.

LADY MEUX'S WILL FULL OF WONDERS

MANY QUEER BEQUESTS

Persons on This Side of the Atlantic Are Interested in Some of the Terms of the Testament.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

LADY MEUX, who in early life was Miss Valerie Langdon, an actress of standing, left a wonderful will, by which she bequeathes £5,000 ($25,000) and the entire residue of the estate to Vice Admiral Sir Headworth Lambton, brother of the Earl of Durham, on condition that he assume the name and arms of Meux within a year. If he fails to do this the property will devolve on his stepdaughter, the Hon. Edith Cadogan.

If the Admiral changes his name to Meux he will become the owner of Theobald's Park, which the Cecils gave to James I. in exchange for Hatfield and which now contains the restored Temple Bar, Sheen House, East Sheen; No. 41 Park Lane, London; a house at Brighton, a château at Suey-en-Brie, near Paris, and Lady Meux's interest in the famous brewery which bears her name.

SOME OF THE BEQUESTS.

Lady Meux seems to have remembered all her intimate friends, and bequests that are of interest across the Atlantic are herewith given:—

Mr. Ferdinand Marsham Townshend, £600 and all the real and personal property in Wiltshire. This cost £1,000,000, but Lady Meux sold a large part for £300,000.

British Museum, valuable Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities, including mummies now kept in museum at Theobalds.

Earl of Essex, £3,000.

Lord George Chelmondeley, £3,000 (contingent).

Marquis of Allesbury, £3,000.

The Hon. George Lambton, Chesterfield Cup and £1,000.

Florence Hwfa Williams, £1,000.

Essex, daughter of General Sir John French, £500.

Countess Vandalin Mniszech, £500.

Sir F. H. Laking, M. D., £200.

To Mr. C. F. Gill, K. C., who is co-executor with Mr. Townshend, is bequeathed £300 a year for life.

STORY OF WHISTLER.

As cabled to the HERALD, the missing Whistler portrait of Lady Meux, which she bequeathed to the National Museum, is said to be in an American collection. This is the picture referred to in a former despatch as one that caused a misunderstanding between the artist and her ladyship, when she told him, "See here, 'Jimmy' Whistler, you keep a civil tongue in that head of yours or I will have in some one to finish this portrait." As the story goes, Whistler fairly danced with rage, stammered, spluttered and finally gasped out, "How dare you?" Then he left and Lady Meux never sat for him again.

In this remarkable will Lady Meux rewards all her servants with substantial bequests, gives £1,000 to Chestnut College Hospital and leaves the Imperial Unionist Club, which she built, to the inhabitants of Waltham Cross, stipulating, however, that it shall be used only for tariff reform purposes. Lady Meux further directs that the horse breeding farm at Theobalds shall be kept up until Voiedyovski, who, under the colors of the late William C. Whitney, won the Derby of 1901, ceases to be of service, when he is to be destroyed. Each of a dozen pet dogs is to have five shillings a week for its maintenance.

It is not yet certain that the Egyptian and Assyrian treasures bequeathed by her ladyship to the British Museum will actually go there, as she stipulates that the collection must be kept together, and the pride of the British Museum is that its possessions are all scientifically classified and arranged. Only one exception has been made to this rule, in the case of the Rothschild collection, which is worth more than $1,000,000.

Lady Meux picked up the first of her Egyptian treasures when she visited Cairo on her honeymoon. She visited Egypt again, and, thinking that she knew enough to avoid imposition, she bought a lot of "antiques," which were soon proved to be forgeries. Thereafter she consulted Dr. Budge, who is keeper of Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities in the Boston Museum, and was never imposed on again. There are nearly 1,000 exhibits in this collection, including some limestone slabs, coffins and mummies from the tombs of rulers of the fourth and fifth dynasties, and four fine sepulchral steles inscribed with hymns to the sun god.

In the collection also are about 300 scarabs and amulets from Abydos. There is a silver figure of Ra, the sun god, wearing the double crown, and figures of birds, beasts, fishes and reptiles sacred to the gods.

COPYRIGHT BY MEDICAL PRESS

BUNNEY DICKENS, (2) ERIC HAWKSLEY, (3) FAIRY HAWKSLEY.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

THE spectacle of five of the great-grandchildren of Charles Dickens acting in a fairy play in the library of the home of Charles Dickens' son was witnessed by two hundred persons the other afternoon.

The handsome residence of Mr. H. F. Dickens, K. C., the son of the famous novelist, is at No. 2 Egerton place. The library and adjoining music room were turned into a theatre, although Mr. Dickens shamelessly admits he has no license. Mrs. Dickens acted as ticket taker at the head of the stairs, and didn't know exactly what to do with the tickets after she had taken them, but the portrait of her distinguished father-in-law smiled down on her from the wall above and she in turn smiled on all comers, who came not only to see the Dickens children act but also to swell the fund for the Babies' Hospital in Hoxton.

The fairy operetta was called "Rainbow Land" and was arranged by Mrs. H. C. Dickens. It was presented by the Misses Olive and Elaine Dickens, who are the novelist's grandchildren. One was musical director and played the piano and the other was stage manager and drilled the children.

The five great-grandchildren who appeared in the play were Bunny Dickens, a natural born comedian of six years; Fairy, Gypsy, Eric and Cyril Hawksley, ranging in ages from three years to ten. There were some twenty other children in the cast, also including the two clever Stone girls, Kitty and Bobby, daughters of Mr. Jackson Stone, an American by the way, and little Miss Hermione Henry, the extraordinarily pretty daughter of the head of the London police.

Charles Dickens loved children as few great men ever have, and the guests in his son's house could not help but love his children's children and their little friends.

"Don't think that the performance was crude or amateurish. Nothing of the kind. The music was taken from the latest comic operas, such as "The Quaker Girl" and "The Arcadians," while the children had been taught to dance by no less a distinguished dancer than Mr. Fred Farren himself. The actors were likewise letter perfect in their lines. When Miss Dickens presumed to prompt little four-year-old Cyril Hawksley, who played the part of a rabbit, he looked back at her with an air of disgust and replied, "I said that once."

Attendance of Many of the Feminine Gender at the Bouts at Olympia Causes Mr. Eugene Corri to Remark That Glove Fighting Is Not So Bad as Football Matches.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

THE presence of many women at a recent boxing contest at Olympia has revived the question, is it a good or proper place for them? Eugene Corri, the well known referee, says that "while the presence of women in London is rather unusual, in Paris they attend boxing contests in large numbers and take a keen interest in the sport.

"Ten years ago in this country," he went on, "one would not have seen a woman at the ringside, but women are getting more fond of manly sports than they used to be. They play at so many things themselves now—hockey, lacrosse, tennis and the like—that they are beginning to appreciate the value of muscular development. After all, many women go to see football matches, and at Rugby the players often get much more seriously hurt than do boxers. I cannot see why women should not go to boxing contests when they are properly conducted. A womanly woman admires a manly man, and I am sure it makes women better sportsmen and comrades when they take an interest in the manly art of boxing.

"Times change, and women with them. In the old days they were hidden at home and never heard of, but," concluded Mr. Corri, "it is better for both men and women when women like the sports and pastimes that men like."

STILL WORRY OVER FIGURES OF WOMEN

Mr. George Henry, A. R. A., Fears That the Gentler Sex Is Becoming "Harder, Stronger."

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday

THE question as to whether the woman of to-day is losing her distinctively feminine figure owing to her increased interest in masculine sports has once more been brought into prominence by a statement made by Dr. Sargent, of the Harvard Gymnasium, on the "physical conformation of women."

"Open air and athletic sports, more rational dress and education more like that of men," he says, "have caused the pronounced physical characteristics known as feminine to diminish and made the female figure more like that of the male."

Mr. George Henry, A. R. A., the well known artist, entirely agrees with Dr Sargent.

"Compared with women of a generation ago," he says, "the women of to-day look harder and stronger, their figures are straighter, and in many cases their muscles are more developed. Judging from my own observation, women's arms are longer and their hands bigger than they used to be. Other physical characteristics are a certain broadness across the shoulders, slightly larger waists and flatter chests. They have lost much of their graceful lines and contours, and their manner is often somewhat aggressive.

"One of the causes, to my mind, is that women of to-day are often working and thinking for themselves. They have won more independence, as the suffrage agitation abundantly shows. Women's faces, as well as their figures, seem to have undergone a change. They are sterner, more purposeful and strong. It is a sad thing for art, and I hope it is only a passing phase. It must be remembered that the great beauty and attraction of woman in the eyes of man is that she is so entirely different from him. It would be a terrible thing for woman to lose her natural charm and grace."

FEAR BALD WOMEN SOON MAY APPEAR

London Has Begun to See That There Is Peril in the Increasing Use of False Hair.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

WOMEN are threatened with an epidemic of baldness owing to the increasing use of false hair, such as "puffs," "rats," frames, pads, "transformations," "pin curls," and such like.

"If ladies persist in wearing false hair and employing artificial means to 'puff out' their hair they will eventually become bald," says a beauty specialist with a large practice in the West End. "The appliances used press on the scalp and impede the circulation of the blood. The result is that the roots of the hair become impoverished, and in time the hair itself gets so weak and thin that it drops out.

"Very little air can get to the scalp, imprisoned as it is in frames, 'puffs' and 'transformations' in addition to the ordinary hair."

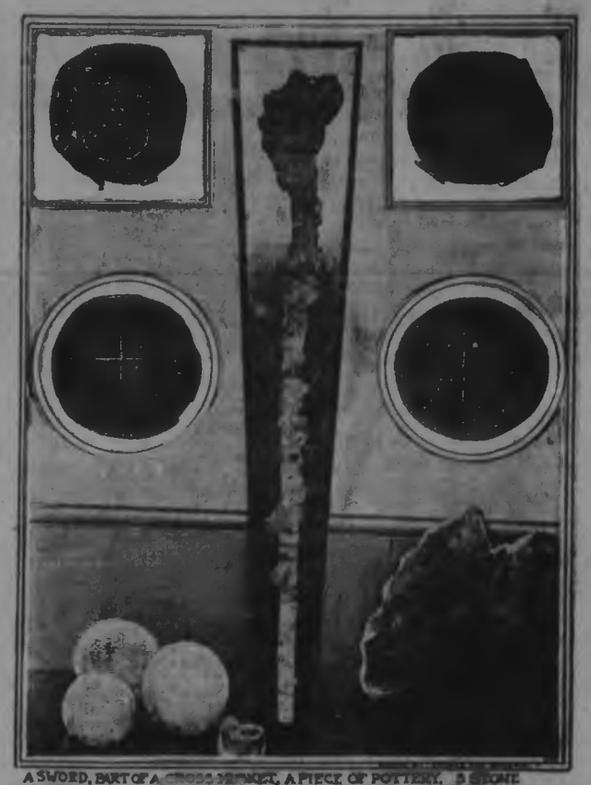
GEORGE V. COINS WILL SOON BE CIRCULATED

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

In a few weeks London may expect to see some of the new George V. coinage. The presses at the Royal Mint are now turning out gold, silver and bronze money marked with the effigy of the new King, but none of the George V. money has been "published," as the mint authorities say. Putting new money on the market follows the law of supply and demand. The banks are now placing their orders, and thus the George V. coinage will gradually be distributed to their customers, the public.

The fact that it is coronation year makes very little difference in the pressure of business at the mint, the only extra output being the coins which appear in commemoration of every coronation.

Syndicate to Search Sea for Sunken Spanish Gold



A SWORD, PART OF A CROSS-BOWMEN'S, A PIECE OF POTTERY, 5 STONE CANNON BALLS AND PIECES OF EIGHT" FOUND IN THE WRECKED GALLEON

Englishmen Think They Have Located Spot Where the Florentia, One of the Armada Treasure Ships, Went Down with Thirty Million "Pieces of Eight" on Board.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

BUSINESSLIKE to the verge of boredom is Great Winchester street, City, but high up in one of the great blocks of offices are a few relics, incrusted by sea action, which bring back the romantic past, recalling the destruction of the Spanish Armada in 1588.

One of the galleons which sank in Tobermory Bay was the Florentia, a vessel provided by the Italians, and an old record has it that in an official Spanish paper it was stated that there were 30,000,000 "pieces of eight," each about three-quarters the size of a dollar, aboard the ship. For three centuries men have tried to regain the sunken treasure, and now a syndicate, known as the "Pieces of Eight," seems within measurable distance of recovering it. These men claim, with some ground, to have located the exact site of the galleon submerged in ocean depths, seventy feet below the surface at high tide.

The chief exhibits in Winchester treet are arms and coins, and the discovery of some silver pieces of eight in excellent preservation was the first intimation that the searchers had of their having reached the treasure zone. About twenty relics have been found up to the present. One interesting relic is a medal with a representation of Christ and the inscription "Ego sum Lux Mundi." The sea has wrought a curious passage in the appearance of the arms which have been recovered. Rapiers, muskets and cannon balls are all covered with a thick incrustation, and what were once weapons look now like instruments of stone.

The exhibition is small, but enough to whet the appetites of the "Pieces of Eight" syndicate for the haul of treasure trove, of which they hope it to be the forerunner.

QUEEN INTERESTED IN INDIAN PLAN

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

Queen Mary has been deeply interested in the suggestion that the Ranee of Vizianagram made to Lady Hardinge, that when Her Majesty is present at the coronation durbar at Delhi she should be attended by native ladies of noble birth, but it is not regarded as possible that native Indian women can be attached personally to Her Majesty's household at home, though the King may have his male Indian attendants.

When Queen Mary was last in India, she became on friendly terms with many of the wives and daughters of the ruling princes and was present at several "purdah" parties, and from these will be selected her attendants at the coronation.

Men Who Insure

Who Are They?

Are they not the men who consider first their responsibilities to those dependent on them?

Are they not the true men, the men who do not live to themselves alone, the 100 per cent. fine men?

Are they not the men who remember that their beneficiary lives after them, and knowing they have provided, carry their heads higher and their chins in, they step firmer, and because they need not worry, they live longer and better. They realize that Life Insurance is not a duty but a privilege.

Are you a 100 man? The chances are that you have not thought of the advantages to you as well as the others. Can you get insurance? Possibly without your knowledge it is already too late. Perhaps to-morrow you will be beyond Life Insurance. Better call in at the Sun Life Office, 159 Hunter Street, and have a talk about it right away.

WILL BENEFIT THE FARMER

From Farm and Dairy.

SHOULD the negotiations for freer trade between Canada and the United States be ratified by the governments of both countries, on the basis that has been proposed, it will benefit every farmer in Canada and enlarge enormously the trade between the two countries. The revenue of practically every farmer in Canada will be increased, in thousands of cases by hundreds of dollars a year each. The value of our farms will be enhanced by five to 30 per cent. each as soon as the effect of the new conditions become fully apparent.

It is proposed that the products of our farms shall be admitted free to the markets of the United States, and that Canada shall lower slightly its duty on agricultural implements. These are the principal proposals as far as the farmers are concerned. If these proposals are carried into effect, they will completely change much of the agricultural conditions and trade in Canada. The farmers of the Maritime provinces will gain free access for their hay, potatoes and apples, as well as for the other products of their farms, to the valuable markets of New England. This will rejuvenate maritime agriculture and at the same time withdraw much of their potatoes and hay from the markets of Ontario.

In Ontario live stock, dairy products, fruit, especially apples, and grain, will be shipped into the States in enormous quantities, and to the extent of scores of millions of dollars a year. In the West, the farmers will be able to sell their grain and live stock in Chicago, and at other western points, at considerable advances over the prices they have been getting. This will place their entire system of farm operations on a decidedly more profitable and better basis.

By being enabled to ship our products to nearby markets, and thus avoid the long haul now necessary on much of our farm produce, we will thereby be enabled to save the very heavy transportation charges we have been forced to pay on much of it in the past. Thus we will save hundreds of thousands of dollars a year on freight and express charges alone. While this may disturb our transportation systems, the effect will be only temporary, as the benefit that will be derived by the country at large from the new condition of affairs will be so great, increased production will result, immigration will be encouraged, and the ultimate result will be a decided benefit to the railways.

The growers of tender fruit in the Niagara district, along the shore of Lake Erie and the St. Claire River, and in British Columbia, as well as market gardeners near the large cities, will be injuriously affected by the free admission of United States fruit and vegetables. This is unfortunate, but apparently cannot very well be avoided.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS

The reduction that is proposed in the duty on agricultural implements, and parts thereof, as well as on cement, is not as large as we had a right to expect. Our Canadian government evidently has been anxious not to injure our manufacturing interests. While it has made some slight concessions to the farming community in this matter, it has largely offset this, as far as injury to the manufacturing interests are concerned, by providing for the free admisison of coke, and by a reduction in the duty on bituminous coal, from 53 to 45 cents a ton.

MIDDLEMEN AFFECTED

The new conditions will be likely to injure the interests, at least temporarily of those middlemen who have large establishments in Canada, such as the millers, pork packers and others. Such firms will be forced to pay more for the grain and live stock they purchase but will not be enabled to obtain any more for their finished product in the markets of the world. Some of them, in consequence, are loudly proclaiming that the proposed new trade arrangements will work havoc in Canada even to farmers. These expressions of opinion only serve to show how necessary it is that the farmers shall do their own thinking in regard to matters of this kind. It will be unfortunate, nevertheless, if Canadian middlemen, with their large investments in plants, are injured. Dealers and drovers are not likely to be affected, as they can buy as readily for the United States markets as for any other.

THE EFFECT ON FARMERS

The result of the negotiations is a wonderful demonstration of what we as farmers can accomplish when we set ourselves to do it. The united front presented by the farmers of the west for the past few years on this question of freer trade, backed up as they have been during the past year by the farmers of the east, has had its effect on the government. This, however, is not the time to cease organizing or to rest on our oars. The interests opposed to the proposed arrangements are so great it will probably be months at least before they can be carried by the governments of both countries. Strenuous efforts will be made on both sides of the line to block them. Only by being thoroughly organized will we be ready to act on short notice to defend and promote our rights. Even should the negotiations as proposed be terminated succesfully, it will be well worth our while to continue our efforts for a further reduction in the duty on agricultural implements and several other much needed reforms

A SERIOUS DANGER

There is one serious danger. Our government has driven a shrewd bargain. The influence of the manufacturers, however, has been so great as to lead our government to refuse United States manufacturers as free a market in Canada for their products as they had a right to expect. This may lead the United States manufacturers to denounce the agreement as one sided and their influence may be sufficient to induce the United States Congress to refuse to approve of the negotiations as now proposed. Should this prove to be the result it will then be worth our while to consider seriously the advisability of urging the abolition of all duty on agricultural implements.

WHAT IS PROPOSED

The proposed tariff changes in which we as farmers are most interested are divided into three classes. Schedule A includes articles that it is intended shall be admitted free hereafter to both countries. Schedule B shows articles on which it is intended that both countries shall make considerable tariff reductions. Schedule D includes articles on which Canada alone is willing to make the reductions indicated. That Canada is likely to gain the most is shown by the fact that the United States is now willing to allow in at lower rates just 91 per cent. of all goods formerly dutiable we supply her, worth $47,332,000, while we allow in at lower rates just 36 per cent. of all goods formerly dutiable that the United States has supplied us with, worth $47,828,000. We have imported much more from the United States relatively than the States has from us, which makes the total values about the same. Under the new arrangement, with 91 per cent. of our goods admitted to the States free, our exports are likely to increase much more rapidly than the exports of the United States to us.

ROUTINE WORK OF A WOMAN ON THE FARM

From Farm and Dairy.

Mrs. Bruce Martin, Simcoe Co., Ont.

The routine work of a woman on the farm is to prepare three meals a day. This regularity of duty recurs regardless of season, weather, planting, harvesting, social demands, or any other factor. The only differences in different seasons are those of degree rather than of kind. It follows, therefore, that whatever general hardships, such as poverty, isolation, lack of labor-saving devices, may exist on any given farm, the burden of these hardships falls more heavily on the farmer's wife than on the farmer himself. In general, her life is more monotonous and the more isolated, no matter what the wealth or the poverty of the family may be.

The relief to farm women must come through a general elvation of country living. The women must have more help. In particular these may be mentioned: Development of a co-operative spirit in the home, simplification of the diet in many cases, the building of convenient and sanitary houses, providing running water in the house and also more mechanical help, good and convenient gardens, a less exclusive ideal of money getting on the part of the farmer, providing better means of communication, as telephones, roads, and reading circles, and developing of women's organisations. These and other agencies should relieve the woman of many of her manual burdens on the one hand and interest her in outside activities on the other. The farm woman should have sufficient free time and strength so that she may serve the community by participating in its vital affairs.

We have found good women's organisations in some country districts, but as a rule such organizations are few or even none, or where they exist they merely radiate from towns. Some of the stronger central organisations are now pushing the country phase of their work with vigor. Mothers' clubs church societies, home economics organisations, farmers' and women's institutes, and other associations can accomplish much for farm women. Some of the regular farmers' organisations are now giving much attention to domestic subjects, and women participate freely in the meetings. There is much need among country women themselves of a stronger organising sense for real co-operative betterment. It is important also that all rural organisations that are attended chiefly by men should discuss the home-making subjects, for the whole difficulty often lies with the attitude of the men.

There is the most imperative need that domestic, household, and health questions be taught in all schools. The home may well be made the centre of rural school teaching. The school is capable of changing the whole attitude of the home life and the part that women should play in the development of the best country living.

RHEUMATISM AND COMMON SENSE

Father Morriscy's No. 7 Eliminates the Uric Acid.

Many treatments will relieve the aches and pains of rheumatism, but there is only one way to cure that dread disease. The common sense method is to remove the cause, and the effects will soon disappear.

Rheumatism is caused, as is well known, by the failure of the kidneys to perform their intended work of filtering the uric acid out of the blood and eliminating it from the body through the bladder. When the kidneys go on strike, the uric acid is carried to the joints and tissues, where it causes stiffening of the muscles, and the excrutiating pains of rheumatism.

Father Morriscy, the learned priest-physician, after much research devised a prescription which would act directly on the kidneys, and by toning them up to vigorous action, cause them to clear the system of the uric acid. This remedy, known as No. 7, has been used successfully in thousands of cases.

Father Morriscy's Liniment will bring relief from the effects of rheumatism, while his No. 7 Tablets will get to work on the cause and in due time cure the disease.

Why suffer from this painful and troublesome affliction, when by using the common sense methods originated by Father Morriscy and successfully followed for years, it is possible to aid Nature to restore you to health?

If you are not yourself rheumatic, you doubtless know of some one who is, and who would be glad to learn of a treatment which has such a consistent record of cures. It is easy to take and sure to benefit and ultimately cure rheumatism 50c a box, at your dealer's, or from Father Morriscy Medicine Co., Ltd., Chatham, N.B. 99

No Sick Person can Afford to throw away this chance to get a 50c. bottle of Psychine FREE

This being ill is curious business.

It usually commences in a subtle fashion, almost unconsciously.

Yet if you do not check your illness, it grows and grows.

* * *

The greatest scavengers of the body are the white corpuscles, or phagocytes in the blood.

These white corpuscles attack and eat up every germ of disease that invades the body.

That is when they are strong enough and in sufficient numbers.

If they're not strong enough, then they wage an unequal warfare until they are finally overcome by their more powerful enemies.

* * *

Now, we have had all sorts of so-called cures.

But years ago—before even science was able to tell we had the right treatment for disease—viz., herbs, nature's own remedies.

Now that science can tell to an absolute certainty, we know why certain herbs cure disease.

Because they strengthen and increase the white corpuscles or phagocytes.

To-day it is making remarkable cures.

Hundreds of thousands of people made well and kept well.

Why?

Because Psychine is largely made up of those herbs that scientists now know increase and strengthen the white corpuscles, the phagocytes.

That's why we have received hundreds of thousands of unsolicited testimonials, that's why we can afford to buy and give away hundreds of thousands of 50-cent bottles of Psychine, that's why Psychine benefits these diseases:

La Grippe	Bronchial Coughs
Bronchitis	Weak Lungs
Hemorrhages	Weak Voice
Sore Throat	Spring Weakness
Anaemia	Early Decline
Female Weakness	Catarrhal Affections
Indigestion	Catarrh of Stomach
Poor Appetite	Night Sweats
Chills and Fevers	Obstinate Coughs
Sleeplessness and Nervous Troubles	Laryngitis and Dyspepsia
After-effects of Pleurisy, La Grippe.	Pneumonia and

Now we don't ask you to take our word for the tremendously beneficial effects of Psychine. Fill out the coupon below, mail it to us and we'll give your druggist an order (for which we pay him the regular retail price) for a 50-cent bottle of Psychine to be given you free of cost.

We will undoubtedly buy and distribute in this manner, hundreds of thousands of these 50-cent bottles of Psychine.

And we do that to show our entire confidence in this wonderful preparation.

A confidence that has been based on our 30 years' experience with this splendid preparation, with a full knowledge of the hundreds of thousands of cures it has made.

LOCAL TREATMENT FOR WOMEN'S DISORDERS

The health we enjoy depends very largely upon how the blood circulates in our bodies; in other words, if we have perfect circulation we will have perfect health.

There is a constant wearing out of the tissues in every part of the body. The blood flowing through the veins carries off this waste or dead matter, while the blood coming from the heart through the arteries brings the fresh new living tissue, the essence of the food we have digested, to replace what has been carried off. This constant wearing out and expelling of the dead matter and the replacing of it with new matter, atom by atom, goes on day and night, until in about 7 years a complete change has been effected. Thus every man and woman has an entirely different body in every particle of it from what he or she had 7 years before.

It sometimes happens, however, from a variety of causes, that the blood becomes congested in certain portions of the body. This means that the blood vessels in these parts become weakened, and the circulation in that section of the body becomes sluggish and stagnant. The consequence is that the dead matter in that part of the body is only partially carried away, and that but little of the new, vital matter is introduced there to build up and strengthen the tissues and nerves.

This condition invariably exists in all cases of female disorders. The dead matter retained in the circulation, which should have been expelled, causes irritation and inflammation of the delicate membranes, and oppresses the nerve centres. This condition is the cause of the grievous physical and mental suffering which accompanies female troubles.

To obtain relief it is evident that the first thing to be done is to get rid of the dead matter which is being held in the circulation. If this dead matter is allowed to remain there a species of blood poisoning will result and nature will endeavor to get rid of it by forming ulcers, tumors, etc.

The above explanation will also show why ORANGE LILY is so successful in curing this condition. It is a local treatment, and is applied direct to the affected organs. Its curative elements are absorbed into the congested tissue, and from the very start the dead matter begins to be discharged. A feeling of immense relief, both mental and physical, accompanies it, and the improvement is constant and positive. This feature of the expelling of the dead matter is always present in a greater or less extent, and in some cases it is so marked as to be amazing. The case described in the following letter is not exceptional:

Dr. Cromley:—I am thankful to Mrs. F. E. Currah, your Canadian representative, for my health restored by your wonderful remedy. I have suffered for 17 years, but not so bad until 3 years ago. Then I had a doctor, who told me I had a tumor, and could live no more than a year. If I went through an operation I would not live through it. A year later I sent for him again, and he gave me up to die. My husband then sent for another doctor, who performed an operation, and it did me much good. I doctored with him 3 or 4 months, but became so bad again that I thought I could live no longer, and I began to long to die. One day my husband came home and threw a slip of paper to me with Mrs. Currah's address and told me a lady had advised him to write to her for a treatment that would cure me. I said it was too late, that I would die anyway. I could not lift a teacup without hurting me. Then the first doctor told me I was worse than ever. However, my husband sent for ORANGE LILY, and the third treatment brought away one tumor. Others followed, until 7 tumors had been expelled, 3 large ones and 4 small ones. I know if it had not been for ORANGE LILY I would have died, for I could not live much longer. I would have thought it cheap at one hundred dollars for a month's treatment, instead of one dollar. It is worth its weight in gold.—MRS. GEO. LEWIS, Huntsville, Ont.

The above letter is published with Mrs. Lewis' permission. All letters received are treated as being sacredly confidential, but occasionally some patient feels so grateful for being cured that she is willing to make the matter known for the benefit and encouragement of her suffering sisters.

ORANGE LILY is a positive, scientific remedy for all disorders of the female functions. As explained above these troubles are of local origin, and require local treatment. It is just as sensible to take medicine internally for female troubles as it would be to take medicine internally for a bruise, a boil or an ulcerated tooth. In all these cases some dead matter is being retained, and the cure is effected by employing local methods for expelling the dead matter. ORANGE LILY has antiseptic, soothing and healing properties, and also tones up and invigorates blood vessels and nerves. I am so anxious that every suffering woman may satisfy herself, without cost to her, that ORANGE LILY will cure her, that I hereby make the following

FREE TRIAL OFFER

I will send, without charge, to every reader of this notice who suffers in any way from any of the troubles peculiar to women, if she will send me her address, enough of the ORANGE LILY treatment to last her ten days. A GOOD COMBINATION

From Farm and Dairy.

One of the nicest combinations that can be worked out with satisfactory profits on a small acreage, is that of poultry, fruit and bees. These three properly managed on a small acreage will give returns and net profits that puts the income from many—yes, most large farms, to shame. J. W. Clark, of Brant Co., Ont., a well known poultry man and Institute lecturer, in 1909 made over $3,500 from his 25 acre farm. While in conversation recently with an editor of Farm and Dairy, he estimated that his receipts would much overrun that amount for 1910.

Confronted by the facts of these splendid results from 25 acres, all must own that poultry, fruit and bees are a great combination. Mr. Clark has a family of six and most of their living has been taken off their farm, and is not included in the returns as stated. The chickens and bees are kept on 10 acres. During the past season Mr. Clark's bees produced two and a half tons of honey, which he sold wholesale at 10 cents a pound. Mr. Clark avers that there is money in small fruit, but he states emphatically that apples are the best paying proposition. Recently he has set out more of his limited acreage to apple and pear trees, and he expects soon to have that 25 acre plot producing $7,000 a year or more. He says that it only means planting out more fruit trees and erecting more poultry houses.

The splendid possibilities of poultry and horticulture on a small acreage in Ontario are abundantly demonstrated in Mr. Clark's experience. Many Ontario farmers may well profit from what Mr. Clark has done and specialize more along these particular lines of agriculture.

POULTRY KEPT TOO LONG

Much farm poultry fails to return a profit because it is kept too long. There is a most favorable time each year for selling poultry and the greatest profits are realized by those who manage their flock so as to have their stock ready for market at that time. Money in abundance is lost through keeping poultry for too long a time. Most of the birds are held until snow comes or until it freezes up. Then they are all gathered in and placed upon the market at once. There is then a glut on the market. The birds are improperly fitted or are not finished at all, and the price drops.

One should aim to feed the young stock well throughout the summer, to grow them quickly, and to get them on the market early. Then will the best prices be realized. If kept until later in the fall the great bulk of the poultry is placed on the market and, then much of it is sold at a price that will not pay for the feed consumed.

It is always a mistake to withhold feed from young stock. Young stock of any kind can make more profitable use of feed than it can after it has become more mature. This fact is particularly true of poultry. Now that hopper feeding has provep its worth, and seeing that there is so little labor connected with feeding the birds where this system is practised, there is no excuse for any one not having good poultry well fleshed to place on the market early when the demand is keen. Birds that have been hopper fed throughout the summer will be ready for an early fall market without any special fitting in the way of crate fattening.

CARE OF CHICKENS

From Farm and Dairy.

Chickens, to lay in November, must be hatched in April either by hens or the incubator. The former method is satisfactory if the setting hens are properly attended. Have clean boxes for nests and keep the brooding hens away from the rest of the flock.

When the chickens are hatched no food should be given them for 24 hours. Later give fresh water in shallow pans where they cannot get wet, and give dry feed such as bread crumbs, rolled oats and wheat shorts. Keep grit always before them.

As they grow older, feed cracked grain, and table scraps at noon. Young chicks must be fed what they will eat clean, three or four times each day, until they can run about vigorously, when three times, and finally twice will answer. There are several good incubators, any of which, if properly handled, will be found satisfactory. I use the Hamilton Incubator.

CLEAN QUARTERS

Chickens must have warm, clean quarters, especially at night. They do best if allowed to have their freedom in the day time, if the grass is not too long where they range.

Chickens hatched in April and well fed make good broilers in July. It is wisdom to weed out the cockerels and sell them in this way. If this is not done they should be separated from the pullets and fattened as soon as possible.

THE SEPARATOR

From Farm and Dairy.

Mrs. Chas. Cocklin, Simcoe Co., Ont.

Firmer butter can be secured when churning a thick than a thin cream, hence we take a reasonably thick cream. We use a hand separator. It is the easiest, quickest and cleanest method of skimming milk. We can get more cream and butter by using the separator than from any of the old methods and with less labor.

We cool the cream from each separation before mixing it with old cream. It takes us two days to gather enough cream to churn. We set the cream ripen for 24 hours, stirring it frequently. It takes from 15 to 30 minutes to churn at about 60 degrees F. The buttermilk is then drawn off, the butter washed in the churn with fresh cold water and salted at the rate of one ounce to the pound. We work the butter thoroughly until every bit of water is out of the butter, except that which is thoroughly incorporated.

We let the butter stand in a cool place until it hardens, then print. We weigh each pound of butter separately to be sure that we have full weight. We prefer printing the butter to packing in tubs, as those who buy from us on the market see our names on the wrappers, and come back knowing that they will get good butter and full weight.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

FEBRUARY 5. 1911.

(Copyright, 1911, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

Elijah the Prophet Appears in Israel. 1 Kings, 17.

Golden Text—They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing.—Ps. xxxiv.: 10.

1. Verse 1—Is the spirit of prophecy a thing of the past? Give your reason.

2. How did Elijah know of the coming of famine?

3. Why did God send this famine?

4. Does God in these days ever send famine, or other calamity, to punish the people for their sins?

5. Verses 2-4—What reason is there to believe that God's word to Elijah, to go to the brook Cherith, was any different to directions true Christians receive to-day, to move from one place to another?

6. What, if any, difference is there between God's method of telling a man that his sins are forgiven, or telling him to move to another town?

7. When God answers our prayers for guidance, does he use any different voice than the one with which he spake to Elijah?

8. Verse 5—Is there any danger of a true man mistaking the voice of God, or is it always safe to follow without doubt?

9. Verse 6—What reason is there to believe that literal ravens fed Elijah?

10. Did the ravens bring the food direct to him, or did they deposit it where he could obtain it, and all unconscious that they were feeding Elijah?

11. What reason is there to believe that food, raiment, and home are guaranteed to the Christian?

12. Are daily needs ever miraculously provided for us in these days? Give some reasons.

13. Verse 7—When our supplies fail from one source, what does God say to us through that fact?

14. Is God's guidance of us through circumstances, as real and as profitable, as if He were to speak from the clouds with an audible voice? Give your reasons.

15. Verses 8-9—What reason is there to believe that when all the means we know fail that we can rest with certainty that God knows a way, and will in due time reveal it unto us?

16. "Our extremities are always God's opportunities," but does help generally come to us from the sources which we would naturally expect or from unlikely sources? Give your reasons.

17. In extending His kingdom on the earth which means does God most frequently use, the weak or the mighty? Give examples.

18. In what sense can God command us to do a thing without our being conscious of it?

19. Verses 10-16—How did Elijah recognize this woman when he met her?

20. How would it affect the spiritual value of this story if it should prove that God had directed Elijah to this widow by wholly natural means, Elijah having known her in advance?

21. What induced the widow to divide up her scanty supply of food an dwater with Elijah?

22. Is there any way to explain this story except by God's miraculous increase of the food?

23. What is the practical import of this story to us?

24. Verses 17-24—What is the proof that every trouble to a Christian is a blessing in disguise? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.)

THE CARE OF CREAM

From Farm and Dairy.

With little or no increase in investment or labor it would be possible for patrons of creameries to increase their earnings by simply giving a little more attention to the care of their cream. The best quality is absolutely necessary if we are to get the highest possible price for our cream. The only practical method in the hands of the farmer for checking the growth of the small organisms in the cream, called bacteria, which causes it to sour and decay, is by cooling it down to a low temperature immediately after it comes from the separator.

To show the value of quick cooling upon the keeping quality, a sample of milk was kept at 98 degrees Fahrenheit (the same temperature at which it was drawn from the cow) and it curdled in 18 hours. The same size sample of the same milk was cooled to 70 degrees Fahrenheit and it did not curdle until 48 hours had elapsed. Another sample was cooled to 50 degrees and it kept for 10 days without curdling. Although these figures would not be the same for all samples of milk, it brings out the fact that bacteria which cause milk to sour grow very slowly at low temperatures.

To bring out the fact that it is possible to cool the cream much quicker by placing the can in cold water than by allowing to stand in the air, a four-gallon can of cream at 98 degrees Fahrenheit was placed in water having a temperature of 64 degrees. The cream cooled to the temperature of the water (64 degrees) in two hours. Another can of the same size, containing the same amount of cream, at the same temperature, was allowed to stand in the air having a temperature of 45 degrees (19 degrees lower than the temperature of the water) yet it did not cool down to 64 degrees until 10 hours had elapsed.—B. THE FAMILY HEARTH

Flowers For the Living.

Once while assisting in the last sad rites that so often fall on us to perform here on earth, for some dear and precious one stricken down by the hand of death we were particularly impressed as we beheld the casket containing the stiff, silent form so profusely covered with flowers that it seemed.

"'Twould be bliss to there repose."

But we had known the pathway that silent form had trod. Few flowers bloomed beside it, but little sunlight ever crossed it. Tired and weary, few proffered help, sad and discouraged few spoke words of cheer. Thorns by the way, there seemed none to remove them; often cast down there seemed none near to lift up. A heart starving for a loving word, a soul bewildered for lack of a tender hand to guide. But all is over now; the pangs the regrets, the cares, the sorrows can hamper that form no longer, neither can any tender, loving administration you may now bestow take one pang, one regret, pluck one thorn or emit one ray of sunshine on the life already over, or add one jot to the bliss of the soul in its new estate. That day most beautiful flowers were proffered by those whose lips never uttered one word of cheer to the departed, nor hands never holden out to help, to remove the thorn, to smooth the way and make at least one pleasant little oasis on life's desert.

Have we friends? We trust we have. Then we pray them save not all the flowers for my burial, but sprinkle a few along my pathway now—just a few. We can appreciate them just now. How refreshing—how they fill my poor heart with joy just to know someone thinks of us—cares for us, is even solicitious for our welfare. Oh, how it brightens life, lightens its burdens; the consolation even softens a dying pillow, might we not say adds bliss to the departed spirit. Yes, strew our coffin with flowers, but oh, grant us a few by the way—just a few bestowed against the day of our burial.

Number One.

"I always take care of 'Number One,'" said one of a troop of boys at the end of a bridge, some wanting to go one way and some another.

"That's you, out and out," cried one of his companions. "You don't think or care about any one but yourself, you ought to be called Number One."

"If I did not take care of Number One, who would, I should like to know?" cried he.

True, Number One was right. He ought to take care of himself—good care.

"But does not that smack a little of selfishness?" the boys ask. "Number One thinks of nobody but himself."

Nobody but himself! that certainly is selfish and therefore wrong. Yet Number One is committed to our care now. What sort of care is the all-important question.

Take care of his habits. Make Number One industrious, persevering, self-denying and frugal. Give him plenty of good, healthy work to do, teach him how best to do it, and keep him from lounging and all idle company.

Take care of the lips of Number One. Let truth dwell on them. Put a bridle in his mouth that no angry backbiting tale shall come from it. Let no profane or impure word escape. Let the law of kindness rule his tongue, and all of his conversation be such as becomes a child of God.

Take care of the affections and feelings of Number One. Teach him to love God with all his heart and his neighbour as himself; to care for others, and share with others; to be lowly in mind, forgiving, gentle, sympathizing, willing to bear and forbear, easily entreated, doing good to all as he has opportunity.

This is the care to take of Number One, and a rich blessing will he prove to his home, and neighbourhood, and himself! Boys! ye all have Number One to take care of; and a responsible charge it is.

Definition of Home.

Home—the anteroom of heaven. It should be anti-trust, anti-monopoly, anti-license and anti all other forms of evil.

The golden setting, in which the brightest jewel is "mother."

Home is the blossom, of which heaven is the fruit.

The only spot on earth where the faults and failings are hidden under the mantle of charity.

The jewel casket containing the most precious of all jewels—domestic happiness.

Where you are treated best and you grumble most.

Home is the central telegraph office of human love, into which run innumerable wires of affection, many of which, though extending thousands of miles, are never disconnected from the one great terminus.

The centre of our affections, around which our hearts best wishes twine.

The little hollow scooped out of the windy hill of the world, where we can be shielded from oud cares and annoyances.

We need to remember that success in life is not success in material life alone but in the social and religious as well. That a man is not a practical man who is a merchant, a farmer, a teacher merely; he must also be a citizen, a neighbour, a friend, a son, perhaps a brother, a husband, a father—and most important of all a little child in the garden of a Heavenly King.

SimpleOpera Bag.

About the simplest possible opera bag is made of a piece of satin, linen or moire, sixteen by seven inches, with a lining of china silk the same size.

Sew bag material and lining together and stitch up the sides. Make slots for the drawstrings, thread silk cord through them, and there you are!

Of course, if you wish to be a little more elaborate, embroidery and hand-painting are in order; and then there are the little pockets inside for powder puffs, mirror, theatre tickets, etc. But the bag is certainly most easily made and a very pretty and dainty one it is.—Washington Times.

Avoid Public Cup.

In the train on the boat, and in any public place where there is a water cooler or place where water may be obtained for drinking purposes a fifteen minute study of the people who use the one or two drinking cups provided should be sufficient to make one resolve to always carry one's own cup when travelling.

Not only is it a greater convenience but as a sanitary precaution it is an absolute necessity. All sorts of mouth and skin diseases are acquired by simply using a public drinking cup, used previously by a diseased person.

Folding drinking cups may be purchased, which when pulled to full hold as much as a good sized glass and when not in use may be folded up to fit one's pocketbook, taking up only a modicum of room.—Philadelphia Times.

"THE INNOCENT MURDERERS"

By Wm. Johnston and Paul West

Then, after hurriedly promising each other to say nothing of the evening's affair, they departed for home.

As Gordon lighted the lamp in his modest room, his eye fell upon an envelope on the dressing case. His heart leaped at sight of the familiar writing, and he tore the envelope open excitedly. A note enclosed read: "George:

"I have had to leave town suddenly. Make no attempt to find me and do not let them know that you were surprised at my going. It is for your sake as well as mine. Trust me and believe in me.

Yours ever,
"ERNESTA.

"Monday evening, eight o'clock."

CHAPTER EIGHT.

THE ROAD TO THE STATION.

"Gone!" muttered Gordon, as he stood gazing at the note which he held in his trembling hands. "For my sake! What can it mean? Our quarrel because I chided her for spending so much time in Hopkins' laboratory? Because I showed that I was jealous? No, it could scarcely be that." He paused and looked again at the note. Suddenly he gasped. "'For your sake!' Great God! She knows! She saw!"

The hurried thought flashed through his mind that Ernesta, at the moment of returning to the laboratory and calling Professor Hopkins' name, had discovered the presence of Gordon and his associates in the room. Perhaps even she had looked through the key-hole, and had seen them standing guard over the body of their victim. But in that case, why should she have run away? In a sudden frenzy of fear? To avoid giving evidence against them—or (he thought with a tinge of conceit), against him alone? It must be something of that sort, else why so sudden and hasty a departure, in so mysterious a manner?

"God bless her if it is as I think," said Gordon to himself. "But she shan't go if I can catch her!"

He blew out the lamp and crept silently down the stairs and out into the night, with the girl's note still clutched in his fingers.

A deep love existed for Ernesta Frost on the part of this young scholar, whose asceticism had never before permitted an affair of the heart to interfere with the prosy studiousness of his career. Almost from his first sight of Ernesta, nearly four years since, he had been forced to admit to himself a peculiar interest in the girl, so different from the feeling awakened in him by any other woman.

To-night he could see her as she was then, a fresh, tall, girlish figure, modest and beautiful, earnest and studious. He could recall the strange satisfaction he had felt when, one afternoon after the dismissal of his class in philosophy, she had remained to ask him questions concerning some point which she had not quite understood. He had walked home with her—as he had often walked with other pupils, rather than let them delay him longer in the college building, and he could remember how, when in the midst of his explanation of the subject in hand, he had suddenly looked at her and caught her surveying him with those great, lustrous blue eyes, he had averted his head with a feeling of embarrassment at her scrutiny.

Then came Albert Rassignol! Why the personality of this young student from Paris should obtrude itself upon Gordon's mental vision to-night, when he had been enabled to blot it out for months past, can be explained only by the fact that he was searching every cell of his memory for some fact to account for Ernesta's sudden disappearance, and that Rassignol's sojourn at Graydon represented a period fraught with painful recollections for the young professor in the development of his love for Ernesta.

Gordon hurried his steps as he remembered Rasignol; remembered how he had first noticed what he interpreted as an attachment between him and Ernesta; how he had found them, on more than one occasion, in Hopkins' laboratory, so deeply engrossed in some chemical problem as to be wholly unaware of his presence till he had made it known; how happy he, Gordon, had been when Rassignol, having completed the special course of studies under Hopkins, which he had come all the way from Paris to pursue, had returned to France.

By this time, Gordon remembered, his analytical mind had diagnosed his own attitude toward Ernesta as affection. The realisation of this was a shock to him, a shock such as might come to a man who had been brought up to believe that his legs were merely ornamental appendages, and suddenly discovered that they could be used for locomotion. When this shock had worn off, however, he would have been happy but for Rassignol's presence; when the Frenchman went he was divinely happy in a solitary, lonely way, for he had no courage with which to make a declaration of his passion to Ernesta.

She, however, was not wanting in that intuition, which is every woman's choicest attribute, and but for which it is doubtful if Gordon's love would ever have resulted in more than sighing and dreaming of her.

In her maidenly way Ernesta had shown the bashful young scholar that his affection was not unrequieted. Little by little she drew him out, to his intense joy. This joy, however, was coupled with disappointment that this woman, whom he regarded as the most perfect of her sex, should prove so fickle as to forget Rassignol—whom he still considered to have had her affections while he remained at Graydon. Self-satisfaction took the place of this unpleasant feeling at last, and Gordon, when he became sure that Ernesta cared for him, was supremely happy. He made his declaration finally and was accepted.

Poverty stood in the way of an immediate marriage, and though Gordon had some small property in Boston real estate, they were waiting for his position with regard to salary to be bettered before they should wed.

Their courtship and bethrothal had been a delightful period in their happy, simple way; Gordon devoting himself with more assiduity to his studies than ever in order to hasten the time of his promotion; Ernesta saving by assisting Professor Hopkins in his laboratory. This effort on her part, however, had been productive of the only quarrels or disagreements which she and Gordon had had. And these were only recent. Ernesta's growing interest in Professor Hopkins' work, her evenings spent either in the laboratory with the savant or alone in her room working out his problems after hours, had finally filled her lover with a feeling of jealousy. She had tried in vain to assure him that he was foolish; he was not so certain of his own charms as not to fear that Hopkins might have others which had attracted Ernesta. He pouted like a child, unable to bring his philosophy to aid him. Ernesta and he had had many disputes over the matter, and once, in a burst of high spirits, the girl had flung his engagement ring in Gordon's face, telling him that she did not care to have a love which doubted her so.

But this quarrel had been made up, and until within a few days of this fateful night Ernesta and Gordon had been happy, the girl extremely so, he remembered now. So, as he, hurried along the dark road, he could come to no conclusion concerning her departure from Graydon other than that she had been a witness to the occurrence in the laboratory.

"I'll find her and make her stay" he muttered, "she shall not go without knowing the truth about it. God! perhaps she thinks that I am a murderer!"

To reach Ernesta's boarding house it was necessary for Gordon to pass the hotel, which, but for a few lights, was dark for the night. A kerosene lamp on a post in the road bore the title of the little inn on its glass, and shed a few rays on the road. These fell on Gordon's face and to a man standing at the window of a room on the second floor in deep thought. The picture was so interesting as to make him leap backward in surprise.

It was Detective Sullivan, who had just reached his room after the strange affair of the diamond. He recognized Gordon as one of the four men whom he had seen with the wheelbarrow, at the college buildings and he could not help but observe, even in the dull glow of the lamp outside, the tense expression on the young scholar's white face.

"There's something serious the matter with that fellow!" exclaimed the detective, and catching up his hat, he hurried down the stairs.

When Gordon, unaware, of course, that he was being followed, reached Ernesta's house, a few rods further on, his purpose was to ring the bell and inquire for her. Not until he reached the gate did he realise what an odd thing this would be to do so late of the evening, and then he paused irresolutely. Not twenty yards behind him, dodging from one to another of the elms lining the street, was Detective Sullivan, peering from the seclusion of his tree trunk whenever he thought it was safe, retreating into the shadows at the slightest movement on Gordon's part. He heard Gordon say:

"What shall I do? Oh, what shall I do" and saw him gaze earnestly at the second window, as he stood clutching the fence.

"What's he up to? Who's he spotting?" thought the detective.

Suddenly Gordon turned and retraced his steps, passing on the other side of the tree behind which Sullivan was concealed. As he passed the detective heard him muttering again:

"Ernesta! O, my Ernesta!"

"It's Gordon!" flashed through Sullivan's mind, as he recalled the statement by the student in the drug store regarding the attachment of the young professor and the mysterious Frost girl. Gordon went rapidly down the street, and Sullivan, intent on keeping him in sight, abandoned his tree-dodgig and followed openly. There was no danger, apparently, of the pursued discovering the detective, for the young professor seemed to have but one thought, to arrive wherever he was going as soon as his steps would carry him. As for the pedestrians, it was ten o'clock, and all Graydon was tucked in at that hour.

At the foot of the main street was the railroad station, and Sullivan decided that Gordon was aiming for that.

"What's he going to the station for?" he asked himself. "The last train left at eight o'clock!" But the station was Gordon's goal, and from behind a pile of freight Sullivan was soon watching him in conversation with the night watchman, the sole occupant of the lightless place, and their words were easily distinguishable.

"Why, hello, Professor Gordon," said the watchman. "What you doin' out at such an hour?"

"Nothing,— er —nothing," replied Gordon, so plainly at a loss for what to say that Sullivan wondered at the watchman's apparent lack of suspicion. "Just taking a walk."

"Fine night, Professor," said the watchman.

"Very," said Gordon. "By the way, was there anyone—I mean, did you have any passengers on the last train out to-night?"

"The eight o'clock? No, Professor, there was only one."

"One!" Sullivan could plainly detect the excitement in Gordon's tone. "Was she—"

"Twasn't a she" laughed the watchman. "It was Dr. Whitridge; he went over to Hardwick on a case. Why, was you expectin' any body to go away?"

"No," said Gordon, "nobody." Then a pause, as though he were considering how to end the conversation. "Good-night," he said, quickly, and hurried up the street.

Sullivan had not been expecting so rapid a movement on the young professor's part. Gordon came by the pile of freight that only half concealed the detective before he could draw back into the shadow. On seeing Sullivan lurking there, he stopped and looked full at him. Unfortunately for the detective the sole street lamp within thirty yards was not more than twenty feet from him and his face could be plainly seen by the surprised Gordon, who took a long look at him. Sullivan tried to look unconcerned.

"Good evening," he said, "got a match? I was trying to get a light in here, but the wind blew out my last one."

"Wind?" said Gordon, auspiciously. The night was absolutely zephyrless. Then he went on.

Sullivan watched him out of sight and then returned to his hotel slightly crestfallen.

CHAPTER NINE.

THE BANK EPISODE.

"I am sorry, but this check will overdraw your husband's account!"

Mrs. Hopkins, standing at the window in the Graydon Bank, felt herself turn to stone. She could not move, she could not cry out. She could merely look appealingly, helplessly, dumbly, at the man behind the window.

"There is only $16.53 to his credit" said Mr. Fox, the cashier. "Only $16.53."

It was shortly after nine o'clock, Tuesday morning. Mrs. Hopkins had sent the children early to school, and, without waiting to attend to her household duties, had rushed to the bank to draw the money necessary to secure Detective Sullivan's services. She had written the check and presented it at the window, accompanying its offering with a smile that was meant to be pleasant and cordial.

She did not want anyone to guess the torture that was gnawing at her heart and had kept her sleepless through the long night. The cashier—who hoacted in many capacities in hte little bank—examined the check more carefully, Mrs. Hopkins thought, than was usual; then, instead of paying it at once, he went into the private office, where he remained several minutes. On emerging he came toward the window diffidently, apologetically, making the statement that froze every drop of blood in the woman's body. Receiving no answer, he supplemented his remark with a second. Then Mrs. Hopkins, by a superhuman effort, managed to gasp:

HEALING POWER A MARVEL

So remarkable is the healing power of Dr. Chase's Ointment that the results of a single application are often a marvel to persons who witness them for the first time. Mrs. C. Hopkins, St. George, Ont. tells how her son was cured of blood poisoning which got started in a wound received at a threshing. Relief was prompt and cure effected by three boxes.

Mrs. A. A. Brown and children spent Sunday with friends at Cordova.

TWO ARCHITECTURAL MASTERPIECES

Two of the most magnificent Pianos that have ever been made in Canada are now being displayed to interested visitors at the New Scale Williams piano warerooms. These are the New Scale Williams "Louis Grand" and "Baby Grand"

These grand pianos—with their elegance and beauty of design and finish—would be superb ornaments to any home and certainly reflect infinite credit on the master minds which created them from wood and metal. It is hardly necessary to mention the fact that the tone is fully in keeping with the appearance.

These pianos may be seen at the warerooms of the J. M. Greene Music Co., L'td., Opera House Block.

No Drinking Man Need Despair

The Neal Cure—Greatest of all Modern Discoveries—Offers a Means of Escape from the Curse of Drink. A Cure of the Drink Habit is Guaranteed in Three Days, no matter whether the Patient is a Hard and Constant Drinker, Social Tippler or goes on Occasional Spree

MANY SUCCESSFUL CURES IN TORONTO

There was wandering in the streets of Toronto lately, a homeless man, who at one time held a splendid position, but drink was his downfall. To-day his wife, a cultured woman, works out by the day endeavoring to support herself and little family. Think of it, you wives and mothers, who have homes of comfort and all that makes life worth living, what it would be to you to be deprived of these and forced to face the wash tub for an existence, as this poor wife has to do to-day?

But this home which was made a hell on earth through strong drink—as every drunkard's is—may be made into a heaven upon earth, as many have been made, as a result of the Neal Treatment. Three days only—the wonder of it—to effect a cure and make the victim of strong drink a new man physically, morally and mentally.

We undertake to guarantee to effect a cure of the Drink Habit in Three Days, no matter whether the patient is a hard and constant drinker, social tippler or goes on occasional sprees. Are you interested in a poor fellow going down, down, through the curse of drink; then bring your influence to bear on him and bring him to the Neal Institute for treatment, drunk or sober, and we will undertake to remove the awful appetite for strong drink and deliver him to you a new man.

Here is an opportunity for REFORMATION SOCIETIES for INEBRIATES or any institution for the reformation of the drunkard, to test our ability to change the hard drinker into a new man physically and mentally in THREE DAYS' treatment.

We invite these Societies or any institution interested in the poor drunkard and the problem of dealing with him to send us for treatment any victim of the drink habit, it makes no difference how much enslaved, and we guarantee to effect a cure in each and every case. Can you spend your money to better advantage or in a way that will bring in greater returns than in redeeming these victims of strong drink and giving back to their families kind fathers, brothers, husbands and to the country most desirable citizens?

PETERBOROUGH SATURDAY FEBRUARY 4 1911

SITUATION IS SERIOUS

Insurgents in Mexico Look to Have the Upper Hand—Federals Defence at Juarez Looks Like a Bluff.

MAY FIGHT TO-DAY

Special wire to The Examiner:

EL PASO, TEXAS, FEB. 4.—At daybreak the expected reinforcements for federal troops in Juarez had not arrived and the situation looks bad for the defending forces. The insurrecto soldiers in the mountains nearby are a strong force, well trained, armed with long toms and machine guns, and well able to withstand a long battle. Refugees continue flocking over the border and it is almost quite probable that action will begin this morning. The Federal troops are not strong enough to put up anything but bluff at defence. The situation is critical for President Diaz's regime.

ELECTED OFFICERS

Boys' Club of Knox Church Will Now be Known as the Junior Brotherhood

The Boys' Club of Knox Church held their regular meeting last night. The Senior Brotherhood of St. Andrew and St. Phillip took charge of the meeting and initiated the Club into the Junior Brotherhood. In future the Club will be known as the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew and St. Phillip of Knox Church.

Next followed the election of officers, which were as follows:

Superintendent—W. G. Hall.
Asst.-Supt.—Wm. Carther.
President—Wm. Shepherd.
Vice-Pres.—Harold Snelgrove.
Secretary—C. Coats.
Treasurer—Robt. Thompson.
President of Missionary Committee—S. Preston.

At the close of the business portion of the meeting the Senior members of the Brotherhood gave the Junior members a banquet. The remainder of the evening was spent in a very enjoyable manner.

DON'T BE DECEIVED

Newbro's Herpicide is the Only Original Remedy

Just because you happen to see or hear the statement somewhere that another preparation will kill the dandruff germ, stop falling hair and is just as good as Herpicide, don't be fooled and allow yourself to be swindled out of your money.

You want Newbro's Herpicide, the remedy that has been tried, has stood the test of time and now has more satisfied users than all other similar preparations combined. An attempt to sell you something else is merely another effort to profit from the good name established by the only genuine dandruff germ destroyer.

Herpicide kills the dandruff germ and prevents falling hair. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

It may be claimed that other hair remedies will do the same things, but Herpicide really does them. Its years of success prove this.

Send 10c. in postage or silver for sample and booklet to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich.

All druggists sell Newbro's Herpicide. Applications may be obtained at good barber shops. McDermid and Jury are special agents for Peterborough. One dollar size bottles are guaranteed.

NEW TRUSTEES

Selected by the Mark Street Methodist Church

A meeting of the Trustee Board of Mark street Methodist church was held last night. Two new officers were elected to the Trustee Board. They were Dr. Middleton and Mr. Sheridan. It is understood that Rev. Mr. Craig, of Foxboro, has accepted a call to Mark street, his duties to commence in June.

TO-DAY'S MARKET

The offerings on the market this morning were light. The snow storm last night no doubt deterred a great many from coming in that would otherwise have done so. The ruling prices for to-day were as follows:

Hay—$13 and $14 per ton.
Baled hay—$14 and $15 per ton.
Potatoes—85c.
Butter—25c.
Eggs—30c.
Chickens—$1.25 and $1.50 per pair.
Farmers' hides—6 1-2c.
Butchers' hides—7 1-2 c.
Beef—8c. and 10c.
Pork—11c. and 13c.
Dressed hogs—$9.50
Live hogs—$7 per cwt.

SPECIAL TRAIN FOR MONDAY'S BIG GAME

Hockey Club Will Run an Excursion to Belleville to Give Fans a Chance of Seeing the Play-off---Train Will Leave G. T. R. Station at 4:30 p.m.

The executive of the Peterborough Hockey Club decided this morning to run a special to Belleville on Monday night for the play-off between Trenton and Peterborough for the championship of this district of the intermediate O. H. A. No time was lost in making arrangements with the Grand Trunk, and it is likely that a big crowd of fans will accompany the boys to the Bay of Quinte city to see the game. The special train will leave the Grand Trunk station at 4.30 o'clock sharp and will leave Belleville on the return trip immediately after the game. Belleville is only twelve miles away from Trenton and the Eastern town will send its whole population over for the game. It is therefore desirable that Peterborough should have as many rooters as possible as the moral support of a large circle sometimes has a considerable effect. The Peterborough team has shown itself worthy of every possible support and it is hoped that a big squad will make the trip with them on Monday. It should be a grand game o fhockey and realizing that, they must win this game to remain in the O.H.A. running. The Speed Boys are determined to give Trenton an awful argument for the honours. The round trip fare will be $1.75 for adults and half price for children. Remember the time, 4.30 o'clock Monday.

SOME NOTES ABOUT PETERBOROUGH'S LIBRARY

The Needless Soiling of Volumes From the Library Is Something That Should be Carefully Avoided

A LITERARY CHAT

It has been already stated in one or two previous issues that the Library Board, taking as one of its cardinal principles, the view that the most important essential for the proper working of the Library, is to keep its aims well in the public eye, intends through the kind co-operation of the press, to place before Peterborough readers, week by week, notes regarding library work as well as hints to old and young alike as to the nature of the books now or hereafter to be placed on the public library shelves. The object of this is easily made patent to everyone. In the first place, it has been noticed that where the public are allowed free access to the shelves, there are very few indeed who give themselves time to take more than a cursory glance at the books in the various departments. Volume after volume is passed by, either on account of the illegibility of its title or because, though legible enough, the title does not appeal to one's taste. Now, one thing is absolutely certain, and that is that there is usually no more deceptive thing in this world than a book title. One can glance along a whole shelf, and, in an array of, say, fifty books, find at least 30 per cent. of titles that convey far from a clear index of the nature of the contents between their covers. It is the knowledge of this latter fact that has proved a vexation to novelists and writers of all descriptions. Many of them have asserted that it is easier to write a whole volume than to choose a title. Writers of the present time have sought out a new device for catching the eye of the public, and in place of giving sober nomenclature to their works, have embellished them with the most outlandish and startling ones. It must not be taken, however, as a fair criterion of the merit of an author's work that the more successful he is in imposing a sensational title on the public the greater will be the pleasure he will cause his readers. Very often the exact opposite is the case and the only true rule to go by therefore, is not to take a book on trust, but to look through the pages first and discover if its interior bears out the promise given by its exterior. We all know that meat quickly cooked presents a very palatable appearance to the eye but that when the carving knife gets to work it discloses a very raw and uninviting condition of affairs near the bone. The same is true of books. This is a period of quick lunch literature, suited to the hurry and bustle of the time, but it is none the less a literature that has to be carefully and systematically watched, not only by librarians, but by the patrons of every library. The under-done pabulum offered by our literary chefs is amazing in its immensity and much of it is ptomaine-like to man's moral digestion.

Another point that may not be out of place in this chat is in connection with the needless soiling of volumes. One of the great griefs of librarians is that so many volumes come to an early and inglorious end, at the hands of the thumb-licker and the leaf-creaser. Another form of book slaughter is to be found in the work of the amateur annonator who disfigures leaf upon leaf with the most senseless and bizarre remarks on the subject matter of the volume. We all know him, as, like the grass of the field, he is indigenous to every known and inhabited country.

The Early History Of Durham And Northumberland

Lieut.-Col. Neil F. MacNaughton, County Clerk and Treasurer of Northumberland and Durham, gave an address of a highly interesting nature to the members of the Counties' Council at the recent sitting at Cobourg. Col. McNaughton reviewed in a very able manner the municipal history of the two counties and also touched upon the early history of the Newcastle district, of which the County of Peterborough formed part. He pointed out that the Council of the District of Newcastle first met on Tuesday, Feb. 8, 1842, and consisted of eighteen members, Mr. Walter Boswell being the first Warden and was appointed under Royal Warrant. Morgan Jellett was appointed District Clerk Feb. 9, 1842, and continued in office until the termination of this Council on Jan. 10, 1850.

The Municipal Council of the United Counties of Northumberland and Durham was formed on Jan. 28, 1850, when Mr. Morgan Jellett was appointed County Clerk which office was held until his death in 1856. Mr. E. A. MacNachtan was appointed County Clerk on June 24, 1863, and held office until his death on July 22, 1891. The offices of Clerk and Treasurer were united in 1873. Mr. Neil F. MacNachtan was appointed County Clerk and Treasurer on July 30, 1891, and has been continuously in these offices since.

Hon. Zaccheus Burnham was appointed Treasurer of the District Council in 1842 and continued until termination of said Council in January, 1850. He was appointed County Treasurer Feb. 9, 1843, and continued until his death in 1852. Hon. Asa A. Burnham was appointed County Treasurer on Jan. 28, 1852, and occupied the office up to his death, May 10, 1873.

A peculiarity worthy of note is that the offices of Clerk and Treasurer have been held by only two families; as Clerk by Jellett and MacNachtan, and as Treasurer by Burnham and MacNachtan.

The old Newcastle District comprised the four counties — Victoria, Peterborough, Northumberland and Durham. In 1810 the records state that the population of the district was only 2,316 souls—it is now considerably over 100,000! Assessed value of property in 1810 was $175,000. These two counties are now assessed for over $26,500,250.

In 1810 there were no roads, settlers passing from one clearing to another by a path along the lake shore. In 1857 it was claimed that these two counties had the greatest number of gravel roads of any counties in the then province of Upper Canada. Instead of the canoes or batteaux of 1810 we have transportation by steamers, railways and soon expect trolley lines.

In 1857 Counties' Clerk received a salary of $750.00; Treasurer $1,000 per annum; Auditors $25 each; engineers $7.50 a day when on county duty. The messenger received $2.50 a day during sessions of Council.

In 1810 Darlington and Clarke had together 181 of a population of whom only 28 were assessed. In 1825 Darlington was 475, and Clarke 307. In 1830 Darlington 786, Clarke 577. In 1835 Darlington's population was 1,-865, Clarke's 1035, Cavan's 2,575, Hope's, 2,789, Manvers' 154. In 1851 the population had increased greatly. Darlington 8,005, Clarke 6,190, Hope 5,299, Hamilton 5,008, Haldimand 4,-634, Cramahe 2,993, Brighton 3,725, Murray 3,725, Cartwright 1,756, Manvers 2,568, Cavan 4,438, South Monaghan 1,051, Alwick 836, Percy 2,605, Seymour 2,781. Cobourg 3,871, Port Hope 2,476, Bowmanville's population is not given but 460 persons were assessed.

STATESMAN SHOT DEAD

MAY CAUSE TROUBLE

Special to The Examiner:

TEHERAN, PERSIA, FEB. 4.—An assassination which may lead to grave dissension in Persia and serious trouble among the European powers, took place this morning when San Ei Dowleh, the minister of finance, was shot dead, returning home from a meeting of Parliament, by two Armenians, who escaped. There is great excitement. Dowleh was Persia's only moderate statesman.

STRIKERS GIVE IN

Examiner Special:

CHICAGO, ILL., FEB. 4. — After twenty two weeks of idleness, several thousand garment workers applied for return to work to-day, admitting defeat to their cause. They have lost three million dollars in wages, and the employers have lost ten millions in business as a result of the troubles.

DON'T BE BALD

Nearly Anyone May Secure a Splendid Growth of Hair

We have a remedy that has a record of growing hair and curing baldness in 93 out of every 100 cases where used according to directions for a reasonable length of time. That may seem like a strong statement—it is, and we mean it to be, and no one should doubt it until they have put our claims to an actual test.

We are so certain Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will cure dandruff, prevent baldness, stimulate the scalp and hair roots, stop failing hair and grow new hair, that we personally give our positive guarantee to refund every penny paid us for it in every instance where it does not give entire satisfaction to the user.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is as pleasant to use as clear spring water. It is delightfully perfumed, and does not grease or gum the hair. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. With our guarantee back of it, you certainly take no risk. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets.

FINE LECTURE

The regular meeting of St. Luke's A.Y.P.A. was held last night. In the absence of the president, Mr. A. Kingdon acted as chairman. After devotional exercises business was transacted. Two silver badges of the A. Y.P.A. were presented by the Association for obtaining the most new members, Miss Elsie Dawson and Miss Margaret Pakenham were the winners and were presented with the badges, Rev. C. H. Carpenter making the presentation. A special feature of the meeting was a lecture illustrated by limelight views, given by Rev. C. H. Carpenter, M.A., on New Foundland. The lecture was very descriptive of the fishing industries, etc. and was greatly enjoyed. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Carpenter.

The singing of the national anthem brought the meeting to a close.

WHAT IS VINOL?

It Represents Twenty Years' Work of Two Eminent Chemists

After twenty years of study two eminent French chemists discovered a method by which the alkaloids or medicinal elements of the cod's liver might be separated from the useless oil or grease, retaining all the good of cod liver oil and dispensing with the bad, as the oil has no medicinal value. These medicinal elements blended with tonic iron and a mild medicinal wine—make Vinol.

Vinol is not a secret medicine, as its ingredients are printed on every bottle, and in all cases where the healing, strengthening influence of cod liver oil is needed, Vinol will give better results, for it contains all the curative medicinal properties of cod liver oil, but without the oil, and it is easily assimilated and acceptable to the weakest stomach.

For all run-down, weakened conditions, and to cure chronic coughs, colds and bronchial troubles, Vinol is unexcelled. We sell it always with the understanding that if it does not do all we claim for it, we will refund the money paid us for it. McDermid and Jury, druggists, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

WAS IN NEW YORK THE DAY OF THE EXPLOSION

Mr. Will Cochrane, of the Quaker Oats Company's Staff, Was Entering the Door of the Company's New York Building When the Shock Came, Sending a Shower of Glass Around Him.

Mr. Will Cochrane, the travelling representative of the Quaker Oats Company, Peterborough, came in rather close and exciting touch with the late tremendous dynamite explosion in New York. He was just entering the New York office of the Company when a literal shower of broken glass, hurled skyward by the explosion, rained upon the street and pavement around him, though the scene of the explosion was miles away He says it is impossible to describe the momentary scene of panic that followed the explosion which at the time no one could understand. The Cochrane family seems to be fated to have dynamite explosion experiences at the entrance doors of houses. At the time of the great dynamite explosion in Douro, in which two men and a team of horses were literally annihilated — swept out of sight and ken—Mr. Geo. Cochrane, was just coming out of his residence in Lakefield, passing through the doorway. At that moment the explosion came and, though it was two miles distant, the force of the concussion drove him back inside the house a considerable distance.

SENSATIONAL PLEA MADE AGAINST RECIPROCITY

MONTREAL, FEB. 4. — Under the caption "An appeal to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, one man who can save Canada," the Star comes out to-day with a sensational plea against reciprocity, covering the whole front page. It describes the agreement as a shrewdly framed offer of the American government and as cunning a trap as was ever laid for Canada to fall into. The article in conclusion says that Sir Wilfrid has the ball at his feet. The Canadian people have never watched him so eagerly. It is not a business deal, but the fate of the nation. In the seat of Sir John A. Macdonald, with the eyes of empire builders of history upon him, he is deciding for or against annexation of Canada to the American union.

Athletic Contests In The Y.M.C.A. Gymnasium

There were some big surprises in the Collegiate class athletic contest yesterday afternoon, the event being the handicap high jump, and, after a most exciting contest, Harold Matthews, with a handicap of 6 inches, carried off the bacon with a jump of 5 ft. 3 in. D. Loucks, with a handicap of 10 inches, was second, with 5 ft. 2 in. H. Taylor was next, with a handicap of 12 inches, his jump being 5 ft. 1 in. H. Hill made 5 feet. A. Gilbert, from scratch, and C. Bartlett with 1 in. handicap tied at 4 ft. 11 in.

These events will be continued until the annual Hexathlon contests come off for the Canadian championship, which will be held some time in March. The Hexathlon contests are held every year, and are composed of the following events: Running high jump, standing broad jump, fence vault, shot put, 60 and 220 yard potato race.

Each Association competes on its own floor and the total score of the three best men in each event is sent to headquarters in Toronto who, in turn, issue a complete report of each Association who has taken part, so that the smaller Associations have an equal chance. The Associations are divided into Class A. and Class B. The class A Associations are composed of Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto Central; Toronto West End, Hamilton, London, Winnipeg. All the other associations are in Class B. There are two cups for each class —one for boys and one for men. And the local Association is going to leave no stone unturned in their effort to land one or both of the class B. cups.

The Captains of the different teams in the new bowling competition are requested to consult the schedule, and see that their men turn out so that there will be as few delays as possible. Handsome prizes will be given for this competition, which opens on Monday evening, when the Mivvies and Lancashire trio meet in the opening game.

The Y.M.C.A. Meeting At The Crystal Sunday

The subject for the address on Sunday night in the Crystal Theatre will be "Choose Ye This Day Whom Ye Will Serve." These addresses are unique in that they are very brief and to the point. There is no doubt in the mind of the hearers as to the purpose of the address. After the singing has taken up its share of the time there is very little time for an address and the men do not care to hear a long address either so what is said must be said in the very briefest possible time. There is no room for generalities. The object of these meetings is to win men to Jesus Christ, and the address has this as its specific object. The St. James' Quartette has kindly consented to sing, and will be heard with pleasure by those who attend. They will sing twice during the service. The service commences at 8.30 sharp. The Y. M. C. A. Orchestra will be out in full force to help with the singing. Drop in and help sing some of Alexander's latest hymns. The hymn "He will hold me fast" has become exceedingly popular and will be sung Sunday night.

The story of Lazarus will be the theme for study on Sunday morning at the Bible Study Club. The Club meets at 9.30 in the parlour. The Boys' Class meets at the same hour in the Boys' rooms.

The Gymnasium Men's Bible Class will meet in the parlours at 4.15 in the afternoon. Mr. Thompson is teaching "The principles of Jesus." This is a most important study.

All these classes in the Y. M. C. A. are open to any man who cares to come, regardless of his creed or station in life. He certainly need not be a member of the Y. M. C. A.

"Our World In Space" Will Be Lecture Subject

The Royal Astronmical Society of the Peterborough Centre will hold a meeting on Tuesday evening in the physical laboratory of the Collegiate Institute, Mr. J. R. Collins of Toronto, will deliver a lecture on "Our World in Space."

Mr. Collins is a man of much experience and knowledge, and the lecture will, undoubtedly, prove interesting, especially as it is to be illustrated. The meeting will open at 8 o'clock sharp. No charge will be made for admittance, and the public are cordially invited.

Number Of Rooters Will Be Here With Frontenacs

To-night at 9.45 the Frontenacs will hold their last team practice, before the Peterborough game. It is possible that the Cadets will be out to work and with the boys Mgr Bonter, of the rink, arranged this extra practice for the locals. Every player should be out in uniform to-night.

The Frontenac hockey team will leave for Peterborough on Tuesday next over the Canadian Pacific Railway, leaving here at 12 noon, and reaching Peterborough at 4.30 p. m. Returning the team will have a special Pullman sleeper leaving Peterborough at midnight, reaching Kingston at 8.00 o'clock Wednesday morning. Single fare for the round trip will be in force, and a number of fans expect to go with the champions —Kingston Standard.

Annual Financial Statement of the Water Commissioners Was Presented By the Secretary-Treasurer Last Night

FIGURES FOR YEAR

At a meeting of the Water Commissioners last night the Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. S. R. Armstrong presented the annual financial statement. His report was, in part, as follows:

Gentlemen,—I herewith submit the financial statements of the Waterworks Department for the year 1910: During the year there was expended in laying mains and setting hydrants $9,508.79, and in laying services $3,-056.57, a total of $12,565.36 expended on ordinary construction work.

There was also expended on the construction of the new dam, pumping station and pumping machinery, after deducting certain receipts, $42,-827.51.

A balance of $9,705.70, which was at the credit of Profit and Loss Account on January 1st, 1910, has been transferred to the Contingent Fund. Debentures for $20,000.00 were issued against the Contingent Fund, to provide for extensions to the works, and the Fund now amounts to $23,355.33.

The net water rates, including the special frontage rates, amounted to $41,373.89. The Expense Accounts, including $17,530.10 paid to the City to meet interest on debentures, and $9,013.63 for Sinking Fund, and amount written off tools and plant for depreciation, amounted to $39,-563.86, showing a profit on the operation of the works for the year of $1,810.13, and to this was added $220.00, received as premium on debentures, making $2030.13, the amount at the credit of Profit and Loss Account.

Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) S. R. ARMSTRONG,
Secretary-Treasurer.

The detailed financial statement will be published in Monday's Examiner.

TRIED TO SUICIDE TEN TIMES

NEWPORT, KY., FEB. 1.—Ten unsuccessful attempts to kill themselves have convinced Mrs. Mary Salzman and her sister, Miss Elizabeth Ellswick, of this city, that it cannot be done with safety, and they have announced their intention of retiring from the suicide field. Mrs. Salzman has tried to anticipate the grim reaper on three different occasions, while her sister has seven attempts at self-destruction to her credit. Their determination to stick around a little longer will be a hard blow to the druggists, who have been furnishing them with large quantities of poison, and doctors, who have obtained fat fees for pumping them out every week or so.

There are only three doctors in the town, and it got so that every time their horses were turned out to graze they galloped to the Salzman homestead. The editors of the local paper have been running the suicide stories in serial form. The last attempt came when Mrs. Salzman helped herself to a full portion of arsenic.

She listened intently for the death rattle, and when it failed to materialize the two sisters got disgusted and quit the fascinating game.

Not content with taking all the poison in town the sisters have tried every known way of giving the undertaker a job. On three occasions they have jumped in the Ohio River, only to find that their knowledge of swimming was a serious handicap. Another time Mrs. Salzman laid her head on the Baltimore & Ohio rails. She got hungry before a train came along and changed her mind and went to a restaurant. In their desperation the sisters have eaten breakfast foods and read magazine poetry, but it was no use.

"We feel that we are bound to live, no matter how much we may try to die," said Miss Ellswick. "Therefore, we have made up our minds to live and expose the poison trust. We can prove that most of their porducts are adulterated."

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY, 4, 1911

NO DANGER HERE.

Some sensitive persons assume to think that if the United States and Canada should exchange their respective natural products freely that therefore the two countries must become one, politically. Free trade has intensified and individualized British political character and there's not the slightest danger that free trade in a few articles between Canada and our neighbours will lead to any political fusion. We have had alarmists declare that the large number of immigrants entering the northwest of Canada would produce a population that would introduce United States ideas, modes of thought and sentiment, that would tend to annexation. There is no fear of that. The contrary is to be expected. Mr. J. McK. Dickson, the immigration commissioner of Alberta, says "the strongest opponents of annexation are the American settlers in Canada"; and he adds that "the number of United States' incomers who do not become naturalized Canadian citizen is less than five per cent. They are glad to live in a country where law is law twenty-four hours every day."

A GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY.

One of the many good features of the Canadian Government Annuities Act which should commend it to wage earners, and others with small or uncertain incomes, is the fact that if the purchaser is obliged for any reason to discontinue his regular payments there is no fine, no lapse, and no forfeiture. Whatever money he pays in will remain with the Government at 4 per cent. interest until the time when the Annuity period is due, and he will then receive such Annuity as the payments he has made with accrued interest will purchase. If the amount paid is found not to be sufficient to purchase an Annuity of $50, which is the smallest amount that can be purchased under the Act, all the money received with 3 per cent. compound interest will be returned to the purchaser. The system is most elastic, and the payments may be resumed at any time, and the arrears made up by a lump sum payment, or by increased payments over a number of years, in order that the Annuity originally aimed at may be secured.

Further particulars of this most provident scheme may be had upon application to any Postmaster, or by writing to the Superintendent of Government Annuities, Ottawa, postage free.

CONSERVATION OF OUR FISHERIES.

The air is full of conservation of our natural resources and not the least important are our fishing interests, whose value is about thirty millions per year, a figure that, with proper protection, involving conservation, can be very greatly increased. At present about seventeen million is invested in fishing plant, nets, trawls, ships, etc. We have been to a good deal of trouble and expense to protect our eastern coast fisheries. The settlement of fishery questions, so largely in Canadian favour with the possible free admission of Canada's fish into the United States markets will give a great impetus to an important industry. The coast fisheries of Canada as well as the interior fisheries of Canada are held to be the greatest in the world and thus well worth looking after and conserving. The greatest output of fish has been and is, on the Pacific coast, an output which has been greatly kept down by the poaching of "American" citizens. Heretofore we have had inadequate protection; the ships employed being too slow and small to cope successfully with the predatory element. But with the presence of Canadian cruisers in western waters, Canada's fishing interests will be greatly promoted by improved protection. Those who oppose a Canadian naval force should remember that it is justified very largely by the protection of an industry worth thirty millions a year, which with proper fostering may be doubled in value. It is worth while to spend two or three millions a year to protect so valuable a Canadian industry, not to speak of other considerations that justify Canada's providing for the protection of her own coasts and interests, in connection with strengthening the defence of the Empire. When we remember, besides, that the building of our own navy in Canada will represent a new industry, and tend to revive and introduce commercial ship building, we cannot avoid the conclusion that the establishment of a navy was a duty Canada owed to herself and the empire.

A SERIOUS SUBJECT OF JEST.

The most drastic marriage bill ever presented to any legislature has been drawn for presentation to the Colorado Assembly, and it has the support of the four women members of the legislature. It provides for physical examination, and requires a clean bill of health before entering into the marriage state. It denies the right of marriage to persons afflicted with tuberculosis or other constitutional communicable diseases. Confirmed drunkards and those who are users of drugs are also barred, as well as those engaged in infamous callings. Such proposed legislation will provoke merriment no doubt; for the dividing line between jest and earnest, in matters of the heart is very narrow. But a very serious issue is involved. The character of the population of a country, in the matter of vitality, bodily strength, health and mental and moral conditions, depends upon the character in these regards of the fathers and mothers of our citizens. At present there is no marriage test except age and the financial ability to procure a license and fee a parson. No test of qualification such as applies specifically or incidentally to entrance upon professional, educational, industrial, commercial and other enterprises or relations is applied to candidates for matrimony. The physically and mentally unfit, the tainted with constitutional diseases like tuberculosis, scrofula or with the heredity of insanity, are permitted to marry without let or hindrance, so far as considerations arising out of the physical characteristics are concerned. The marriage of persons of weak intellect is sure to generate a crop of imbeciles and idiots, a menace to society and a burden on its care. There is no means provided to protect society, and the state in this regard. A rigid physical test is required of persons entering the army—of persons, theoretically designed to destroy human life. Yet in the far more serious warfare of matrimony there is no test of qualification to enter a state that is divinely designed to perpetuate human life. Of course the legislation proposed in the Colorado Legislature will be laughed out of court. But, seriously, if the sins of the fathers (that is the physical constitutional tendencies to tuberculosis, scrofula, insanity, epilepsy, idiocy, are to be visited upon their children to the third and fourth generation, marriage or inter-marriage between such persons is plainly hostile to the interests of society and the state, and would in their interests be justifiably prevented.

ONTARIO'S FINANCES.

Hon. Mr. Matheson, Provincial Treasurer, in making his budget speech was eloquent in praise of the financial condition of the province, but he is himself responsible for setting a standard, which applied to his late budget speech, completely dislocated his logic and weakened his boast. When Mr. Matheson took office five years ago, he was most emphatic in condemning the extravagance of the Ross Government, which had committed the crime of increasing the financial expenditure $500,000 dollars in the short course of five years, an alarming average increase of $100,000 per year. When Mr. Matheson on taking office so bitterly condemned this extravagant and wasteful expenditure the expenditure was five millions a year. To-day—five years later — the expenditure is ten million dollars; that is, since the Whitney government came into power the expenditure has doubled. Under Conservative rule it has increased at the rate of a million dollars per year. The recklessly extravagant Ross government increased the expenditure at the rate of $100,000 per year, but the more progressive Whitney government has increased it at the rate of $1,000,000 per year. At the rate of advance of the provincial expenditure under the Ross government it would have taken nearly fifty years to double the annual outlay of the province, but the Whitney government, has been able to turn the trick —to double the provincial housekeeping bill—in the short space of five years. In another way in his budget speech of Thursday Hon. Mr. Matheson condemned himself. When he was in opposition he was forever condemning the inclusion of the revenue from timber assets in current expenditure. Yet in his efforts to work out a little toy surplus of $3,400, he puts into current revenue the receipts from timber and provincial lands. Judged by his own standard and taking such receipts as capital revenue, Mr. Matheson has succeeded in working out a deficit on current accounts of $500,000. There are other features of the financial situation of the province that will stand analysis, but to avoid captious criticism, Mr. Matheson's criticism of himself—judgment by his own standard — will for the moment suffice.

THE CANADA LIFE'S SIXTY-FOURTH REPORT

The Record of a Most Successful Year

The payments to policy holders of over $4,789,000.00 in a single year by any company is an item that should attract more than passing attention. Yet this immense sum was paid to policy holders in 1910 by the Canada Life Assurance Company and the report, which is printed into-day's issue, states that this amount exceeds by more than one and a half millions of dollars the payments made during any previous year in the Company's history. The profits alone which were allotted to policyholders last year amounted to more than $2,000,000.00.

The assets of the company have been steadily increasing until they now stand at $40,820,856, having more than doubled within the past twelve years, and in the past five years have been increasing at the rate of over $2,000,000 yearly.

The new business paid for was $10,-838,384.40, bringing the total business in force up to $128,274,973.00.

The interest earnings for the year were greatly increased, the mortality rate was lower than expectation and the expense ratio shows a continued decrease. Such gains as these indicate that great care is taken in conducting the business of the Company, and safeguarding the interests of policy holders. As a direct result of this the surplus of $1,233,163.00 earned in 1910 was the greatest in the Company's history.

The report shows that the Canada Life is making substantial and satisfactory progress.

DELIGHTFUL DANCE HELD BY COLLEGIATE RUGBY CLUB

A most successful and enjoyable dance was held under the auspices of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute Rugby Club in the Conservatory of Music Hall last night. There was a large attendance, the dancers being augmented later in the evening by several of the hockey club, including Messrs. Chas. Ray, Leo Derocher, Fred Denison and Percy Bond. Delightful music was furnished by Musgrave, of Toronto. The stewards were Messrs. C. J. Ray, W. T. Gibson, R. A. Dixon and J. A. Harstone. The following ladies acted as patronesses: Mrs. W. H. Hill, Mrs. L. M. Hayes, Mrs. J. T. Harvey, Mrs. W. A. Sanderson and Mrs. T. H. O'Denne.

The Story Of A Trip Abroad

By Miss E. M. Shea, of Deare

prepared for.. You are yourself in a strange land and they are for the most part your countrymen. We visit St. Paul's outside the walls. The interior is very imposing, for its richness of marbles and valuable artistic paintings by renowned artists representing facts inherent of St. Paul's life. The sumptuous altars are incrusted with precious stones. When earthly Rome shines so gloriously through her monuments what indeed shall be the perfection of a heavenly Jerusalem? Its inexplicable solemnity and beauty has quite bewitched me, and to the latest hour of my life I shall remember Rome. From here we go to Florence.

Beautiful Florence, the home of Dante and Michael Agelo, its great cathedral and baptistry, with its famous bronze doors, called by Michael Angelo the gates of paradise, because the art with which it was imagined and executed by Lorenzo Ghiberti is truliy remarkable. It is divided into ten parts, that represent some events of the Bible history. Its celebrated picture galleries are among the finest in the world. We visit St. Laurance Chapel of Princes. It was build by Ferdenando T. Destine to receive the sepulchre o four Saviour, which he hoped to rescue from the infidels, but his plan was not realized. And Cosimo II placed there the tombs of his family. The chapel is revested by hard stone and precious marble. Few cities like Florence can offer a walk which may be compared to the 'Viale dei Colli,' traced and executed by Engineer Peggi. It begins with Roman gate and by tortuous paths moves on up the hill bordering the city from west to south. It is a continuous suite of gardens, rich with trees, flowers and fountains. The view that we have always before us is wonderful.

We visit Michael' Angelo's great square Here is a gigantic statue from the Michael famous David, and at its base are bronze figures, representing the day, the night, the aurora and the twlight. Here we enjoy a fine view of Florence and Apennines and admire the famous city and its beautiful monuments. With regret we leave this beautiful city, to continue our journey.

Venice, the Queen of the Adriatic, a mighty port, which has grown up on about one hundred little islands, away out in the sea. There are thousands of buildings, apparently resting in the water. There is not a horse, or carriage, or a cart, or a cow, not even a little donkey, in the whole city; but a railroad has been built, which connects it with the main land. The streets are generally back of the houses. There are narrow stone pavements bordering the canals, and are for foot passengers only. They wind in and out, crossing the canals by bridges so arched that the boats can pass under them. On arriving in the city we entered a gondola, which was waiting at the station to take us to our hotel on the Grand Canal. Along this wonderful waterway, wider than one of the boulevards, rise the palaces of those great old families, whose names are written on the golden book of the Republic. We float under the parlour windows of magnificent houses, and the music of the piano comes down to us. Families are sitting out on the balconies, chatting and enjoying the air. We move among crafts, large and small a pleasure party rowing towards us. We hear the soft music of a guitar. The houses rise abruptly from the canals, and we step right from our gondola on the marble steps of our hotel and go up into wide halls floored with mossic, and its walls and ceilings covered with paintings, so that the angels and cupids are looking down upon us from above.

We are delighted with Milan. It is situated in the heart of a rich plain, in Lombardy. It has fine buildings of marble, as well as large stores, broad streets and beautiful parks. Its people are good-looking, and are proud of their city and especially of their cathedral, which is one of the most beautiful in the world. The Milan Cathedral is a most beautiful example of Gothic architecture, built of the purest white marble; 4,500 statues ornament the exterior. In the crypt of the chapel the walls and ceilings are of silver repousse work, magnificently designed. Here reposes the body of St. Charles Borromo, clothed in full episcopal vestments. The church of Santa Maria delle Grazie, contains the famous 'Last Supper' by Da Vinci. We drive through the parks and afterwards to its strange cemetery, where many of the monuments are statues representing the dead, as they look while alive. We spent some time in the shops admiring the fine silks and velvets, and the silver and gold filigree work. The chief business of Italy is farming. There are rich valleys on both sides of the Apennines, and many plains, upon which great numbers of cattle, sheep, goats, and donkeys are pasturing. Their vineyards produce grapes abundantly that it ranks next to France as a chief producing wine country of the world, and there are orchards of olives, oranges and lemons, in almost all parts of the peninsula. The Italian country people are very good looking, the most of them having dark hair, and eyes, and dark rosy faces. Many of them carry on some kind of work in their homes. They are very artistic. The men do beautiful carving and painting. The women knit, spin

A GRAND OLD CHOIR.

Some sang for nothing and some for hire;
Some were thin and some were fat,
Some dressed well; some, more than that;
Some sang true and some sang flat;
Crotchets, quavers, high and low,
Sometimes fast and sometimes slow.
They wail a tune, nobody knows,
To a grand old hymn with a grand old air;
And a mute congregation grin and bear.

The congregation drag behind,
They scowl and growl along each line,
And mumble the words of a hymn divine;
A bushel is forced upon their light—
They cannot give their widows' mite;
E'en prayer and sermon seem under a blight
Of a grand old choir, so thoughtless and vain,
That it sets a tune full of groans and pain.

A grand old choir with ability fraught,
Displaying knowledge as any choir ought,
In glorious anthem, full of praise—
Tenor, solo, soprano, bass
Blending in harmonious maze;
Thrilling solo, complex duet,
Restful trio, grand quartette,
Audience awed in profound respect
A grand old choir, with accomplishments shown,
Has no need to murder the hymn well known.

A toothless tenor, strong and clear,
A sweet soprano from mother dear,
A mellow bass from hoary beard,
The tiny tots their voices raise.
The boys and girls don't stare and gaze—
All join in honest, heartfelt praise,
The grand old audience, grand old choir
Blending in harmony strong and clear.

—Peter Maxwell.

WHEN THE ODDS ARE AGAINST YOU

You Can Depend on Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine to Help You, If You Get the Genuine

What a fight goes on during the winter season against coughs and colds. The children are careless about keeping dry and warm, and the parents are worried to hear them cough.

So well-known is this medicine and so universally used that we need scarcely tell you of its merits. But we do want to warn you against imitations and substitutes.

Once you know that there are at least four imitations of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine on the market, you are not likely to let any dealer talk you into accepting anything but the genuine, on each bottle of which are the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book Author.

Imitations are sold on the reputation of this great medicine, and not on their own merits, or why should they not have a name of their own.

With the genuine Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine you can readily overcome croup, bronchitis, whooping cough, throat irritation and the most serious coughs and colds. 25 cents a bottle; family size, 60 cents, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

W.C.T.U. ITEMS OF INTEREST

The matter in this Department is supplied by the Peterborough Branch of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, which has arranged for its publication.

"Be strong;
We are not here to play—to dream—to drift;
We have hard work to do and loads to lift;
Shun not the struggle—face it, 'tis God's gift—
Be strong.
"Say not the days are evil—who's to blame?
And fold the hands and acquiesce. O shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely in God's name
Be strong.
It matters not how deep entrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day how long;
Faint not, fight on! To-morrow comes the song,
Be strong."

THE "DEPARTMENT OF PRISON REFORM AND POLICE" AS DEMONSTRATED BY CHIEF KOHLER

The W. C. T. U. as an organization has not merely kept abreast of the times, but has from its inception moulded public opinion and led in the realm of moral reform. While the world is just beginning to yawn and rub its eyes over a hazy conception of prison reform, the W. C. T. U., through its "Prison Reform," "Prison Gate Missions," and kindred departments of work, has for years advocated many of the reforms that are now taking concrete form.

Again, where this orginazition does not originate it has proven to be a good foster mother to any suggestion tending to the uplift of mankind. Because of this fact Tidings has closely followed the history making policy of Fred Kohler, chief of police in the city of Cleveland and has more than once given space to his "Golden Rule Policy."

"I enclose you herewith Police Bulletin, setting forth some facts and figures in regard to our 'Common Sense' or so-called 'Golden Rule Policy' of police operation in this city. As you have very kindly shown an interest in this work and have handled some of our facts and figures before, I thought that the Bulletin may interest you and consequently took the liberty of mailing you the same."

This Bulletin shows that under the old way of making arrests during the three first months of 1907, there were 7,126 arrests, and that during the same three months of 1910, under the "Common Sense" policy, arrests had fallen to 1,283, a decrease of 82 per cent.

Chief Kohler's policy, stated briefly, is, to discriminate between the real criminal and the man who is guilty of some minor offense, such as drunkenness or petty quarelling and to save the latter from the stigma of an arrest. To state the policy in Chief Kohler's words: "We judge first and punish afterwards. We used to punish and then judge." This is in striking contrast to the pernicious system obtaining in Ontario where the constable is paid for each arrest—the more arrests the bigger pay, no arrest no pay, and, further, police magistrates are paid if there is a conviction. Could anythin gtemunt the greed in human nature more?

Every man living ahead of his times will find the red blood trickling from a thorny crown. Last summer, after years of plotting, the tough element of Cleveland succeeded in having Chief Kohler suspended, pending a trial on twenty-three separate charges of misconduct in office, intoxication and immorality, not one of which was substantiated. Among the conspirators were a number of disgruntled members and ex-members of the police force. The "Golden Rule Policy" did not fail the Chief in the triumphant hour of his reinstatement, when the opportunity of retaliation came. In his address to his assembled subordinates, friend and foe, he said:

"I am starting you all in new to-day. I do not care what you did for or against me. For those of you who have worked against me I have only the best of feeling, and I want to thank thos ewho stood by me. I do not propose to be revengeful. While this demoralising trial has been going on you have allowed the thieves and thugs to take the city. Now let us have an end of that. Go out and do police duty and clean up the town. That is all I ask of you. Every man will stand on his own merit. The Golden Rule, which was attacked in every way, is now applied to every one of you. The Golden Rule is here to stay and will be exercised stronger than ever. It is up to you when I leave the department and I assure you that will not be for some time."
—"Tidings."

The "Dundee Courier" (Scotland):

"Another interesting feature of the Canadian navy is that officially it is to be teetotal. There will be no issue of grog. This is a significant sign of the times. Half of the men in our fleet at present decline to draw their grog ration, and there is nothing surer than that the Admiralty—watching results in the Dominion fleet—have in contemplation the banishment, sooner or later, of grog and the grog-tub from the British service. The custom is ancient. It serves no good purpose, and few will regret when it goes."

Thy task may well seem over hard
Who scatterest in a thankless soil
Thy life as seed, with no reward
Save that which duty gives to toil,
Yet do thy work, it shall succeed
In thine or in another's day;
And, if denied the victor's meed,
Thou shalt not lack the toiler's pay.
—Whittier.

GOOD HEALTH FOR RUN DOWN MEN

If You Are Weak and Easily Tired Try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

Anaemia is a state into which one falls because of lack of blood, or because the blood is poor, weak and watery. The man or woman who has not enough blood is pale, languid, easily tired and easily depressed. As the trouble progresses other symptoms show themselves, and the life of the sufferer is one of misery. Anaemia opens the door to consumption, and gives victims to all the epidemic maladies, because the whole body is weakened and unable to resist the inroads of disease. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best remedy in the world for the cure of anaemia, and all its attendant miseries. They make the blood rich, red and pure, thus bringing health and strength to weak, despondent men and women. We do not know of a single case of anaemia where Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have failed to cure if given a fair trial. Mr. John Hastings, Venn, Sask., was a victim of this trouble and found new health through Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He says: "I was working on a railway driving a team and found myself gradually running down. I did not pay much attention to it at first, but soon I began to lose my appetite and it was a trial to get through my day's work. I got medicine from the doctor on the works, but it did not help me, and finally I got so bad I told the foreman I would have to quit. He told me not to lose hope, that he would get some medicine that would soon make me all right. That night he went to town and bought me three boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I had not taken more than two boxes when I began to feel better, and after I had used five boxes I was as well and strong as ever, and could do a day's work with any man on the job. I may just add that before I began taking the Pills I was so run down that I weighed only 122 pounds, and while taking them I gained 22 pounds. I cannot say too much in favour of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and strongly recommend them to all run down men."

You can get these Pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"SUSPECTED"

A Short Story

The hollow beat of a horse's hoofs came echoing down the road through the dense fog. The animal slackened his speed, as apparent from the sound, and soon came to a halt just around the turn in the shelter of a few clustered beeches. His head drooped wearily, and his steaming sides heaved as his rider, a slender, gray-clad girl, slipped from the saddle.

She had taken a longer ride than usual that day, and the early darkness and thick mist had surprised her into hurrying her already tired horse. Not that she was afraid! Her head was set too proudly, her firm little chin had too much decision in its lines to admit of a suspicion of timidity. But what would they be thinking about her? They would be alarmed, and then they would ridicule her for getting into such a plight.

Her riding habit was damp and matted with sticky horse hairy Her own hair was dishevelled, and now the ribbon that bound it had come undone. It was to fasten this that she had dismounted.

As she was hastily plaiting the refractory locks, a figure loomed up in the gloom, a ghostly figure enveloped in mist, slowly drifting around the turnpike. She could not tell whether it was a man or woman. But at any rate the person did not notice her or her panting steed. She stood motionless.

From down the road there came a low, whirring sound, rapidly increasing in volume. A dazzling light flashed into view as the automobile bore down upon the creeping shadow. Her heart leaped with sudden terror, but her warning cry, faint and hoarse, passed unheeded. There was a stifled cry, a jar of the machine. The solitary occupant glanced backward as he slackened speed, saw that the figure lay motionless, saw no witness of the deed, and was off again, swallowed up by the darkness.

Rigid with horror, the girl still stood in the deep shadow. Mechanically her lips repeated over and over the number of the car which had burned itself into her brain, 12953, 12953. At last her mind grasped the meaning of the figures, and a new wave of horror swept over her, sickening sense of scorn and shame. Well she knew the number, she had ridden often enough in that car. It belonged to Wright Harrison—Wright Harrison, whom she had always admired and exalted above all other men, who had told her he was coming the next day for her answer.

Was it possible? No, a thousand times no! Yet here was proof. Could she not believe her own eyes? She felt faint with revolt at the suddenness, the cold-bloodedness of the deed. Of course it had happened accidentally, but to drive on that way—

Hesitatingly she crept out into the gloom, leading her horse. It had grown so dark she could scarcely see a yard before her face in the fog. With infinite caution she felt her way about the spot where she had seen the shape go down. She stooped, and her hand encountered cloth. It was a man. He lay still, as he had fallen. She could not leave him there in the road. Carefully she drew him out beyond the ditch to the grass. He did not arouse. Then swiftly she sprang into the saddle and the tired horse, plucking up courage, struck his gait with renewed zeal. She remembered that there was a farmhouse not far from the turn. She hunted for the gate. Ah, there it was.

The farmer listened curiously to her story about the man who had been run over, and perhaps killed.

"Know who 'twas? Couldn't you recognize him? Whose automobile was it? Didn't you see the number? How many was there in it? Couldn't you give a guess as to whose 'twas? You know all them machines in the city pretty well by sight, don't you? You've rode in so many, I sh'd think you would."

But all she would reply was that she didn't know. It had been quite dark. She had seen one man; there might have been more.

And then she, too, set off into the gloom and was swallowed up by the darkness.

A girl, a slender girl, in a soft gray gown, was pacing the floor in the long, high-ceilinged room. Back and forth, slowly she walked, while the shuttle of her thoughts drove madly on. How should she say it? Should she declare her knowledge, or begin with questions? She had heard that it was an unknown tramp, but that did not alter the blackness of the crime.

There was a ring at the door. She heard the maid go to answer. She braced herself.

The door of the room opened and Wright Harrison stepped in, the happiness of his heart reflected in his kindling eyes. But there was that in her face that checked him. He drew back, puzzled.

"Wright," she forced herself to speak, "did you know I was riding along the turnpike road at half-past 6 last night?"

"In all that fog? Why, no, Marjorie." He was surprised and still perplexed.

"Did you know—where were you at that time"

"I? Let me see. I don't know. Guess I'd just gone home from the office."

If only she might believe him. But what had she seen?

"Where was your car at that time?"

"My car? What do you mean? Why, Marjorie, didn't you know my car was stolen about 6 o'clock last night? Clever thing. They haven't located the thief yet."

"Stolen? Oh, Wright, I'm so glad," she cried, as she held out both hands in her tardy welcome, while the radiance of relief spread over her face.—Boston Post.

STOMACH DISTRESS IS ENDED FOREVER

Dyspepsia, Heartburn, Gas or Indigestion Vanish in Five Minutes

Take your sour, out-of-order stomach—or maybe you call it Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Gastritis or Catarrh of Stomach; it doesn't matter — take your stomach trouble right with you to your Pharmacist and ask him to open a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and let you eat one 22-grain Triangle and see if within five minutes there is left any trace of your former misery.

The correct name for your trouble is Food Fermentation—food souring; the Digestive organs become weak, there is lack of gastric juice; your food is only half digested, and you become affected with loss of appetite, pressure and fulness after eating, vomiting, nausea, heartburn, griping in bowels, tenderness in the pit of stomach, bad taste in mouth, constipation, pain in limbs, sleeplessness belching of gas, biliousness, sick headache, nervousness, dizziness or many other similar symptoms.

If your appetite is fickle and nothing tempts you, or you belch gas, or if you feel bloated after eating, or your food lies like a lump of lead on your stomach, you can make up your mind that at the bottom of all this there is but one cause—fermentation of undigested food.

Prove to yourself in five minutes that your stomach is as good as any; that there is nothing really wrong. Stop this fermentation and begin eating what you want without fear of discomfort or misery.

Almost instant relief is waiting for you. It is merely a matter of how soon you take a little Diapepsin.

AMERICA'S FINEST OPERA CO'Y COMING

To Grand Opera House Tuesday Evening, February 14th

Joseph F. Sheehan, the celebrated tenor, does not need any introduction. During the years that he was the leading tenor of Henry W. Savage's companies he gained the reputation of America's greatest tenor, and his praises have been sung in every part of the country. During the past three years, as head of his own company, he has added to his glory and the Sheehan English Grand Opera Company is to-day known as the finest Opera Company singing in the English language.

Not satisfied, however, with all this the great tenor determined to do what has never been done before, make an all star cast production of Il Trovatore, the most popular opera in the realm of music. With this end in view he has picked from his various artists those best equipped for the different roles in Il Trovatore, with the result that critics have stated that never before has a performance of Il Trovatore been given to equal that of the Sheehan Opera Company this year.

The role of Manrico in Il Trovatore is the greatest in Mr. Sheehan's repertoire; in fact he is the only living tenor to-day, not excepting Caruso, who takes the high 'C' at the end of the di Quella pira!

Miss Elaine De Sellon, the eminent French contralto, is said to have no equal in the role of Azucena, the gypsy hag, and the entire list of principals as well as the well-trained chorus have been picked for their special fitness.

The production will be a most elaborate one, with special electrical effect in the famous Anvil Chorus!

Mr. Sheehan, with his entire company of famous artists, and the complete production will be at the Grand Tuesday evening, Feb. 14, for a single performance of the world's greatest opera.

GAUDAUR WAS RIGHT

Jake Gaudaur, the famous oarsman, withdrew from the athletic limelight several years ago, and now lives quietly on his means. He has a house on the shores of Lake Simcoe, where, like the true sportsman that he is, he can enjoy a little of the life of the hunter, and he always makes the most of the duck shooting season in the fall of the year. Gaudaur uses wild ducks as decoys. After clipping their wings he puts them in the water with a weighted string tied to their feet. Then he waits on the shore until a flock of ducks appear on the horizon. The decoys invariably do their share and call lustily to the passing fowl, which quickly come to pay them a fatal visit.

A party of city men visiting the vicinity were highly amused at Gaudaur's decoys and made considerable fun of them. The men thought it was a waste of good birds, and made suggestions that some hunters like to have decoys which they could kill and eat when the free birds escaped.

"What good have they been to you?" 'asked one man.

"Well," replied the former champion, I said they would give about fifty smart Alecs something to be funny about before the end of the season, and if it keeps on I think I'll find that I was right."

FINE OIL PAINTINGS.

Have ou seen the beautiful oil paintings now on exhibition and sale at Clegg's furniture store? If not do not delay, as the collection deserves all the attention art lovers can give them. It is certainly the best art exhibit seen here.

We could use upa column space describing the merits of these paintings, but what would be the use. It is the eye that expresses the mind in art, and to enjoy a painting to its full, one must see it. The opportunity is now yours, as the pictures are at your very door, so avail yourself and see what is doing among the artists of Europe. Mr. O'Brien will be present and give visitors particulars regarding the standing of the artists represented. The paintings will be on view this evening, and continue on view Monday and Tuesday.

Indian Lady Died At Age Of 108

On January 3rd, 1911, there died on Snake Island, Lake Simcoe, Mrs. Big Sail, at the age of 108 years. The following facts about her were given me by Chief Keche Chemon (Big Canoe), of Georgina Island, Lake Simcoe. I give them nearly in the Chief's own words: She was born in the year 1802, at Mechekahning (Narrows), now Orillia. Her brother, the late Rev. H. B. Steinhauger, was also born at the same place. She obtained a fair education at Orillia, under the instruction of Wm. Law. In 1882 she was married to Thomas Big Sail, who was much older than herself. Her husband was converted at Holland Landing, in the year 1828. When this great awakening took place 133 Indians were baptised. Thomas Big Sail became a thorough, earnest Christian, and was appointed a local preacher and class-leader. As he had no education, his wife taught him to memorise a number of hymns and he was thus able to hold services anywhere among his own people, and was a very useful man in Christian service among the Indians through his wife's learning. In her old age Mrs. Big Sail's mind was bright and active; her sight and hearing were also good. She was able to be about the house until the last few months before her death. She had a good voice and she sang most of the time in her declining days. Her favourite hymn that she sang almost in her last hour was, "I'm going home to die no more." No doubt she has safely reached her home, to be with her children who have gone before her. She had ten children, five boys and five girls. Only two sons and two daugters survive her—From the Christian Guardian.

PRESENTATION MADE TO MISS STELLA YOUNG

AN ADDRESS READ

A most enjoyable time was spent last evening with Miss Stella Young at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. J. Young, 554 Charlotte street, when a number of her school mates gathered together and presented her with a signet ring. The address was read by Miss Myrtle Pethick and the ring given by little Bessie Dobbin:

Dear Stella, — Having learned of your removal from our midst we take this opportunity of presenting you with this small token as a mark of respect and esteem in which you are held by your many school mates.

In the future when you look at this remebrance we hope you will think of the many pleasant days we have spent together in the old South Central school, and if at any future time you may have a chance to come to town we hope you will pay us a visit. Wishing you a fture happiness and a fond good-bye, we remain,

Your Loving Schoolmates.

The evening being spent in music and games, after which refreshments were served, when all returned to their homes.

INTERESTING MEETING OF LADIES' LITERARY SOCIETY

SPLENDID PROGRAMME

A very successful meeting of St. Peter's Ladies' Literary Society was held on Friday evening at St. Alphonsus' Lyceum. As this was Scotch evening there was a Scotch programme, consisting of Violin solo—Mr. W. Hatrick.

Vocal solo—Miss F. Leahy.
Vocal solo—Mr. Wright.
Address on "Mary, Queen of Scots"—Miss Maloney.
Address on "Burns"—Dr. McNulty.

Miss Maloney's address was a very eloquent and interesting one. She told the story of the beautiful but hapless Queen in a way that showed all the injustices done to her and her innocence.

In opening her address Miss Maloney described the condition of Scotland and Scotland's relation with England and France at the birth of Mary Queen of Scots, and also the defeat of the Scottish troops at Solway Moss.

At the death of her father, King James of Scotland, Mary was put under the immediate care of her mother and some of the noblest lords of Scotland were nominated as guardians of her person. To confirm the national feeling, the babe was crowned at Stirling.

While still a child she was betrothed to the Dauphin of France, and spent a happy and peaceful childhood and girlhood in that country.

At the early age of fifteen years she was married to the Dauphin of France, and, just two months afterwards, an acident happened which brought Mary's name prominently before the whole of Europe. Queen Mary, of England, had died, and Queen Elizabeth, whose title to the throne was considered invalid by many of her subjects, had succeeded to the English throne. Mary's claim was warmly supported by the French King, and by the Catholic population of England and Scotland, and she was proclaimed Queen of England. Thus, she was brought into an attitude of apparent hostility to Elizabeth.

At the death of the King of France Mary became Queen of France, but five months later her own husband died, and from that moment her fortunes changed. In 1560, she landed in Scotland to assume the Government of her own country. The question of the Queen's marriage at once arose. She had no desire to marry herself, but was persuaded thereto by her Court. Although she had many royal suitors they were all turned aside and the unhappy choice was Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley. At his death, she was imprisoned in Lochleven Castle, and forced to sign an abdication in favour of her little son, with Lord Murray as Regent.

After eleven months she escaped from prison, and, in one week, stood at the head of an army of six thousand men. In the skirmish which followed the Royal lines were broken and their best men prisoners in Murray's hands. Mary's only resource now was to flee to England and cast herself on Elizabeth's sense of justice. But alas! she leaned on a broken reed. Elizabeth kept her in captivity and would neither help her recover her throne or allow her to go to her mother's people in France. Thus, for eighteen years and nine months Mary Queen of Scots languished in English prisons. She entered them a beautiful woman of 25 years, and left them broken and faded, with her abundant hair whitened with captivity. At the end of this time the English Parliament, by strategy, found her guilty of plotting against Elizabeth's life. Mary listened to the sentence with her usual calm, sweet dignity, and assured them that, after such sufferings as hers, death would come as a welcome deliverer. Miss Maloney then closed her address with those touching lines of H. J. Bell, on the death of Mary Queen of Scots.

Dr. McNulty's address on "Burns" was short, but interesting. He showed that poetry could be written on any subject and to illustrate it, gave the history of Burns' poem "To A Daisy."

A vote of thanks to Miss Maloney and Dr. McNulty was then moved and seconded. Father McColl was next called upon. He complimented Miss Maloney and Dr. McNulty on their excellent addresses, and also gave a short talk on "Mary, Queen of Scots." Father McCarthy also complimented the speakers and thanked those who had taken part in the musical part of the programme.

The meeting was then closed by the singing of the National Anthem.

The Story Of Gold Mining In Saskatchewan

The North Saskatchewan River, in the Province of Saskatchewan (formerly East Assinaboia, N.W.T.) has, since the historic days of Hudson Bay factors and voyageurs, yielded gold, hundreds of miners making good wages, "panning" on the benches and bays of that great stream above Edmonton and as far east as a point below Port de la Corne. More than forty years ago, Thomas H. Brooks, M.E., explored the country for several hundred miles, and at that time enthusiasm, hardihood, restless energy and physical endurance were indispensable requisites to the man encountering and overcoming what seemed then almost insurmountable obstacles. On many occasions alone, sometimes accompanied by Indian guides, Mr. Brooks travelled, storing his memory with incidents and conditions which seemed like romance to those who read accouns of his operations and the discoveries he made. Nevertheless, as civilization expanded, every statement made was confirmed by men like the late distinguished geologist, G. M. Dawson, C.M.G., Director of the Geological survey of Canada, Mr. J. Burr Tyrell, M.A., F.G.S., and many others. Then the steel bands of the first Transcontinental Railway made North and South easy of access; soon Edmonton was connected with Calgary and Prince Albert with Regina, and today three great transcontinental railways will find divisional points in what was, thirty years ago, practically a wilderness. Canadian Pacific, Grand Trunk Pacific, and Canada Northern will open to man's energy a vast field for exploitation, and the gold dredge will take its place as one of the producing industrials of the North.

In 1895, the late Justice Roulleau organized a small company to work the sand bars near Edmonton; others followed on a more extensive scale, the Saskatchewan Gold and Platinum Extraction Works, operating gold dredges, attracting public attention. To-day the original promoters, Dr. Roughsedge and the Hon. C. M. Ramsay are not only operating by dredge, but contemplate having a fleet of the latest type of dredges, with appliances recently discovered, and accomplising what will be not only a peaceful but an advantageous revolution in the extraction of gold from the beds and bars of the Saskatchewan. The Saskatchewan Mining and Development Company need not explain why, with the knowledge possessed, it was deemed wise to secure the dredging concessions' summarized in preceding pages. In ten years, from 1887 to 1897, returns were made amounting to $222,916, taken in a primitive manner from the Saskatchewan. Now with splendid system—machinery almost human in its operation—what may not be anticipated? Who would care to cast the horoscope of results during the next ten years?

So far, the most extensively worked dredging fields in America are situated in California, where upwards of 60 endless chain bucket gold dredges are actively employed, and according to the official State Mining Bureau reports of the State of California (Bulletin No. 36), the average operating expenses of dredges in that section, covering labor, material and repairs, is six and one-half cents per cubic yard. In Australia gold dredging operations are conducted as low as five cents per cubic yard. Yukon dredges, too, give promise of remunerative production. It is conservatively estimated, that the operating expenses on the Saskatchewan will not exceed eight cents per cubic yard at the outside, and it is claimed that the expenses may be reduced to five cents per cubic yard, the gravel in the river bed being largely free from boulders and especially adapted for dredging. Coal and wood are cheap and close at hand, so that power may be generated at a minimum cost. There are also good water power facilities, which, when harnessed, would make possible a further and substantial reduction.

"THE FINAL SETTLEMENT"

Portraying the grave consequences that sometimes follow the sudden acquisition of wealth and power, "The Final Settlement" will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House next Saturday, Feb. 11, matinee and evening.

Many problems of great social interest are contained in the production and a strong moral lesson is pointed out, depicting, as it does, the rise of a young mechanic, who, though humble, is both brilliant and ambitious. From this position of obscurity he rises, through his own efforts, to the presidency of a great iron trust.

In this exalted position of opulence and power the allurements of the social life in which he moves prove too much for him, and he divorces his wife, a woman of Conservative, homely tastes, who, despite her husband's position, still retains her orthodox conceptions of life.

The man, after securing his divorce marries a beautiful actress, thinking that her talents and charms will enable him to obtain the social leadership he so much desires. This ambition proves fruitless, and his subsequent disgrace and ruin, and ultimate rescue in which his former wife takes an active part, from the basis of the drama.

The Span Of Our Life Is Increased By Good Food

BUFFALO, FEB. 1.—So far as can be estimated from the present imperfect statistics, the average of human life in the United States has been lengthened by 10 years, according to Dr. Harvey Wiley, the nation's pure food expert.

"The most potent factor in longevity," said the Doctor, "is an abundance of food. In India they have starvation and famine with the resultant short term of life. I don't believe that the human engine is different in thermo-dynamics from the steam engine.

In regard to typhoid fever germs, Dr. Wiley said, "the fever is either murder or suicide, murder if the public is responsible for the conditions that result in the death of the victim, and suicide if he exposed himself to their deadly influence."

Referring to the high rate of infant mortality, which he said was in many instances as high as 100 in every 1,000, he declared that it was largely due to malnutrition and could be prevented if the babes who, for any reason or other, were deprived of the sustenance which nature had intended, could be supplied with pure, properly modified milk.

Dr. Wiley this morning addressed the students of the University of Buffalo. Later he visited the Gratwick Laboratory for Cancer Research. This afternoon he will leave for Syracuse.

Family Discipline As It Is At Present Time

"Willie."

(No answer.)

"Willie!"

"What?"

"Stop pulling the lace curtain."

"But, ma, I ain't going to hurt them."

"You contrary boy; do you want mamma to whip you?"

"Naw."

"Then don't put your hands on those curtains again."

"Will if I want to."

"Why, what do you mean by talking to me like that? Go into the bedroom and shut the door. Go right in the bedroom, I say!"

"Listen to me, you naughty child. I shall certainly get the stick if you don't behave.

"Do you want to break mamma's heart?"

"Yes."

"Why, Willie!"

(Willie kicks his mother.)

"Papa, you will have to fetch the switch. It's on the clock shelf in the kitchen."

"Huh, Willie! For goodness sake, don't make so much noise. What will the neighbors think?"

(Willie howls as loud as he can.)

"Listen, dearie, don't cry. Please don't cry. Mamma doesn't intend to whip you. No, indeed; mamma wouldn't hurt her sweet boy for all the world. Stop, darling. Poor little frightened fellow. There, there, now dearest."

"I'm hungry."

"Bless his heart, he says he is hungry. What shall mamma get for you dear? Some bread and butter with a little honey?"

"No; I want some chocolates."

"We haven't any, Willie. You ate the last this afternoon. Won't an orange do?"

"No."

"I hate pineapple."

"Wouldn't a nice thick slice of mince pie taste good?"

"I say I want chocolates-"

"Then you shall have some, dear, if you don't cry any more. Papa, it seems too bad to make you go outdoors after you have gotten comfortable for the evening, but I guess you'll have to run down to the drug store and buy a pound of sweets for mamma's little starved lamb."

IN MEMORIAM

of Katie Murray, Ennismore, who died November 9th, 1910:

Dearest Katie she has left us,
Left us, yes, for evermore;
But we hope to meet our loved one
On that bright and happy shore
To her home she was attractive,
To her comrades their delight,
Each seemed so enamoured
With this pretty flower so bright.

This lovely girl, so young so fair,
Called home by early doom
Just came to show how sweet a flower
In heaven there would bloom
E're sin could harm or sorrow fade.
Death came with friendly care,
The opening bud to heaven conveyed
And bade it blossom there.

Through all her pains she always smiled
With a smile of heavenly mirth,
And when the angels called her home
She smiled farewell to earth.
There was an angel band in heaven
That was not quite complete,
God called upon dear Katie
To fill the vacant seat.

Peaceful be thy silent slumber,
Peaceful in thy grave so low,
Thou no more shall join our number
Thou no more our sorrows know.
Yet again we hope to meet thee
When the day of life is fled,
And in heaven with joy to greet thee
Where no farewell tears are shed.

'Tis hard to break the tender cord
When love has found the heart,
'Tis hard, so hard to speak the words
We must on earth forever part;
Dearest loved one, we have laid thee
In the peaceful grave's embrace,
But thy memory will be cherished
Till we see thy heavenly face.

$3.50 Recipe Cures Weak Kidneys, Free

Wouldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining, or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back-of-the-head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a quick recovery, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3.50 just for writing this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, K1810 Luck Building, Detroit Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it ,this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies, but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

A HUGE SAIL

Messrs. J. J. Turner and Sons are at present working upon something out of the ordinary in the shape of a foresail for the schooner Katie Eccels, of Trenton, Ont., of which Captain Carson, of this city, was captain some years ago. This sail is so large that there was not room enough to cut it in the factory, and it had to be cut on the stage of the Grand Opera House. There is about three hundred yards of canvas in this sail, and it will weigh when finished over five hundred pounds.

Abdul Kills Two Wives.

Salonika, Feb. 4.—Abdul Hamid, former Sultan of Turkey has gone violently insane, has killed two of his wives and is to-day confined in irons.

The murder of the two women who were among those who accompanied Abdul Hamid from Constantinople when he was exiled by the Young Turks, was particularly cruel. He choked one of them to death with his own hands and dashed the other so violently against the wall that she died a few hours later, according to one of the men who have been guarding the deposed ruler at his villa where he is spending his last days.

The ex-Sultan was subdued only after a fierce struggle in which he was severely injured.

Abdul Hamid is confined in a dungeon beneath the villa Allatine which, while set apart for him as a residence, is in reality his prison. He was sent there in April, 1909, when the Turkish revolution brought about by the Young Turk party was finally completed and Sultan Mehemmed V. ascended the throne.

Abdul Hamid had reigned for thirty years up to that time, had deluged his empire in blood and had kept 200,000 spies to betray their fellow citizens. He was noted for having tricked the diplomats of all Europe and from time to time shocked the world by his sensuality and crimes.

When Abdul was sent to the villa here his suite, which was allowed to accompany him, was composed of three Sultanas, or full wives, four Cadines, or inferior wives; five Halfas, or lady housekeepers privileged to go out of the harem, two princes, his daughter and nine servants. This really gave him the allowance of twelve wives.

A Novel Scheme.

Montreal, Feb. 4.—At the annual meeting of the diocese of Montreal next week, Mr. J. M. Fisk will put forward a motion which authorizes the delegates of the synod to bring before the general synod the following resolutions:

"This synod, recognizing the advantage that would accrue to the various parishes of the Church of England in Canada, by forming a mutual fire insurance union to co-operate in carrying the risk on all church property, such as cathedral, churches, rectories parsonages and their outbuildings, colleges, church schools, halls, etc., throughout the various diocese of the Dominion of Canada (or such dioceses as may desire such union) shall bring the subject before the general synod at their next meeting with the view of forming such a union.

Hanlan Wright Committed.

Windsor, Feb. 4.—Hanlan Wright, "the Harrow bandit," was given a preliminary hearing before Police Magistrate Leggatt here yesterday and committed for trial. The principal witness against young Wright was his uncle, William Wright, a wealthy farmer of Harrow, from whom the young man attempted to obtain $5,000 by threatening him with death. He told the court that for four days he had been forced to barricade himself inside his house, fearing his nephew would shoot him on sight, as he had so often threatened to do.

Popularity of Measure.

London, Feb. 4.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The London Daily Mail, in an article on reciprocity, says: "The action of the Canadian Conservatives in leaving their representatives free stands is the strongest testimony to the popularity of the agreement." Amongst the methods of preserving Canada for the Empire, The Mail suggests free trade in manufactures, a constant stream of British emigrants and the investment of English capital, creating business there, and not merely financing.

Appeal to Privy Council.

Winnipeg, Feb. 4.—Leave to appeal direct to the Privy Council, instead of going to the Supreme Court of Canada, was granted the city yesterday, in its case with the Winnipeg Electric Railway Co.

One of the principal points to be decided arises over the provision in the bylaw which says:

"The company shall place and keep within the city limits all its engines, machinery, power houses, repair shops and any construction shops it may have."

Shot Sheriff and Chief.

Wilson, N.C., Feb. 4.—Deputy Sheriff George Munford was killed and Chief of Police Glover probably fatally wounded by a negro desperado yesterday. The officers were attempting to arrest the negro on advices from Dunn, where he broke into a store.

Negro to Be Electrocuted.

Trenton, N.J., Feb. 4.—John Sears, the negro convicted of the murder of Rev. and Mrs. Amzi L. Armstrong near here last November, was yesterday sentenced by Justice Reed to be electrocuted during the week beginning March 13.

Mrs. Rachael Sears, mother of the condemned man, who was held by the police in connection with the double crime, will not be prosecuted.

Flipping the Meter.

New York, Feb. 4.—The mystery of "flipping the meter," known only to initiate chauffeurs, has been unwittingly explained by an offending adept to the chief of the city bureau of licenses, and as a result he set departmental machinery in motion which will compel the taxicab companies to take down 400 meters, with permission to assemble them again only when they have been so altered that crooked chauffeurs cannot swindle the public by their aid.

While Chief Oliver was riding in a taxicab the other night he saw the chauffeur jiggle the flag above the meter, whereupon the hand on the dial jumped from $2 to $6.40. The astonished chief investigated and learned that the practice has been general among the unscrupulous experts, and is known as "flipping the meter."

Shipping Is Well Organized.

Washington, Feb. 4.—The Humphrey bill, giving the Government power to exclude from American ports any foreign ships that enter into pools or agreements to control freight or passenger rates, or to shut out competition, was favorably reported to the House yesterday by the committee on merchant marine. "It is a matter of common knowledge," said Representative Humphrey, "that more than 90 per cent. of the trans-oceanic commerce of the country to-day is carried on foreign ships that belong to pools, conferences and combines. Freight and passenger rates are fixed by agreement. The rates charged are unjust and exorbitant.

To Stamp Out Bubonic Plague.

Washington, Feb. 4.—Plans have been made to put the public health and marine hospital service into the field in China to stamp out the bubonic plague, if the Chinese Government request it.

It was learned yesterday that informal exchanges of views on the seriousness of the situation have been made between some of the European powers and the possibility has been discussed of having the marine hospital service join with the army medical forces of some of the European nations having spheres of influence in China.

Will Appeal Against Tariff.

St. Catharines, Feb. 4.—County Clerk Clench yesterday afternoon had notice served on him by H. H. Collier, K.C., on behalf of E. J. McIntyre of Niagara Township, that legal proceedings will be instituted if County Treasurer Wismer pays over to the Niagara Peninsula Fruit Growers $300 voted Thursday night towards the expenses of the protest deputation relative to tariff changes on fruit. McIntyre is a grower and large buyer of apples.

Export of Whisky.

Kingston, Feb. 4.—The Corby Company of Belleville sought the advice of U. S. Consul Johnson here relative to a shipment of whiskey, confiscated at Buffalo. Whisky can be shipped into United States only in barrels containing 100 gallons each. The Corby Company shipped 100 gallons, but in casks, containing small quantities. The matter will be appealed to the Department at Washington.

Cable Rates.

London, Feb. 4.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Morning Post in an article on cable rates complains of the dilatoriness of the Government. Ignorance and misunderstading are inevitable, it says, while the rates remain so high. Surely the Ministers might show the cable interests to help the promotion of a community of thought of the English-speaking peoples.

Imperial Naval Staff.

London, Feb. 4.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—A Navy League manifesto demands an Imperial naval staff, with an imperial system of training.

MARKET REPORTS.

CHICAGO, Feb. 3.—Prospects of a fair increase in the visible supply this week put a finishing touch to-day to weakness in wheat. At the corresponding time a year ago there was a decrease of 888,000 bushels. Closing prices were ½c to ⅝c to ¾c under last night. The end of the session left corn ¼c to ½c up, oats at an advance of a shade to ½c and provisions 2½c to 5c down. There was much unloading of wheat by longs, who had bought on the idea that the southwest would develop a crop scare. As a matter of fact the weather in that section turned mild instead of developing the cold wave which had been looked for.

The Liverpool market closed to-day ½d to ¾d lower than yesterday for wheat, ¼d to ½d lower for corn. Paris closed unchanged to ⅛c higher for wheat. Berlin and Antwerp were unchanged.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Feb. 3.—Business in Manitoba spring wheat over the cable was quiet. Bids were unchanged, but the demand was poor. In sympathy with a further decline in oats in Winnipeg, an easier feeling prevailed in this market, but in the absence of any business of importance prices showed no material change. Flour is steady under a fair demand. Manitoba bran and shorts very scarce and firm. Butter is weaker and 1c per pound lower, on supplies being in excess of requirements. Cheese is firm. All western colored stock cleaned up. Eggs fairly active. Potatoes strong, and prices have advanced 2½c to 5c per bag. Supplies of Green Mountains are small, for which the demand is good at 80c to 85c per bag in car lots.

Returned Only to Die.

London, Ont., Feb. 4.—For years the family of Albert Smith have wondered where he had gone. They had about come to the conclusion that he was dead. Thursday Robert Smith of the third concession was surprised by having his long lost brother walk in on him.

The usual greetings of a long lost relative took place. The brother had been all over the West. He was reviewing his travels to his brother and family when suddenly he fell over. Medical aid was called but he was dead.

The brother was a cripple and has been troubled with hip disease.

Threw Loot Overboard.

Windsor, Feb. 4.—A most daring robbery occurred yesterday afternoon, when Ross Simpson and Fred Beers of Detroit robbed an intoxicated man in the Herenden Hotel of $200 and a gold watch, and then made a dash for the Windsor ferry.

The police reached the dock just as the ferry was ready to pull out for Detroit. The boat was held while the officers searched for the men.

In an effort to get rid of the evidence of the deed, the men threw the money and watch overboard. Three five dollar bills were rescued by a customs officer, who recovered the money by means of a row boat. The men will appear before Magistrate Leggatt to-day.

Hydro In Hamburg.

New Hamburg, Feb. 4.—New Hamburg citizens are congratulating themselves upon the advent of Niagara power. Yesterday the current was turned on here by the hydro-electric commission, and the town is brilliantly lighted.

The local plant has been entirely reconstructed in an up-to-date manner under the supervision of E. B. Merrill, electrical engineer of Toronto, and contractor George Thomas of Windsor, Ont.

Woman's World

MRS. MARY ROBERTS RINEHART, AUTHOR OF "THE WINDOW AT THE WHITE CAT."

Mary Roberts Rinehart, the popular novelist and playwright, is threatened with blindness and is now on her way to consult a specialist in Europe who has done wonderful things in restoring eyesight. Last summer Mrs. Rinehart and her husband, Dr. Stanley M. Rinehart, spent a day at Lilydale, the spiritualistic camp meeting near their summer home, Lake Chautauqua, N. Y.

As one might suppose, at this meeting all sorts of mediums, slate writers, clairvoyants, etc., do congregate, and the air is said to buzz with the whizzing of spooks. Mrs. Rinehart found excellent situations for "copy." She said that day at Lilydale gave her suggestions for ten farce comedies and just as many mystery stories that will, if she is able to carry out her ideas, rival the success of her play "Seven Days" and the detective story "The Man In Lower Ten."

Coming back from the ghost convention in their automobile they had a terrible experience, being caught in a cloudburst after night on strange roads, with lamps that wouldn't light. For an hour they worked in darkness through wind and howling storm to get the chains on the car. And then they beat it back to Spokesville—a wild waltz - me - around - again - Willie ride, hub deep in mud and water, skidding every inch of the way and only recognizing the road by flashes of lightning.

Mrs. Rinehart's readers do not need ghosts, cloudbursts and spirit rappings for excitement. All they need is to sit in a comfortable chair and read her latest romance, "The Window at the White Cat." It sends up and down your back delicious thrills and chills if some one rings the bell unexpectedly you jump five feet in the air while the spell of the story is on you. And yet all the time you're laughing your head off, it's so funny and clever. Mrs Rinehart seems to have a monopoly on this combination of mystery and humor. She constructs a plot as intricate as any of Anna Katherine Green's She solves it with an ingenuity worthy of Conan Doyle, and she adds to these virtues the priceless gift of ringing laughter.

The author of all this fun and mystery is a very domestic woman, devoted to her husband and children, and story writing at first was begun as a pastime, her family laughing at her first literary efforts, but in spite of little encouragement she is now one of the most successful of women story writers and playwrights of the day.

AEBERTA LOSES APPEAL BEFORE PRIVY COUNCIL

Canadian Pacific Wins Its Case---Appealed the Decision of the Canadian Courts When Latter Said the Lands Granted to the Railroads Were Not Taxable.

London, Feb. 4.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council yesterday handed out its decision on the appeal of the Province of Alberta vs. the C.P.R. from a decision of the Canadian courts on the question of taxation of C.P.R. lands in the province which the railway had secured by its charter from the Dominion. The Canadian courts had decided in favor of the company's contention that the lands were not taxable.

The Privy Council yesterday dismissed the appeal without costs. It held that unoccupied C.P.R. lands are not taxable until twenty years after the actual grant of letters patent, even if there be delay of many years in taking the letters out. It also held that C.P.R. land sold on the instalment plan is untaxable until all the instalments are paid.

Millions of dollars in taxes were involved in the case, which was heard last summer. The case was divided into two parts, the first regarded the taxation of unoccupied lands and depended on the interpretation of the phrase "twenty years after the grant of lands" in the C.P.R. charter.

The C.P.R. contended that this meant after the patent was granted, and the Province of Alberta contended that it meant after identification.

The second point hinged on the interpretation of the word "sold" in reference to lands granted by the Dominion to the C.P.R. in the taxation of which the province was interested.

HEALTHY CHILDREN ARE A BLESSING

Healthy babies are good babies, and the good baby is a blessing in every home. Nothing can give the mother or father more pleasure than to see baby play. Every movement is watched with delight; every new word spoken brings pride to the fond parents. It is only the sickly baby that makes home wretched — and, mothers, it is not baby's fault when he is sick. You are the one to blame. Perhaps you give him candies, cakes and other food which his little stomach is unable to digest. Then when he is cross and ailing you give him some "soothing" mixtures to quiet them. That is wrong — remember his little stomach is not as strong as a grown persons, and also remember that every spoonful of "soothing" mixture you give him only does him more injury — it does not remove the cause of his fretfulness — it merely dopes him into an unnatural sleep. What is needed to make baby healthy and happy is Baby's Own Tablets—a medicine with a guarantee of safety. About them Mrs. Mathies McCormick, West St., Peters, P. E. I., writes: "We have used Baby's Own Tablets with good results. They are certainly a blessing for mothers that have cross sickly babies. They sweeten the stomach; give refreshing sleep and make baby fat and healthy." Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ABOUT THE C.N.R.

Hon. A. G. McKay Wanted to Know About Grants—Questions Asked by the Opposition About Insurance

TWO NEW BILLS

Toronto, Feb. 4.—Two consolidation bills were advanced through the committee stage at the Ontario Legislature yesterday afternoon.

Hon. Dr. Pyne explained in reference to the bill respecting the profession of architects that in placing the witness fee for architects at $5, while that for doctors was at present $4, it was not intended for the difference to continue, as both would be made alike.

Hon. F. Cochrane gave various technical explanations of the consolidation bill respecting the cutting of saw-logs.

Notice was given by Hon. A. G. MacKay of a series of enquiries respecting the construction of the Selwood and Port Arthur branch of the Canadian Northern.

This branch was authorized with the usual land grant in 1908. The time set for its completion was Sept. 1, 1910.

Hon. Mr. MacKay's questions are as follows:

Has any application been made by or on behalf of the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Co. for an extension of time under the provisions of 8 Edward VII., c. 47 s. 7?

If so, what extension has been granted?

Has the Government any information showing the number of miles of railroad which have been completed by the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway between Selwood Junction and Port Arthur?

If so, what number of miles have been completed between said town by the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway?

Have any lands within the districts of Algoma and Thunder Bay been set aside and appropriated to the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Co. under the provisions of 9 Edward VII., c. 7?

J. Ewing (West Wellington) gave notice that he would move for an order of the House for a return of copies of correspondence between any official of the Government and the Standard Insurance Co. during the years 1902, 1908, 1909; a copy of any reports made by the inspector who inspected the books of the Standard Insurance Co. during the same years; copies of all correspondence between any official of the Government and the Liquidator of The Standard Insurance Co.

A. A. Mahaffy (Muskoka) gave notice of a bill to amend the justices of the peace act.

It is understood that a bill to define the individual responsibility for fires caused by defective work in electric wiring will be introduced by Hon. Col. Hendrie.

The date for receiving private bills has been extended for two weeks. W. H. Hoyle (North Ontario) was elected chairman. Seventy-two private bills have been received by the private bills committee yesterday for the seventh time.

YESTERDAY IN THE HOUSE

E. N. Lewis Proposes to Regulate the Cold Storage Warehouses—Would Have Food Destroyed in One Year

A DEBATE ENSUES

Ottawa, Feb. 4.—Safeguards for the proper cold storage of food and a mild protest from Mr. Foster that the information given by the Finance Minister as to the correspondence received by the Government on the subject of reciprocity was not sufficiently illuminating, furnished most of the bill of fare of the House of Commons yesterday. Dr. Reid (Grenville) protested against the public works' estimates blocking the way to the consideration of those of other Departments equally important.

E. N. Lewis (Huron) introduced his eighth bill for the session re the cold storage of food. He said the bill did not attempt to cover the entire subject, but it would be sufficient to call the Government's attention to the matter. American legislators had devoted much attention to the subject, which had also of late been to the fore through the destruction in Montreal of a hundred thousand dollars' worth of storage eggs. The high prices were sometimes attributed to lack of storage regulations.

Mr. Lewis proposed that food kept over a year in storage should be destroyed. He admitted that some foods spoiled in storage quicker than others, and the bill provided that game, for instance, could not be kept more than six months.

Thomas Chisholm (E. Huron) said the matter was one of regulation of storage. Some foods required different temperatures than others. When all foods were kept together at one temperature, there was bound to be deterioration. He recommended that legislation should compel different foods in storage to be kept separately. The bill was read a first time.

A desultory discussion arose over the tariff information, and the nature it should take. Mr. Fielding, in answer to Mr. Foster's questions, told how the American pamphlets he had requested, would be here in a day or so.

When at four o'clock the House went into committee on the estimates for the balance of the day, Dr. Reid (Grenville) protested that the Government was not following the best course in voting estimates. Some years ago the House used to take up several Departments' estimates alternately, and this was of value as the items were sometimes entwined. The House had been in session three months, he said, and nothing but the works estimates had been taken up.

The result would be that at the end of the session the other Departmental estimates would be rushed through in a few days. He thought that estimates concerning the interior and agriculture departments might even have more value from a public standpoint than the cost of public buildings.

Mr. Pugsley remarked that the sooner his estimates were voted the sooner the others would be got at.

A return moved for by Hon. Geo. E. Foster, and laid on the table of the Commons, contains copies of communications which the Government has received for and again reciprocity with the United States.

Those in favor of reciprocity are: Winnipeg Fruit and Vegetable Jobbers, Forest Grange, Calgary Liberal Association, and Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association.

Those against reciprocity are: The Boards of Trade of Welland, Deseronto, Brampton, Sault Ste. Marie, Cobalt, Manitou, Seaforth, Perth Brockville, Galt, Vernon (B.C.), Port Hope, market gardeners of the Province of Quebec, malleable iron founders of Canada, Central Farmers' Institute of Victoria (B.C.), employes and mechanics of the Bertie Tannery Co., the Dominion Suspender Co., and the Niagara Neckwear Co. of Niagara, Quebec Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association (with 31 members), London shoe manufacturers and 14 shoe manufacturers in various parts of the country.

The Kingston Board of Trade petitioned for the placing of iron ore on the free list.

ASK FOR COMMISSION.

Shareholders of Farmers' Bank Heard at Ottawa.

Ottawa, Feb. 4.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. W. S. Fielding heard a deputation representing the shareholders of the Farmers' Bank yesterday afternoon, headed by Wm. Laidlaw, K.C., and supported by a number of members of Parliament.

The object of the deputation was to press upon the Government the need of appointing a royal commission to investigate the affairs of the bank, with the view of disclosing those irregularities antecedent to the failure of the bank which court proceedings would not bring into the limelight. Mr. Laidlaw made a forcible and pathetic speech. He pointed out to the Ministers that some consideration should be given to the Halton farmers who had retained him to look after their interests. These men were ruined. He thought that some redress should be given and that by way of a special act exempting these men from the operation of the double liability clause in the Bank Act.

Among the deputation were Messrs. Wm. Laidlaw, K.C.; J. W. Elliott, K.C., Toronto, and the following members of Parliament: David Henderson, Major Sam Sharpe, Col. Sam Hughes, George Gordon, E. W. Nesbitt, J. J. Donnelly, Uriah Wilson, M. Schell, Major Beattie, Major Currie, Haughton Lennox.

Messrs. Sharpe, Henderson and Lennox spoke in the same strain as Mr. Laidlaw, and asked the Government to provide relief for the victims. The Premier promised consideration.

Brought Body 150 Miles.

North Bay, Feb. 4.—The body of Homer Wilson, the unfortunate young prospector who was frozen to death in the Gowganda wilds, was brought to North Bay by his brother, and taken on to Lake Linden, Michigan, where the parents reside. The brother had a very hard trip, driving a distance of 150 miles over the indifferent and bad trails. Mrs. Wilson, the young widow of the unfortunate prospector, had to be left behind at Gowganda, as she is suffering greatly form her terrible experiences of exposure in the northern bush, having both hands and feet frozen. She is being treated by a physician at Gowganda, and it is hoped that amputation will not be necessary.

Wilson, in going to visit some traps, went through the ice, and, upon getting out, his wet and frozen garments prevented him making the return trip to the shack, and he died from exposure. The wife, becoming alarmed for her husband's safety, started out in search of him, but made little progress in the deep snow, and had great difficulty making the return trip to the shack, where, wet and cold and unable to build a fire, she was found in a frozen condition by the rescue party.

Dragged Fifty Feet.

Brockville, Feb. 4.—David White of Toronto, G.T.R. passenger conductor, running between that point and Montreal, was injured yesterday as No. 2 express, west bound, was pulling into the station. As he prepared to step off, the collar of his coat caught in a corner of the step, and he was dragged a distance of fifty yards before the train came to a standstill. When picked up blood was flowing from a gash in his head. He was also bruised about the body. He was able to leave for home last night.

New Salary Scheme.

Brantford, Feb. 4.—The Public School board has adopted a new salary scheme for kindergarten teachers. Directors will receive $400 to $560, with $50 increase at the end of the first year, and 10 increases thereafter of $25 until the maximum is reached. Assistants who are normal trained first year receive $300, second $350 and third $415; assistants not normal trained, $250.

Archbishop Ryan Better.

Philadelphia, Feb. 4.—The vitality shown by the Most Rev. Patrick J. Ryan has completely puzzled his physicians. Notwithstanding that a bulletin issued stated the aged prelate would probably not live through the night, he awoke yesterday refreshed by several hours of sound sleep.

Last night his condition was more satisfactory than it had been for nearly a week.

Recognition of Commissioners.

London, Feb. 4.—At the opening of Parliament on Monday Lord Strathcona will wear his peer's robes, while the other high commissioners will wear levee dress. Seats to the right of the throne have been assigned them near the ambassadors.

The London Daily Mail says: "This is a recognition of the width of the Empire and possesses a significance which it is impossible to overlook. It throws open the essential ceremonies of Parliament to the Dominions as well as to the United Kingdom.

English Opinions.

London, Feb. 4.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Morning Post, publishing the text of the proposed reciprocity agreement, complains that, though the same was communicated from Canada at the end of last week, no intimation was given to the press here that it was available several papers do not contain the text. The Morning Post says: "American influence over Canadian thought and action will rapidly expand with this link binding the daughter nation and the Mother Country growing steadily weaker."

Tore Hole In His Neck.

North Bay, Feb. 4.—M. McCartney, C.P.R. employe of Chalk River, was unloading steel at a small station about eight miles east of North Bay, when a heavy piece of metal fell on a pinch bar which he was using, snapped the heavy iron bar through the air striking McCartney and making a jagged hole in his neck, from which the blood gushed in a torrent. The injured man was rushed on a freight engine to North Bay hospital. His chances of recovery are good.

A Strong Denial.

London, Feb. 4.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The New York Herald edition in Paris says there is no more staunch advocate of trade reciprocity with the United States in Canada than Canada's cheese king, Mr. MacLaren. Speaking to the Canadian Associated Press, Mr. MacLaren emphatically denied any such advocacy; on the contrary, he is a strong advocate of preference within the Empire.

Tramp Steamer Wrecked

Vancouver, B.C., Feb. 4.—The Norwegian tramp steamer Titiana, 2,315 tons, heavily laden, with British Columbia coal for Acapulo, Mexico, was wrecked yesterday morning on Stuart Point, Sanjuan Island, in American waters, at the southern end of the Gulf of Georgia. She carried a crew of 25 men.

The "Absolute Life."

Chicago, Feb. 4.—Evelyn Arthur See, founder of the "absolute life," was indicted yesterday on serious charges, the penalty for which is imprisonment for one to twenty years. Several girls were witnesses before the grand jury.

Peterborough Ties Up District Defeated Trenton Team By 14-5

The Speed Boys Outplayed the Easterners From Start to Finish and Were Always in the Lead—Had the Speed, Checking Ability and the Team Work.

SCORE 6-2 AT HALF TIME

The Peterborough Intermediate O. H. A. team demonstrated that their previous victory over Trenton was not a fluke and, incidentally tied up the district last night at Brock St. rink, when they won a clever, clean-cut and decisive victory over the Eastern team, in the re-playing of the protested game. The score, when the bell rang for the close of play, was 14 to 5 in favour of Peterborough, and Billy Breen's Speed Boys were in front at the half, 6 to 2. There was never any doubt about the result. The Petes opened the game with a burst of speed that demoralized the visitors, ramming in five goals in a row before the Trenton aggregation scored, and they kept the same speed up all through, playing rings around, yes, at times, toying with the team that Trenton people have declared invincible. The comparatively easy manner in which the Petes piled up goal after goal, caused the crowd of eighteen hundred fans to grow hysterical with delight and a wild demonstration followed every Peterborough counter.

There was another enormous crowd present. The fans began to gather before seven o'clock and before the doors were opened there were five hundred outside clamouring for admission. So dense was the jam outside the door that some of the players had great difficulty in getting through. When the game started there was not a vacant corner anywhere in the rink.

Trenton can have no excuses over last night's game. The last time out they complained of the soft ice. Last night the sheet was as smooth as glass and as hard as steel, conditions just as the visitors wanted. The result was even more decisive than in the game last week. The Petes outskated the Easterners all through the vaunted speed of the Trenton team failing to materialize. Their line could not break away from the Petes advance guard, who came back with them so fast that they often worked around in front of them and took the rubber away from them. Ray and Giroux, especially, did this time after time, and the visitors could not get loose while the Petes defence repulsed their attacks coolly and systematically. The result was that Trenton were out-played from first to last and never had a chance. Speed, teamwork, and the ability to go the route were the big factors in the Petes victory. Trenton had absolutely no combination. They depended upon the individual efforts of Croft and Fletcher to score for them and, although the pair in centre ice played fine hockey, they were so closely checked in every rush they made that they could do very little. The Petes, on the other hand, played unselfishly, doing far more passing than the visitors. Their combination was mostly of the two-man variety, which was very effective, as the visitors line did not check back and their defence was weak and easily drawn out. Peterborough were superior at every point. They had the speed, the combination, the ability and the willingness to check back, and a much more effective defence.

First honours on the night's play must go toFred Denison, the husky young cover-point of the Petes, who gave a magnificent exhibition of skating and stick-handling, his express-train rushes being responsible for six goals. The big boy dashed down the ice like a bullet, skating away from the visitors' forwards as if they were standing still, and side-stepping McGaw and Powers in a manner that made the Trenton defence men look foolish. Four times he carried the rubber through the whole Trenton team for goals, and the visitors seemed utterly at a loss to stop his meteor-like dashes. His checking was all that could be desired, but it was on the attack that "Dennie" was especially effective. Capt. Ray never played a better game of hockey than he did last night when he gave a dazzling exhibition of speed, puck carrying and back-checking that has rarely been surpassed on Brock Street Rink. On innumerable occasions he chased back with the visitors' line, headed off a rush, and then tore back with the rubber. Like Denison, he had no trouble in fooling McGaw, and the speedy pair tore around the Trenton cover-point so often that he became angry and handed out a lot of heavy checking, which earned him a penalty or two, but which did not stop the flying Petes for a moment. Cyril Giroux jumped into the vacancy caused in the Petes line by the cancelling of Park's certificate and played a grand game. His checking could not have been improved upon. Every time that Fletcher and Croft started away with the rubber the stocky little centre was on hand to stop them, and he did an immense amount of work in this connection that was appreciated by the fans. His skating and stick-handling were good all through and he fully justified the action of the executive in selecting him to fill the gap. Kelly was there with another beautiful game along the boards. The lightning left wing was too fast for his check and outskated him at every turn, his speedy dashes down the boards being a feature all through in spite of the fact that he sprained his arm badly in the first few minutes of play. Bud was always working and generally effective. Sorel played his best game of the season at right wing. His shooting was a big help in the victory, while he checked effectively and rushed nicely.

Bond played a steady, effective game at point, making no mistakes and stopping the man with the rubber in good style. He and Denison played the cross-the-rink defence perfected by the Ottawa team, and it worked splendidly.

Derocher looked after the nets in fine fashion, making a lot of spectacular stops of shots from close in.

There was not a weak spot in evidence in the whole team.

Croft and Fletcher were by far the best of Trenton's line-up, although their failure to pass the puck made them far less effective than they might otherwise have been. The defence, outside of McGiffin, was weak. Neither McGaw or Powers could stop the Petes, and McGiffin was a very busy individual. He had a lot of good stops to his credit. Croft did a lot of spectacular stick-handling but the Petes hummed around him like a bunch of hornets, and he could not get through only very occasionally. Fletcher played a much better game than he did the last time here. Neither Palmer or Cummings was very prominent, in the play Lawson Whitehead refereed satisfactorily.

The teams were:

	TRENTON
	McGiffin
	Powers
	McGaw
	Croft
Palmer	Fletcher	Cummings
Kelly	Giroux	Sorel
	Ray
	Denison
	Bond
	Derocher
	PETERBOROUGH

It was 8.40 o'clock when the game commenced at express speed, both teams working like fiends. The Petes rushed fro mthe face-off, but McGaw blocked and countered Fletcher, getting the first shot of the game but was wild. Giroux tore off a pretty rush and passed neatly to Sorel, but McGiffin made a splendid save of the hard drive that followed. Denison came down with a beautiful dash that nearly ended in a score. The Petes were already showing their superiority. All four forwards were checking back persistently and they had the speed on their checks with the result that the Trenton attack could not get going. The first goal of the game was scored exactly four minutes from the start, when Kelly and Sorel broke away together. Sorel's shot was dead on, but McGiffin blocked with his skate. Before he could clear, however, Kelly poked the rubber through and there was a wild roar from the crowd. Peterborough 1, Trenton 0.

The Petes' speed and close checking had Trenton bottled up and try as they might, they could not get going. When they tried to break away, Kelly, Ray, Giroux and Sorel were back with them, bothering them to such an extent that they could hardly work the rubber down to the Petes defence, and when they did, Denison or Bond had no difficulty in relieving them of the rubber. On the other hand, the Petes line were working free of their checks and coming down on the Trenton rear guard unhampered by any interference from behind. Sorel chopped McGaw and drew the first penalty of the game, but even with the odd man the visitors could not accomplish anything. Denson secured at cover-point and rambled through the defence, but his shot hit the bar at the top of the net. Powers bodied Kelly into the boards and Whitehead chased him to the fence. Sorel came back onto the ice at this stage, and taking a pass from Giroux at centre, squirmed through the Trenton defence and beat McGiffin easily from close in. Peterborough 2, Trenton 0.

There was nothing to the battle but the Petes. Almost from the face-off, Giroux tore off a pretty rush and shot dead on. The rubber rebounded off McGiffin's pads twelve feet in front and Sorel following down like a flash, bored one past the Trenton goaler before he could realize there was a shot coming. Peterborough 3, Trenton 0.

Powers tripped Giroux and was railroaded again. A few moments after Giroux was banished for loafing. The visitors were being played off their feet. The checking of the Petes had them up in the air and on the other hand they had difficulty in stopping the blue and white men when they broke away. Denison started a series of phenomenal scores by getting the rubber at his position and tearing down the rink, skating around the entire Trenton team and neatly caging the puck behind McGiffin. It was a magnificent individual effort and merited the wild outburst of cheer with which it was received. Score, Peterborough 4, Trenton 0.

Palmer drew a penalty for slashing and while he was off the Petes increased their lead. The lightning-like Denison seized the rubber at centre and dashed pell-mell down the ice, sailing straight through the Trenton defence for another spectacular goal. Score, Peterborough 5, Trenton 0.

Capt. Ray was penalized for holding, but the Petes continued to have the advantage. Sorel broke away down the wing and hit McGiffin in the face with a wicked drive from the boards. Fletcher and Croft got away together but Derocher made two brilliant stops and cleared neatly. Bond in stopping a rush by Croft, tripped the Trenton rover and was banished for two minutes, and while he was off the visitors scored twice. Croft, Cummings and McGaw got away for the only effective bit of combination the visitors showed throughout the night and McGaw ended it properly by scoring. Peterborough 5, Trenton 1.

The play went back to Peterborough's end after the face-off and Derocher was called upon to take care of several wicked drives which he did nicely. Finally, however, Fletcher beat him with a nice shot. Peterborough 5, Trenton 2.

Bond came back again and the teams were even, numerically, once more. Peterborough at once resumed the offensive, Denison coming through with another sensational rush, swerving from side to side and scoring on McGiffin from a few feet out. Peterborough 6, Trenton 2.

Denison was chased a moment afterwards for tripping Croft. The play slackened up a little at this stage, the wonderful clip the players had set from the start having its effect. Denison came back again. Palmer, the visitors' right wing, was given a two minute penalty for loafing and had hardly shut the door of the penalty box when Croft followed him for slashing giving Peterborough two men to the good. Things were equalized however, when Sorel was sent to join them, leaving the teams six to five. There was no further scoring until half time.

The pace was equally as fast in the second period. McGaw, Trenton's big cover, was penalized almost at the go-in for slashing and the Petes buzzed around the Trenton nets like bees. McGiffin was the busiest man east of Toronto for a few minutes and distinguished himself by some clever stops. Finally Kelly found an opening and scored. Peterborough 7, Trenton 2.

The next counter came within thirty seconds afterwards. Giroux broke away from the face-off, dodged McGaw, and shooting from outside Powers, fooled McGiffin with a swift low shot. Peterborough 8, Trenton 2.

Giroux was banished for too vigorous use of his body, but the odd man advantage was unproductive of goals for Trenton. In fact Denison got clean through their defence but McGiffin stopped the shot. Giroux was back in the game when Croft secured at centre and wiggled through for a nice goal. Peterborough 8, Trenton 3.

Peterborough were not long in getting in back. Denison got away again and passed neatly to Sorel, whose shot McGiffin failed to handle. Peterborough 9, Trenton 3.

A beautiful rush by Ray from centre was responsible for the next counter. The Petes captain shot away from the Trenton forwards, drew the defence out to one side and passed over to Kelly, who slammed it past McGiffin from a yard out. Peterborough 10, Treton 3.

Palmer got in the road of one of Denison's rushes and was badly dazed, but remained playing. Denison and Ray combined beautifully for another Peterborough counter in thirty seconds. Peterborough 11, Trenton 3.

Sorel stopped Powers with a heavy body check and drew three minutes in the penalty box. Trenton added another goal at this stage, Palmer slipping down the boards and beating Derocher with a pretty drive. Peterborough 11, Trenton 4.

Ray secured the next goal for Peterborough after one of the prettiest plays of the night. Taking a pass from Denison, he side-stepped McGaw, although the big cover-point slashed him viciously, and eluding Powers slipped another past McGiffin. Peshot. Peterborough 13, Trenton 5.

McGaw was waved to the penalty box for the offence, Whitehead properly waiting until the play had been completed before inflicting the penalty.

It remained for Denison to wind up the game with a sensational play. Getting the rubber near his own nets he dodged from end to end, side-stepping the Trenton defence. McGiffin came out to meet him, but "Dennie" eluded him as easily as he had McGaw and Powers and flipped the rubber into the empty net. Peterborough 14, Trenton 5.

Time was called a few moments afterwards. The summary follows:

1 Peterborough, Kelly 4 mins.
2 Peterborough, Sorel 4 mins.
3 Peterborough, Sorel 30 secs.
4 Peterborough, Denison 2 mins.
5 Peterborough, Denison 1.30 mins.
6 Trenton, McGaw 2 mins.

SUDDEN DEATH GAME AT BELLEVILLE MONDAY

Will Decide the Dist ict---O.H.A. Ordered the Game to be Played Either at Port Hope or Belleville---Trenton Won the Toss and Chose the Latter Place.

Peterborough and Trenton will play off for district honours at Belleville on Monday night. Last night's victiry for Peterborough tied the two clubs, with five wins and one loss, and the championship of the district depends upon a sudden-death match on neutral ice.

Tre O. H. A. sub-committee ordered the game to be played at either Belleville or Port Hope on Monday night. Referee Whitehead was instructed to have the two teams settle the matter, but they could not agree. Trenton held out for Belleville and Peterborough wanted Port Hope, and it was decided to flip a coin to decide the matter. Trenton won the toss and the game will be played at Belleville.

The Peterborough team will be identically the same as last night. Lawson Whitehead, who refereed the other three games in the Trenton series, will handle the bell.

KINGSTON FRONTENACS HERE ON TUESDAY

Last Year's Junior Champions Will Clash With the Peterborough Grillers at Brock St. Rink---Game Will be One of the Features of the Hockey Season.

The Kingston Frontenacs, champions of the Junior O. H. A. last year, and so far undefeated this season, will be here Tuesday night to meet the Grillers in a second-round O. H. A. fixture that should be the greatest junior exhibiton of hockey seen here in a decade. The Grillers are not worrying in the least about the big scores Kingston piled up against Picton and Belleville. They say that the Frontenacs will have a different proposition when they come here Tuesday night and are determined to make the visitors extend themselves to the limit. The Grillers must win this game to keep in the running. They are in good shape, and will be able to go the route all right. It will be one grand game of junior hockey and the crowd will be about the biggest of the season. The old town is hockey mad, the winning of the district by the Grillers, and the decisive defeat handed out to Trenton having set the bug buzzing as never before. All the Grillers are requested to meet at the rink at 8 o'clock to-night.

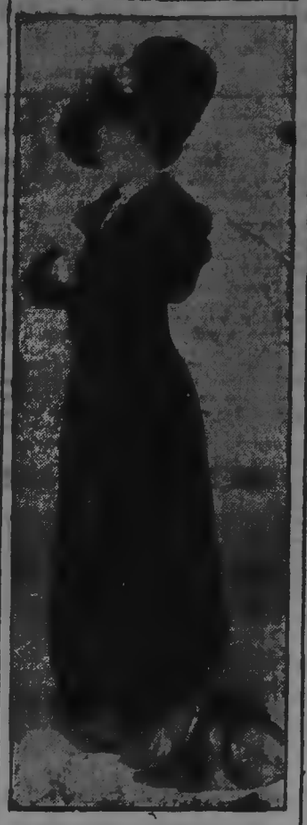
COSTLY LOOKING COAT.

An Imitation Wrap Hard to Tell From the Real Thing.



SMART NEW COAT OF MINIATURE SEAL.

You don't like imitation fur coats? Well, no woman liked them until recently, when the makers have produced such wonderful imitations that they cheat even the trade with them.

Such a deception is to be seen in the long coat pictured of electric seal and imitation Persian lamb. This "lamb" is not the imitation cloth that has passed for fur with which we have been familiar for many seasons. No; it's a product of this season and cannot possibly be told from genuine fur unless closely inspected.

This coat would cost at least $300 if of pelts, and as it stands the price is only $39. Now what do you think of imitation fur coats?

FARMER MAKES A STRONG STATEMENT

Is Convinced That Dodd's Kidney Pills Have No Equal

They cured his Backache and Kidney Disease after two years trial of plasters and medicines failed to bring permanent relief.

Poodiac, King's Co., N.B., Feb. 3. (Special.)—Moses Sherwood, a well-known farmer living near here is convinced that as a Kidney medicine Dodd's Kidney Pills have no equal. In a statement just issued Mr. Sherwood says:

"About eight years ago I hurt my back from lifting. I used plasters and liniment, and wore a wide belt. Those gave me some relief for about two years, when Kidney trouble developed.

"My back was so sore I could not lift any weight, and as it was right in haying time I thought I would not be able to pitch any hay that year.

"Reading of cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills led me to try them, and before I had finished the first box my backache had disappeared and my urine was a healthy colour. I am fifty-one years of age and have been healthy ever since."

You hear of thousands of people who have been cured of Kidney Disease after other so-called remedies have failed to help them. You never hear of anyone trying other remedies after using Dodd's Kidney Pills. They always cure.

XIII.—Diet Hints For the Home

By EUGENE L. FISK, M. D.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

That all softening, overpowering knell, The tocsin of the soul—the dinner bell. —Byron.

TOO often the "tocsin of the soul" invites us to the "toxin" of the stomach. The pure food laws protect us in a great measure from poisonous foods, but they do not prevent us from manufacturing "toxins" or poisons in our own systems by our habits of eating.

It will be many long years before the last word has been said on dietetics, the vegetarians, nutarians, fruitarians, long chewers and short chewers to the contrary notwithstanding. Nevertheless a few general principles to which the everyday man may hold fast are pretty well established.

In trying to feed rationally it is well, as in other lines of effort, to have some ideal or standard, and so before considering the relative value of foods it is necessary to have a definite idea of what really constitutes a food. A food may be defined as a substance that—

First—Is digestible and nonpoisonous.

Second—Furnishes energy or building material to the body.

Varieties of Food.

The most important nitrogenous elements are known as proteids, of which the lean of meat and white of egg are examples. Some vegetables and grains also contain proteids, especially peas, beans, wheat, rye, corn, etc.

The non-nitrogenous elements are divided into fats, carbohydrates (sugars and starches) and salts.

In other words, we must find in our food the same elements that enter into the composition of the body.

The folly of trying to live on any one particular kind of food will be apparent to any one who familiarizes himself with the constitution of the body and its needs. The proteids are required for building material and energy, the carbohydrates and fats for storage and energy and the salts and mineral elements for building purposes and to assist in the chemical processes and exchanges going on in the body.

What Is Digestion?

Digestion is the process of transforming food elements into substances that can be absorbed into the blood through the walls of the digestive tract. If the digestive functions are paralyzed food taken into the stomach acts simply as a foreign body and causes irritation and finally, by its decomposition, poisoning.

The digestive processes are carried on by substances whose exact form and constitution are unknown, termed enzymes or ferments.

But digestion does not begin in the stomach. The saliva contains a very important enzyme, ptyalin, which converts starch into malt sugar. The importance of thoroughly chewing all starch foods, such as cereals, vegetables, bread, pastry, potatoes, etc., will at once be apparent.

"Counting your chews," however, is not advised. The act of chewing should be natural and subconscious. If the attention is directed too closely to the mechanical act of chewing or, in fact, if the mind dwells too intently on the subject of digestion the normal functions are retarded. Count your chews some time and note if your jaws do not ache by the time you reach the twentieth. Count your steps in walking and note whether your limbs do not quickly tire.

If the internal activities of our bodies could be seen in their entirety, even for a few brief moments, it is probable that an unutterable weariness would oppress and stifle us.

Prolonged chewing of meat does not appear to be required. The favorable results from experimenting along this line are probably due to the fact that less meat was taken. The saliva does not digest meat. On the contrary, by prolonged chewing meat is thoroughly saturated with the alkaline secretion of the mouth, which would appear to render it less digestible in the stomach, where digestion can only operate in an acid medium. A good plan to follow is to chew cereals, vegetables, bread, potatoes, pastry and all starchy foods until they disappear down the gullet. This requires no mental effort, and the best possible results will follow. Food eaten in this fashion is more pleasing to the palate, and that itself is stimulating to all the digestive functions.

Stomach Digestion.

The stomach enzyme is "pepsin," which converts proteids into soluble substances called peptones. The digestion of starchy foods is checked in the stomach by the hydrochloric acid of the gastric juice, but the starch digestion is resumed in the small intestine.

Intestinal Digestion.

Here it is acted upon by several enzymes, which complete starch digestion and also convert ordinary cane sugar into grape sugar.

Proteid digestion also proceeds in the intestines, and fats are digested and emulsified so that they can be absorbed.

As previously stated, all these food elements are required either for energy, building material, storage or to carry on the chemical and physical exchanges in the tissues. During these processes the food elements are broken up and many of them literally burned or oxidized, just as a candle burns, with the formation of carbon dioxide and water.

We pass Mulberry trees as we go on our journey, and learn there are more than half a million people engaged in raising silk worms. It is upon the leaves of these trees that the silk worms feed.

The Italian lakes are bordered by the pick of Italian gardens, their blue basins catch the drip from the melting snows, and are set in a land of pink palaces of oranges and lemons. groves, azalias and rhododendron bushes. It is the land of the nightingale, in the thicket and the cuckoo in the forest, and the lark on the upland, and gorgeous lizard in the crevices of the wall, rare shrubberies lead from parterres to porticos, from grotto to grand terrace. These lakes express perennial youth, freshness, joyousness and peace. Their mornings sparkle with plenty of glacires. their noons recall those of Naples. and Venice, and their evenings hushed under the shadows of the great mountains.

We go to Switzerland via the picturesque St. Gothard route, traversing the beautiful valleys of Ticins and Renso on our way to Lucerne. From there we make excursions on the Lake of the Four Cantons to Vitanan and Mt. Rigi, which we ascended. The air grows colder as we go up, we leave the cultivated farms and vineyards, through forests of beeches, chestnuts, walnuts along the mountain side. Now overlooking a beautiful valley, spotted with cottages and now reaching the highlands, where there are only fir and pine trees, and pastures with cows, sheep and goats feeding upon them. Higher still, the trees disappear, and shrubs and strange flowers are alone to be seen. There are many bushes, lovely Alpine roses and creeping Azaleas. There are many small brilliant flowers among the rocks, deep blue, light pink and delicate purple. Blossoms are everywhere, growing even on the snow line. We reach the summit, 5,905 ft. above the sea level. The views are indescribable. At the foot of the mountains we see silvery lakes, in nests of green hills, walled with the snowy peaks, which mirror themselves in the waters. In gorges, roofed by the blue sky, rocks half covered with moss, and scarred by glaciers, precipitously for a thousand feet, and at their feet roar and foam rivers of milk white water as cold as the icy caves in which they were born. We see snowy peaks, one climbing over the other, until they are lost in the blue sky of the horizon. Below is a jumbled mass of green forest and gray rock, and beyond the snow line the glassy lakes and silvery streams reflecting the sun, and the green pastures and the dots and spots on them marking the cattle and the homes of the farmers, while still far below, with our glasses we can see the towns and cities of the plains. Oh, to see the rocks turn to brilliant, beaten copper by the setting sun.

The Swiss people are very strong. They are noted for their power of endurance and bravery; that in past times other nations hired them as soldiers. At Lucerne there is a large lion carved out of the side of the rock, to commemorate the bravery of the Swiss guard defending the king of France. At the time of a revolution the brave Swiss died at their posts rather than admit the mob and this monument has been erected at their native place in praise of their devotion of duty. Leaving Switzerland via Romanshorn we take a boat across Lake Constance to Lindan, and by rail to Munich in Germany. We see men, women and children at work in the fields. There are no fences, the cattle are herded and kept in stables and the cut grass is brought to them. The roads are well kept and smooth as a floor. They form long white strips through the green fields. They are lined with forest trees. They can be seen stretching for miles away over the landscape. We ride along great beds of peat, where the people are digging out their winter fuel and laying it in the sun to dry. This scene recalled to me my travels in Ireland. Munich is noted for its music and it has one of the largest libraries in the world. The kings of Bavaria have spared no expense to beautify the city. Its galleries and museums are vast and large. The royal palace and beautiful park and gardens are characteristic of German life.

MAN OVERCOME BY STORM HAS A TERRIBLE FIGHT WITH THE ELEMENTS

Matthew Dooty, a Toronto Mail Clerk, Has His Feet, Hands, Nose and Ears Badly Frozen—Fell Asleep in the Snow.]

IS IN BAD SHAPE

A terrible fight with the elements which nearly ended fatally was the experience of Matthew Dooty, of Toronto on Saturday night. The victim was employed as a mail clerk on the G. T. R. running between Toronto and Montreal and had decided to spend Sunday with his uncle, Wm. Christie, six miles west of Norwood. He boarded the night express at Toronto, which is due at Norwood about 12.30 p.m. and after arriving at his destination he had to walk about six miles to his uncle's in the face of a howling storm. After he had traversed about three miles of the distance he was overcome and lay down to rest behind apile of ties. He went through this procedure three or four times until he began to feel better, as he thought. He laid down again and went to sleep until a passing freight picked him up next morning in an unconscious condition. Medical examination showed the extremities to be badly frozen. He was brought into Peterborough yesterday on a snow plough and removed to St. Joseph's hospital, where it is feared amputation of some of the extremities will be necessary.

PAINFUL ACCIDENT FROM FALLING ON ICE

On Saturday night Miss Annie Revoy, daughter of Mr. B. Revoy, 292 Woodbine avenue, met with a painful accident on Carlisle avenue. She slipped on an icy place and in falling her right arm came into contact with a sharp point of ice, which cut a deep wound, several inches in length. Dr. Galvin supplied the necessary surgical attention.

Narrow Escape From Dangerous Collision

On Saturday at 1.26 p.m., the Fire Dept. received a call from Box 17, corner Park and Townsend streets, and en route narrowly escaped colliding with a farmer's sleigh filled with children. Had the two rigs collided the results would have been serious, if not fatal. The farmer in question became confused at the approach of the firemen and turned right across their path with the above result. When the firemen arrived at the fire alarm box there was no person to direct them to the supposed fire. The firemen returned to the station, and as soon as the apparatus was replaced, Chief Howard made a trip in the single rig to the locality where the false alarm came from, and in a very short time discovered the offender, who was a boy of about 12 years of age by the name of Ford Campbell. After the names of a number of witnesses had been secured, Chief Howard placed the matter in the hands of Chief Thompson. In consideration of the boy's tender years it was thought best not to prosecute. The boy was given a severe lecture by the Chief of Police and allowed to go with a warning despite the fact that this was his third offence, he having confessed to two previous charges. The dangerous practice of sending in false alarms must be discontinued.

The two chiefs intend to prosecute the next culprit to the full extent of the law. It was an easy matter to get a sufficient number of witnesses to convict the boy in this case, for not a few of the neighbours in the locality were anxious to earn the $50 reward attached to the conviction of persons sending in false alarms.

BRITISH HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT OPENS

With All the Old-Time Splendour and Pomp, Although the Personnel of the House is More Democratic Than Ever Before in its History--Speech From the Throne.

Examiner Special.

LONDON, ENG., FEB. 6.—Although the Parliament itself was probably the most democratic ever gathered in the House of Commons, the ceremonies attendant to-day on the official opening by their Majesties savoured of all the conservatism of the middle ages. Their Majesties rode in state to the House through lines of soldiers and there was a great crowd on the streets, although it was typical dirty London winter weather, raining and freezing. Only the members of Parliament were on hand to witness the ceremony, storms throughout the country preventing many from getting there. The women in attendance were in half mourning.

The following paragraph was all that the King's speech contained in reefrence to the veto legislation. "Proposals will be submitted without delay, settling the relations between the two Houses of Parliament, with the object of securing an effective working constitution."

LAKEFIELD'S DESIRE FOR A CLEAN WATER FRONT

Ask the Assistance of Hon. Mr. Stratton in Helping Them to Secure the Aid of the Government---Deputation From the Council and the Board of Trade.

On Saturday a deputation from the village of Lakefield, consisting of Reeve Tanner, Councillors Richardson, Moore, Watson and Robson and the following members of the Board of Trade, Messrs. Dodge, Baptie, Lillicrap, Graham, Kennedy, Preston and Bravender, waited upon Mr. Stratton asking his cooperation in presenting to the Government the desire of the village to have a clean water front.

Reeve Tanner, speaking for the village, said that Lakefield was anxious to improve its position by making the water front clear to the public and to all its citizens alike, and that this was being done in no narrow spirit of selfishness, sectionalism or antagonism to any person or interest. On the contrary they desired to beautify the village so that the yearly increasing tourists and others would be attracted by its neatness and tidiness and so that the public might have free access to the beach from King to Concession streets. He pointed out that at the present time there were boathouses that were built to the dissatisfaction of the village. They had availed themselves of the courts, and the courts had decided in favour of the village and yet efforts were still being made to thwart the wishes of the council and the citizens.

Mr. A. E. Kennedy presented a petition which he wished to have placed before the Minister of Railways and Canals, declaring the attitude of the village.

A general discussion took place, and Mr Stratton pointed out that the street along the water front belonged to the village and that the boathouses complained of, from his knowledge of the situation, might be looked upon as partly on the street and partly on the public property, the river. He suggested that an arrangement should be carried out by which the village should deed to the Crown the village interest in the water front from King to Concession streets, so as to give the government the power necessary for them to deal with the matter, and that in deeding to the Crown there should accompany the trust a letter pointing out the conditions under which the deed was being handed over. If the Government, on behalf of the people, accepted this trust it would be their duty to see that the wishes of the people were carried out, and the desire of the people of Lakefield in this case was that the whole water front should be cleared of any and all obstructions between King and Concession streets. Mr. Stratton said that he would be quite willing to be the medium to present to the Minister of Railways and Canals the wishes of the deputation but that he, personally, had no control over the matter, only to express to the Minister their views and give their wishes his support. He himself thought that if the village desired to have the water front clear and clean, their wishes should be carried out. Sometimes in bringing these things to a successful issue some persons were put to no inconvenience, but the old principle and practice must prevail that the people must rule.

Mr. McClellan, Superintendent of the Trent Canal, was present and pointed out his inability to do anything in the matter under the conditions that existed at present. He said that if the suggestions made by Mr Stratton were carried out and accepted by the Government he would be perfectly satisfied to act upon those instructions. He recognized that he was a public official to carry out the public interests and he could only act upon instructions.

The Council agreed to pass a by-law conditional upon its being accepted by the Government in the same spirit in which it is issued, if the Government would undertake to have the provisions of the by-law carried out.

The deputation thanked Mr. Stratton for the interest taken and hoped that the results would be satisfactory.

In an interview that an Examiner reporter had after the conference it could be seen that several of the deputation had fire in their eye and that the removal of all these obstructions was a burning question with the villagers. They were quite satisfied that if Mr. Stratton would take up the village case, he would be able to satisfactorily meet the wishes of the people.

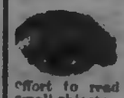
The Care Of The E--Y--E--S



A person in good health, at the age of 45 years, will ordinarily notice a change in the sight, requiring more effort to read fine print, or to see small objects.

It would then be advisable to have the eyes examined by a Competent Eyesight Specialist and fitted with "Preserving or Rest Glasses".

Glasses should be changed usually once in two years.

Headaches are often warnings that the eyes need help and they should not be neglected.

The Eyes are the most important organs of the fine senses, and generally the most abused.

Many Eyes Are Ruined by wearing cheap and imperfect glasses.

THE NON-PERMANENCE OF RICHES.

One of the facilities which the provisions of the Canadian Government Annuities Act affords, is that given to old people of investing their capital with absolute security and safety, and with a much greater return than any other form of investment will give them. A woman of 80 years of age who is living in one of the small villages in Ontario, and who has outlived all her near relatives, has a deposit in the savings bank of $1,500, which is all that remains of a very considerable fortune left her by her husband who predeceased her nearly fifty years ago. This amount is earning her an income of $45 a year, which, needless to say, it not sufficient to provide her with the necessaries of life, and the poor house would have ultimately been her only destiny, as in a little less than six years she would have spent the remainder of her capital, as her living expenses are over $300 a year. One day the little booklet "Comfort and Happiness" found its way into this lady's hands. She perused it carefully and considered its statements thoughtfully, and with the result that she is advised to transfer her $1,500 to the Government. She will then receive an income of $288 every year instead of $45, and the probability is that her life will be very much extended. Certainly her happiness and comfort while she lives will be increased as the difference of $243 a year in her income will mean to her all the difference between poverty and affluence. She may live to be $100—her paternal grandfather did.

Particulars concerning this provident system of investment may be had from your postmaster or from the Superintendent of Annuities, Ottawa, to whom letters may be addressed postage free.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Since confederation our governors-general have been: Viscount Monck, Lord Lisgar, Earl of Dufferin, Marquis of Lorne, Marquis of Lansdowne, Lord Stanley, Earl of Aberdeen, Earl of Minton, Earl Grey. The Duke of Connought is the first member of the royal family sent us, the nearest approach being the Marqhis of Lorne, whose wife was the Princess Louise.

The British Columbia fruit growers are reported, says the Ottawa Citizen, to declare that reciprocity will kill the industry in that province, while in the Niagara district the growers have passed a motion enthusiastically endorsing the agreement. It seems to be pretty much this way in nearly every line. No sooner does one section declare itself than another, perahps on the same industry, goes on record the other way. How would it do, it asks, for the members of parliament, regardless of party, to secure the impartial majority opinion of their constituents on the question and act accordingly?

CANADIAN WHEAT IN AMERICAN MILLS

(Stratford Beacon.)

In the midst of speculation as to what the effect of having Canadian wheat ground in American mills will be, it should be borne in mind that it is ground there now. The mills at Minneapolis find that they need the hard northern wheat to mix with what they have in order to produce the best quality of flour for expor. They have taken advtanage of the law which permits them to collect a refund of 99 per cent. of the duty on all such grain which enters into the composition of flour exported from the country, which means that they can use all they like of our wheat for this purpose and escape with the payment of one per cent. of the duty, thus reducing to practically nothing at all the obstacle to getting what of our wheat they require to enable them to compete against Canadian made flour in England or elsewhere. There are those who think that refusal to ratify the proposed agreement would secure the retention of the Canadian wheat for the use and advantage of our own millers. But this is not so. We cannot prevent American mills from getting Canadian wheat now to convert into flour to send to England, and the advantage of preventing their converting it into flour to be sold in their own country would be doubtful.

THE PROPOSED AUSTRALIAN-CANADIAN PREFERENCE.

(Montreal Herald.)

There appears to be a desire on the part of Australia to arrange the terms of a mutual preference with Canada when the Imperial Conference meets in London in the summer. At the present time Canada and New Zealand are treated like foreign countries in the Australian tariff, and the disposition to enter into closer trade relations with this Dominion cannot be said to have been very strong in the past. Trade has developed slowly, and it continues small despite the efforts that have been made by those who are operating the line of mail steamers between Vancouver and Sydney. One explanation put forward to account for this is that the two countries are not dissimilar in development, however different their climates may be, and that their industries are in many respects alike and not supplementary to each other. The advantage in the balance of the trade that has been created is very decidedly on the side of Canada. The figures for 1909 show that the Australian imports of Canadian produce and manufactures amounted to $3,400.000 in value. The four items which attained any considerable magnitude were canned fish, machinery, timber and printing paper. Australia's exports to Canada were worth only $400.000, and they cannot be said to have represented a single important trade movement.

It is quite apparent that no real effort has been made by Australia to turn her exports towards the Dominion. The fact that the island continent exports to Peru were twice as much as to Canada suggests that in her case trade is not altogether governed by sentiments of race, language, or association within the Empire. It may be that now Australia will respond to the preference which Canada has been prepared to give to all British countries that enter into mutually advantageous trade arrangements, and that concessions will be given and received. This will in all probability be the result if the Commonwealth Ministers are prepared to talk business in a practical way either here or in London.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The United States National Grange will oppose trade agreement with Canada.

The body of Dolphus Drouillard, a farmer, missing for about two months was found in the river near Sandwich. It is supposed he was robbed and murdered.

Andrew Stewart, 102 Ashly street, Hamilton, a roofer, fell off the roof of Canadian Drawn Steel Works on Saturday afternoon, and was probably fatally injured. He fell 65 feet.

An order will be issued by Archbishop Bruchesi, Bishops Emard and Archambeault, directing priests and members of religious orders under them to take no further part in politics.

Sir Thomas Macniece of the Royal Irish Constabulary is in Canada. He is going to take back Abraham Wishart, a sergeant of the same force, wanted at Banbridge, County Down, Ireland, for theft.

Ames-Holden, Ltd., and the James McCready Co., Ltd., two of the largest boot and shoe manufacturers establishments in the Dominion, have been acquired by D. Lorne McGibbon, who will form a new company.

G. W. Sulman, M.P.P., was renominated by the Conservatives of West Kent. Ex-Mayor Smith of Chatham, a candidate for the nomination, indulged in some criticism of Hon. Mr. Hanna, who attended the convention.

Family Feud In Italy.

Naples, Feb. 6.—A family feud at Nicotera, in the Province of Catanzaro, has resulted in scenes in the streets of that town not unlike those of the Sidney street drama in London.

Giuseppe Brancia, a student belonging to a good family, was attacked in the open street by two brothers, Michele and Amedeo Gelanze, belonging to the hostile family. After a few shots had been exchanged, young Brancia fell dead. Roused by the shots, a crowd assembled. Among them were the parents of the dead youth, two of their sons, and a friend of the family, all armed with revolvers.

The two assassins fled. One reached his home, but the other, struck in the knee, fell to the ground. His brother, his father, and others in the house fired from a window on the members of the Brancia family, who returned the fire. In the battle more than 200 shots were exchanged. The fight only ceased on the arrival of carabineers, who entered the house of the Gelanze family and arrested the original assassin as he was firing from the window. They also arrested the elder Brancia.

Several members of both families were wounded. A girl named Angelina Ferraro, who was watching the battle from a doorway, was shot in the stomach.

Name Stricken From Rolls.

London, Feb 6—The name of Lt. Frederick Fermor-Hesketh of the Ninth Lancers, who strangely dropped out of sight last fall, was on Friday stricken from the rolls of the British army because of absence from duty without leave.

A world-wide search for the lieutenant, instituted soon after his disappearance, failed to discover any clue as to his whereabouts. He is 28 years of age and was educated at the Royal Military College at Sandhurst and Trinity College, Cambridge. He is described as a handsome man and of a pleasing personality. He left his mother's residence at Easton Neston Tewcestern, on the afternoon of Oct. 29 after saying that he would return soon for dinner. The last seen of him was on the following morning when he landed from a steamer at Kingstown, Ireland. It has been suggested that he sailed for America. The family can offer no explanation.

Honors For McCurdy.

Havana, Feb. 6.—With practically the entire population of Havana looking on, J. A. D. McCurdy, who recently nearly crossed the Straits of Florida in a bi-plane, made a magnificently spectacular flight yesterday from the drill grounds of Camp Columbia to Morro Lighthouse, which he encircled twice, and returned.

The official time was 16 minutes 12 seconds. The estimated distance is 11 miles. The machine used by McCurdy was a 50-horsepower biplane, and the prize for the flight was $3,000 offered by the city. This, however, is open to competition until Feb. 25.

Officers For the Navy.

Candidates for the positions of naval instructors for the instruction of junior officers are required to be British subjects and to have lived in Canada for two years. They should not be over 27 years of age and should possess an honor degree in mathematics.

The rates of pay range from $4 per day on entry to $10.50 per day, received by a captain-director of naval instruction. Traveling allowances of officers in the naval service are increased and the rates of pay of electrician and chief electricians in the service are revised.

Chinese Whisky Seized.

Ottawa, Feb. 6.—The celebration by the local Chinese colony of the New Year last night, was somewhat marred. License Inspector Enright made three seizures on Saturday night, embracing 25 half cases of Chinese native whisky from local storehouses. The patrol was filled, and it required an express wagon to carry all the goods to the police station. Three cases were seized at the store of Huom Quong, one of the Chinese M.P.'s from Canada. The whisky will be sent to Toronto for analysis, and if it is over proof, cases will be taken at the Police Court later.

Presentations to Archbishop.

Kingston, Feb. 6.—In order to prepare for the ceremony of his enthronement as head of the capital soon, Archbishop Gauthier will leave Kingston Feb. 15. On the evening of the 14th, at St. Mary's Cathedral, the congregation of the parish will present him with an address and $2,000 in gold. A pectoral cross in gold will be presented by the priests of the diocese.

Duke Boosts Rent.

Ottawa, Feb. 6.—Capitalizing a duke, or the landlord and the rent, is the latest problem confronting the residents of Ottawa.

It is scarcely a week since the announcement was made that the Duke of Connaught would be Canada's next Governor-General, and rents are already beginning to show a tendency to rise. In fact some agents are quite frank in stating to holders of leases maturing shortly that a renewal cannot be had except at an advance.

The New Political Spirit And The New British Parliament

The British Parliament, which assembled last Tuesday, and which has occupied the last few days with routine business, will be formally opened by King George and Queen Mary on Monday. The new Parliament promises to be historic, as the author of far-reaching changes in laws and constitution. Varied forecasts of its work are already being published. Nothing, however, is more noticeable in these discussions than the general agreement of students of the subject that whatever this Parliament does or does not accomplish, a new era has dawned in Great Britain, and that neither parliaments nor people can ever be again precisely as they were ten or fifteen years ago. The British Parliament used to be termed the best club in Europe, and the comparison had its aptness. In spite of the distinct cleavage between the parties there were tacit agreements upon many things. Members of Parliament were almost without exception drawn from 'the comfortable classes,' and looked at life from a comfortable and well-satisfied standpoint. The majority is still drawn from these classes, but its attitude of mind is largely changed. If the career of Mr. Lloyd George ended to-day, he has through his famous budget and his general attitude on questions of social reform thrown out a challenge to Parliament and to the nation which neither could refuse to accept. He and others like minded have, in fact, made it impossible for any man or party in future to face the country with the question of Cain, 'Am I my brother's keeper?'

This true Socialism, to use rightly a misused word, is something quite new in practical lines and economics, which have hitherto worked largely upon the Darwinian principles of 'the struggle for existence and the survival of the fittest,' or in more homely language, 'Every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost.' It is interesting to note that this new spirit has affected the Conservative party just as much as the Liberals, although the former has been much less happy in its suggestion of methods. After the election of a year ago Mr. Stead said: "The astounding but transcendent fact in connection with this election is the capture of practically more than half of the county seats in England by promises and 'pledges on the part of the Tory party, 'which embody the most dangerous 'and the most advanced doctrines of 'Socialism. It is amazing the extent 'to which men can bind themselves 'to the true significance of their own 'acts. . . . The "right to work" formulated hitherto only by the extreme 'Labour party in the House of Commons has been transferred holus-bolus to the programme of the Conservative party. "Tariff Reform means 'work for all. Tariff Reform means 'higher wages for everybody." What 'is this but an assertion that the 'state, by the exercise of its authority, 'is able if it pleases not only to provide work for everybody, but to increase the wages of all those who 'are employed? This is Socialism pure 'and simple—Socialism of a far more 'lurid hue than anything than can be 'put down to the account of Mr. Lloyd 'George."

Similarly Mr. Sidney Low recently catalogued in the 'Fortnightly' some of the meditated Radicalisms of the Conservative party. They comprised: (1) Abolition of the House of Lords as at present constituted, and of the parliamentary privileges of the Peers. (2) Creation of a new Second Chamber or Senate, with members appointed by election, nomination and ex-officio qualifications. (3) Statutory limitation of the number of members of the Second Chamber, and consequent surrender of the prerogative of the Crown to create Peers of Parliament at its own discretion. (4) Abrogation of the right of the Uper Chamber to reject a Money Bill. (5) Introduction of the Referendum, or Poll of the People, to determine disputes between the two Houses of Parliament. (6) Extension of the method of Direct Reference to the People to 'important measures of legislation. (7) Further extension of this method to (1) the general principles of financial and fiscal changes, and (2) the actual Budget proposals submitted by a Government. (8) Redistribution of seats so as to correct electoral inequalities. (9) Acceptance of the principle of one man one vote. He adds the comment: 'If the Tory Revolution were to be 'consummated, the world would at 'length behold a spectacle which men 'have dreamed of, but never seen, the 'spectacle of pure democracy disposing 'of the destinies of a great nation and 'a great empire.' All this is enough to make the old Conservative leaders turn in their graves. The only one who might be expected to see the humour of it would be Disraeli, who never hesitated to 'go one better' than the most radical of his Radical opponents. Students of Carlyle will remember that seventy years ago in his 'Chartism' and elsewhere he predicted this new attitude of mind on the part of Parliament and people. Lord Rosebery—though now he has forgotten it—in the heyday of his powers foretold the change. It has, however, come almost as unexpected as it is welcome by the toiling and struggling millions of the British Isles. Such a keen political observer as the Russian Count Witte says that as other constitutional countries finally take their keynote from England, the new spirit will yet permeate Europe and the world.

FREIGHT CONGESTION AS RESULT OF STORM BLOCKADE

Montreal and eastern points are suffering from freight congestion these days owing to the storm blockade, which has affected all three lines, the C.P.R., G.T.R. and C.N.R.

Five crews left Havelock for Toronto on Saturday with just a caboose in tow. The passenger service is reported as being normal, with the exception of two or three trains which were stalled down in the eastern provinces. Very little freight has passed through Peterborough during the last four days.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Public Building, Tillsonburg, Ontario," will be received until 4 P.M., on Tuesday, February 28, 1911, for the construction of a Public Building at the place mentioned.

Persons tendering are notified that tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed forms supplied, and signed with their actual signatures, stating their occupations and places of residence. In the case of firms, the actual signature, the nature of the occupation and place of residence of each member of the firm must be given.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honorable the Minister of Public Works, equal to ten per cent. (10 p.c.) of the amount of the tender, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,
R. C. DESROCHERS,
Secretary.

Department of Public Works,
Ottawa, January 31, 1911.

Newspapers will not be paid for this advertisement if they insert it without authority from the Department.

"THE INNOCENT MURDERERS"

By Wm. Johnston and Paul West

"Only $16.53! Why, Mr. Fox, there must be some mistake. There must be! We—he had over five thousand dollars here!"

The cashier smiled pityingly. He knew something was wrong.

"Your husband drew exactly five thousand dollars by check, yesterday morning," he said:

"Five thousand dollars!" Mrs. Hopkins wailed the words, as she realized it all. Not satisfied with abondoning her and her children, the scoundrel had taken their savings of years, their all, leaving her to face poverty. She turned upon the cashier.

"Oh! Oh!" she cried. "He drew it, and you let him draw it! You had no right to do it. Why did you? It was my money! My money, saved by pinching and denying! You had no right!"

"Excuse me," said the old man, "the money was in your husband's name, and under the laws he had a right to draw it whenever he pleased."

"But you must have known——" Mrs. Hopkins could go no further. She realised that she would be showing her hand. This she resolved not to do under any circumstances. She must have the money with which to pay Sullivan. She turned to the cashier again, endeavouring to be calm.

"I did not know," she said, "that Professor Hopkins contemplated drawing quite so much money. He—he was unexpectedly called away. I—I must have a hundred dollars to-day—at once. Is there not some way it could be arranged?"

"I wonder what she wants the money for?" thought Mr. Fox, but seeing her troubled face, he decided not to ask her.

"If you really must have it," he said, "I guess we can arrange it. The professor's salary is always paid on the twentieth. If you will promise to deposit that promptly I guess we can let you have this hundred dollars."

Mrs. Hopkins promised blindly. She must pay the detective now. The necessity was more urgent than ever. So she took the bills Mr. Fox handed her, thrust them into her purse, and hurried home.

She had scarcely closed the door of her house behind her when she heard a ring of the bell. It must be the detective. She ran to open the door, but through the side lights in the hall she saw that it was not Sullivan, but a student. What could he want Her curiosity almost impelled her to let him in, but she hesitated. He might, of course, have some word from her husband; but it could be nothing of importance. Her vanished spouse surely would not send her any clue to his whereabouts Besides, she feared that she could not maintain composure before a stranger, and she did not wish to betray her feelings again, as she had at the bank. No; he could ring. So, in response to the student's repeated pulls at the bell, she kept silence, and finally had the satisfaction of seeing him go away.

Detective Sullivan, in the meantime, was busy. He rose early, and, acting on the clue furnished him by Gordon's late visit to the railroad station, set about discovering what other means of getting out of Graydon there might be, other than the railroad. This had been his intention from the beginning, as he realized that so prominent a person as Professor Hopkins would not, if he wished to cover his tracks, try to leave town from so public a place as the railroad station, if there were any other way of disappearing.

New England is a network of trolley lines. Sullivan found that, while no street car line ran directly through Graydon, a main line was only two miles distant. By walking that far anyone could take the trolley to one of half a dozen towns where railroad connection could be made for Boston and other cities. If, therefore, Ernesta Frost and Hopkins were in Graydon so late the preceding day as to make Gordon suspect that they had not gone by the last train, it was most likely that they had walked to the trolley line, under cover of darkness, and thus thrown suspicion off their movements.

As to the freshly written note which the detective had discovered on the laboratory door, the night before, if it were not written by Hopkins, somebody must have known that he was going. To find out who wrote the note was, then, the first work for him to do.

When he reached the college building he noted, with a feeling of satisfaction, that the wheelbarrow and spade were just where he had seen the four men leave them. He would have another look at the wheelbarrow, and he went toward it. He stood bending carelessly over it, when a shadow fell across his shoulder. Looking up suddenly he saw the face of Dr. Fischer, for a second, peering out of a classroom window just overhead. The face was frightened, thought Sullivan, and he remembered it as one of those that he had seen, the night previous, at the moment the match was lighted.

"There's something mighty funny about this business," said the detective to himself. "If it wasn't a sure enough elopement I might be inclined to think—anything!"

He noted that the wheelbarrow bore a mark, "Graydon College," branded on the side. On the spade there was no mark.

"I'll remember that," he said to himself. "In fact, I guess it'll pay to remember anything I see or hear around here!"

It was after nine o'clock; the Dean had dispersed the crowd about the laboratory door and sent messengers to Mrs Hopkins and Ernesta Frost's house. The college offered an appearance of its usual calm, no matter what might be going on beneath the surface. Detective Sullivan encountered nobody but a few students as he went into the building and up the stairs to the laboratory. Before the door stood a short, oldish man, critically examining the note which was still pinned to the door. Sullivan stepped up behind him and said:

"I beg your pardon, sir; but are you Professor Hopkins?"

Sullivan knew that the man was not Hopkins, and accosted him in this way merely to make an excuse for his presence near the laboratory. Then ensued his conversation with the Dean, and the latter's gracious effort to direct him to Professor Snyder's room. This was the moment for action. Sullivan slyly took the note from the door, thanked the Dean for his kindness and hurried out of the building.

He made his way directly to Mrs. Hopkins' house and was soon seated beside her in the parlour.

"Have you caught them?" she demanded of him.

"Not quite," said he, "but I am on their track. They cannot escape. I have strong clues. Now, before I go any further, have you——"

"I have," said Mrs. Hopkins, thrusting the money which she had drawn from the bank into his hand, "and what do you think?"

Whereupon she poured into the detective's astonished ears the story of Professor Hopkins' withdrawal of the family funds from the Graydon Bank.

"The scoundrel!" he exclaimed. "I beg your pardon, ma'am, for speaking of your husband that way; but he is. Any man that would do that would—and you say that this hundred dollars is your last cent?"

"Worse than that," sobbed Mrs. Hopkins. "It is drawn against his monthly salary not yet received, and that is only $150."

"Here, ma'am," said Sullivan, putting the money on the parlour table. "Take this. You pay me when the case is done, an' I've caught him, and made him give you back the money he's stolen. Yes, stolen!" He would not listen to the woman's protestations that she must pay, to keep her word. Closing the incident he continued, suddenly confronting her with the note which he had plucked from the laboratory door:

"Look at this now, and tell me, do you know whose writing it is?"

Mrs. Hopkins brushed the tears away from her eyes and looked at the note. As she read it she was almost overcome. She did not for the moment notice that the handwriting was not that of her husband, and took it to be a word from him. Not a word to her, but a word—it was a solace, no matter what she might think of him. The detective continued:

"No," said Mrs. Hopkins, "it is not his writing. It is——"

"Whose?"

"I don't——"

"Think! Think of all the college professors! Is it Gordon's?"

"Wait a moment," said Mrs. Hopkins. She went to a table, from a drawer in which she took out an autograph album. In it were the names of the faculty, with expressions of sentiment from most of them. She handed it to the detective, who turned the pages rapidly. When he came to the page on which Snyder had written he gave a start.

"That's the one," he said. "Look for yourself!"

"I should think so," said Mrs. Hopkins. "What does that mean?"

"Simply that Professor Snyder was asked by your husband to put this note on his laboratory door, which he did as late as half past nine last night."

"Then Professor Snyder——"

"Can put us right! And leave it to me, ma'am, he's got to."

CHAPTER TEN

Professor Snyder's Falsehood.

Tuesday proved a day of unspeakable torture for Messrs. Rice Snyder, Fischer and Gordon. They crept to the college guiltily. Snyder was the first to arrive, and as he entered the building he noted the general excitement. Instinct told him it had to do with the events of the previous night and curiosity—the curiosity that draws the murderer back to the scene of his crime—forced him to mount the stairs to the second story. He saw the crowd around the laboratory and his heart sank. What had they discovered? Learning, however, that they knew nothing further than they could read in the note which he had written and pinned to the door, he was relieved, and started down to his class room, when the Dean asked him if he knew where Professor Hopins had gone. Snyder's reply was a denial.

Fischer and Rice met in the hall. They, too, became aware of the air of unrest and mystery, and stopped at the laboratory to see what it was. When the Dean made his inquiry of them they shook their heads and looked at each other. Then they went to their rooms.

As Fischer, deeply troubled, prepared for the day's work, he happened to glance out of the window. They had left the wheelbarrow directly beneath it. To his dismay he saw a man, a stranger, looking, critically into the barrow as though he suspected something. The man raised his head and saw Fisher. The latter turned crimson and drew back from the window. What did all this mean? He hurried to Rice's room to tell him of the occurrence, and transferred part of his awful burden of fear to that gentleman.

Doctor Told Her She Did Not Have A Pint Of Good Blood In Her Body.

Mrs. Dosithe P. Cormier, Middle Sackville, N.B., says:

"In the spring of 1907 I was all run down, and the doctor told me I had not a pint of good blood in my body. I took different remedies from doctors, but they did not seem to do me any good. After having taken a lot of different other kinds of medicine, and they did not seem to benefit me, I was almost in despair and did not know what to do until my husband met a lady and told her about my sickness and she told him to try Burdock Blood Bitters as she had received the greatest benefit from using it. My husband went and bought me a bottle, and after having taken it I felt better, so I kept on using one bottle after another until I had taken six in all and then I was strong and well. I am positive that my being alive to-day is due to the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. One spring since then I was not feeling very well and had a lot of work to do. I thought I would procure a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters and after I had taken two I was able to do a lot of hard work all the summer, and I never felt better in my life. In the winter of 1906 I had Pneumonia, and it left me with a severe pain in the left side. Every morning when I would get out of bed I had to sit down for a while it was so painful. After I had used Burdock Blood Bitters the pain disappeared completely. It has also cured me of bleeding piles. I have received so much benefit from Burdock Blood Bitters that you may publish this as it may help others as it has me."

WEDDING BELLS

WHITTINGTON—STEWART.

A very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday, Feb. 1, at 5.30 p.m., at the home of the late Mr. Alexander Stewart, Otonabee, when his daughter, Clara Alexandra, was united in marriage to Mr. John Whittington. The bride was given away by her brother, Melville, and entered the drawing room to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, which was played by Miss Queenie Matchett.

The bride and groom were unattended and stood under an arch of evergreens, illuminated by wax candles. The ceremony was performed by Rev. D. A. Mackenzie, Centreville. The bride looked handsome in a very pretty navy blue silk dress which was worn by her mother at her wedding. She carried a beautiful bouquet of roses and lily of the valley.

After congratulations, guests to the number of 50, partook of a dainty dejeuner. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and valuable gifts. Mr. and Mrs. Whittington will reside in Otonabee, and carry with them to their future home the best wishes of a large circle of friends for future prosperity and happiness.

THE WEATHER

The lowest temperature yesterday (in the morning) was 5 degrees below zero. The lowest the mercury went last night was 9 degrees below. There has been a strong east wind all day which in addition to the low temperature has made it bitterly cold.—W. P.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

As the twig is bent, so is the tree inclined."

I wonder if any truer application of the old adage can be made than to a child's reading.

Start a child to reading some of the really fine books written for children, and some of the really fine boooks not written especially for children, but simple enough to interest them, and by and by you will have a grown man or woman capable of enjoying—not just reading because he ought to—but capable of enjoying good literature.

Leave a child to read indiscriminately upon a prodigested diet of the average harmless but valueless child's books, and by-and-by you will have a man or woman with a weakened literary digestion, capable of enjoying nothing heartier than the current novel or the average magazine.

I don't mean merely a censorious oversight that says, "Do not read this or that," but a constructive, suggestive oversight that says, "Why don't you get this or that book out of the library? I'm sure you'll like it."

I have occasionally been asked by mothers who do seem to feel this responsibility to give them a list of good books for children to read, and for them and for the benefit of any other mothers who may be awakened to this responsibility, I submit the following little list.

It is compiled with the assistance of several excellent children's librarians. It contains books suitable for children from five to sixteen years, but does not, of course, claim to be exhaustive, only suggestive. Anyone who wishes to give a child books at any time might find the list valuable, as they are all books worth owning.

Defoe—Robinson Crusoe.

BLOOD BAD IN THE WINTER

Is it any wonder that the system becomes poisoned with impure waste matter in the winter time, when you think of the artificial life we lead?

With doors and windows tight shut we breathe the same air over and over again until it is incapable of purifying the blood.

In vain effort to cast the poisons out of the system the liver and kidneys are worked over time until they too are played out. Then comes the pains in the back, the headaches, the attacks of constipation and indigestion.

The quickest and most certain way to overcome this condition is by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They act definitely and directly on the liver and kidneys, awaken them to renew energy in filtering poisons from the bowels and remove the cause of indigestion, backache and other body pains.

You are not experimenting when you use Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They are unique in their combined action on the liver and kidneys and for this reason stand without a rival as a means of purifying the blood and cleansing the filtering and digestive systems.

Every Woman Can Have Beautiful Abundant Lustrous Hair

The clever women of Canada have learned that Parisian Sage possesses the peculiar power to turn dull, lifeless looking hair into lustrous, fascinating hair.

And that is why a head of dull appearing hair is a rarity nowadays, for why should any woman neglect the opportunity to make her hair beautiful when it adds so greatly to her charms.

Parisian Sage not only beautifies the hair, but it makes hair grow abundantly, stops it from falling out and removes every trace of dandruff.

It is the ideal hair dressing for the whose family because it is not sticky or greasy and possesses a refreshing and invigorating quality not found in ordinary hair preparations.

It makes the scalp feel splendid the minute you put it on the head. Sold by Wm. Madill and druggists everywhere for 50 cents a large bottle or postpaid on receipt of price from the Giroux Manufacturing Co., Fort Erie, Ont. The girl with the Auburn hair is on every package.

As unclean hair brushes and combs attract dandruff germs, they should be washed frequently and when possible dried in the sun.

WANT A BRIDGE BUILT ACROSS PIGEON CREEK

Deputation Representing the Victoria County Council Waited Upon the Member for West Peterborough and the Superintendent of the Canal on Saturday.

A deputation representing the Victoria County Council, composed of the Ex-Warden, Treasurer McNeillie and the Reeve of Emily on Saturday afternoon waited upon the member for West Peterborough, Mr. Stratton and Mr. McClellan the superintendent of the Trent Canal, with a view to having a bridge constructed across Pigeon Creek ,connecting the township of Ennismore with the township of Emily. The latter township contends that in the raising of the water, some of the roads of the township have been injured at certain seasons of the year, and that in consequence the township is entitled to such damages as the cost of repairs and improvements would necessitate.

The commitee desired the cooperation of Mr Stratton and the Superintendent of the Canal to aid them in getting such assistance as would recoup the township for the loss, undertaking to have the amount awarded them expended in cooperation with a grant from the Ontario Government in the erection of a bridge that would be of great material assistance to the township of Emily and a great convenience to the township of Ennismore as well.

Mr. Stratton said that he had no objection if he could be of any assistance to aid the officers of the township in presenting their claims to the Dominion Government and asking the Government to cooperate with the Ontario Legislature in having their wishes met. He would ask the Government to have an inspection made of the damages alleged to have been sustained by the township and to have a report made by the Government valuator at as early a date as possible. He would also request the Department of Railways and Canals to have a report made upon the estimated cost of the proposed bridge and of the approaches. Mr. Stratton said that if he could co-operate with the member for Victoria, Mr. Hughes in this matter to the advantage of the townships or counties concerned, he would be glad of it. Peterborough desired to live on harmonious terms with its neighbours and had facilitated at one time the construction of the road from Cavan to Monaghan, and if he could help the people of Emily in making their distance shorter to Peterborough he would be assisting in accomplishing a good work

It is expected that a report will be made to the Government in the course of a fortnight and the committee will confer with the Government with a view of ascertaining whether the desires of the two townships can be accomplished.

Boys' Hobby Exhibition Will Be Great Success

The Boys' Hobby Exhibition, at the Y.M.C.A. is the big thing now, and is causing all kinds of talk and keen rivalry amongst the boys who are getting their exhibits ready. Who can enter Any boy in the city between the ages of twelve and eighteen. What they can enter: Mostly anything a boy makes or collects, but cigar bands. When can they enter? Beginning Feb. 13. This is an exhibition at which the parents of the boys and the general public will attend, and have a good time, at the same time help the boys as the proceeds wil go towards the paying for new books for the Boys Department Library.

A good programme is being arranged; side shows will be very much in evidence, and altogether it will be an Exhibition well worth attending. Keep the date in mind, Feb. 17, afternoon and evening.

A Positive Cure For Indigestion and Dyspepsia.

Rev. Father Morriscy

Have you ever felt a leaden weight in the pit of the stomach—a feeling of fulness, with belching of wind and perhaps severe pain? Then you know how indigestion feels. It makes a person sarcastic and cranky—it causes misery after every meal—it saps the strength.

FATHER MORRISCY'S "No. 11" TABLETS

—one of the best of the late priest-physician's remarkable prescriptions—positively cure Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Sick or Sour Stomach, Heartburn, and all the suffering that comes from a "bad stomach."

Each tablet will digest 1¾ pounds of food—a good meal.

Take "No. 11" Tablets regularly, avoid articles of food that you have found disagree with you, and you will be benefitted from the start and soon cured.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT.

GOD LOVES YOU

Why God Loves Man--The Divine Program for Human Salvation Only Beginning.

Brooklyn, N.Y., Feb. 5.—Brooklyn Academy of Music was crowded today to hear Pastor Russell on God's mindfulness of man from the text, "What Is Man, That Thou Art Mindful of Him?" (Psalm viii, 4.) The large audience listened with intense interest, so that a pin-drop could have been heard. The speaker said:

For some weeks our city will be in the throes of a "Revival of Religion." Hundreds of ministers have placed themselves and their congregations under the leadership of Rev. Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander, the famous singer, for the purpose of reviving religion; for the purpose of rescuing human souls from eternal torment, as the proposition is generally understood. Business men have subscribed large sums of money for this noble work of rescue, reasoning that if thousands of dollars are spent in fire-fighting apparatus for the protection of the human life for a few years, the services of Messrs. Chapman and Alexander will be cheap if they carry away twenty-five thousand dollars for a month's work, provided the results show a goodly number rescued from eternal torment.

We sympathize with some of these large-hearted and open-handed business men who give their money for so laudable an object. Yet we cannot think that many, nay not even a majority, of those who contributed this sum have done so conscientiously. We cannot think that one-half of them believe in the teaching of eternal torture, nor can we think that more than one-tenth of them believe that a practical conversion is signified by a response to an invitation which implies a preference for heavenly bliss rather than for eternal anguish. However, it is for those who pay the money to exercise their own consciences in this matter, and it is none of our business what they decide.

We sympathize also with the hundreds of pastors of this city who have joined in this movement, which they hope will increase their congregations and church revenues, but these pastors know in reality that the Bible does not teach eternal forment, and they have discarded the Bible anyway in favor of Higher Critical-Infidelity. Theirs is an unhappy and stultified position.

We sympathize still more with the poor people whose education along spiritual lines is almost wholly neglected, and who live in constant fear of the God who loves them and in dreadful misunderstanding of the Bible, which he has given them. Between the imperfectness of the translation and the coloring of prejudice and the twist of misunderstanding of some parables and symbols they are helpless in the presence of educated men who teach inferentially what they do not themselves believe. Alas! poor "common people!" that you should be betrayed by those in whom you repose confidence and whom you unwittingly pay for keeping you in the dark by taking from you the key of knowledge. Truly, "My people perish for lack of knowledge" (Hosea iv, 6).

But still more we sympathize with God, whose name is dishonored, whose Justice, Mercy, Wisdom, Love and Power are traduce, nay, vilified. We say to ourself, How wonderful the patience of God, which for centuries has endured blasphemous misrepresentations of his good character and Divine Plan of the Ages! Well does he tell us that as the heavens are higher than the earth, so his plans and methods in respect to our salvation are higher than ours—not lower. Well does he tell us that human fear toward him is taught by the precepts of men, not according to his Word (Isaiah xxix, 13). We can see reasons why the Lord has kept silence toward the heathen, but we are perplexed that judgments have so long delayed to come upon those who, knowing better, still slander the great and holy name and misrepresent the Divine purposes.

What would a chief shepherd do to an under-shepherd found misleading the sheep, guiding them into poisonous pastures? We believe that he would take the sheep from them, even though he allowed them still to shepherd the goats. And it is quite our thought that such a judgment impends over Christendom and that all shepherds, false to their trust, will be dismissed ignominiously, and that very soon!

Some urge that we should do evil in order to obtain good results; that we should misrepresent the Divine character in order to get people to join the Church. Is it urged that some may, as a result of this evangelistic movement, lead a more orderly and decent life hereafter as citizens, and that we should be willing to join in traducing our Creator, in order to obtain this result? We answer, No, a thousand times, No! In our judgment the perversions of the Truth, the dishonoring of our Maker, the instilling of misconceptions into the minds of the people, is an awful cost to pay, even if the results should be a hundred times as great as promised. Well did Jesus say, "Ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte and when he is gained, you make him twofold more a child of destruction than yourselves" (Matthew xxiii, 15). The conversions achieved by misrepresentations of God instil a poison into the heart difficult to eradicate, impervious to the Truth.

It grieves me to be obliged conscientiously thus to characterize a movement who has, at least, an outward appearance of godliness. It will attract to me the venom of those whose hypocrisies I criticize. It is not the money that they will collect that [illegible] who give it honestly thinking thus to serve the Lord, [illegible] with belief and unbelief and the slander against the holy name of the Creator and the further bamboozling and throwing of dust into the eyes of the common people — this awakens, and should awaken, righteous indignation. And the more others do not speak, the more I must speak in denunciation and warning to the people to search the Scriptures and become undeceived.

The teachings of all of the creeds of the "Dark Ages" which have come down to us, although they contain many good things, are so befogged with misrepresentations of God as to be a stench to our nostrils and a menace to our spiritual health. They picture to us a God either reckless and careless of the future interests of his human creatures, or else as powerless to aid any but the few. They picture to us millions going down to torture during the four thousand years before Jesus came into the world to seek and to save that which was lost. They picture to us that since his coming only a handful, comparatively, of the human family have become his disciples, footstep followers, "Meet for the inheritance of the saints in light." All the others, according to our Protestant creeds, Calvinistic and Arminian, have gone down to eternal torture. From this standpoint it is that Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander are the heroes of the hour, saving a few more whom God would have otherwise neglected, or, as some might say, saving them in spite of Divine foreordination to the contrary.

But what say the Scriptures? Does the Bible substantiate such theories?

Nay, nay! In harmony with our text, the entire Bible reveals to us a God as infinite in his Wisdom and Power as in his Justice and Love. Our text tells us that he is mindful of his creatures—humanity. He was mindful in the very beginning when he created man and foreknew his fall. Away back there he foretold that "the Seed of the woman should ultimately bruise the Serpent's head." Away back there he indicated his Divine purpose, in due time, to redeem man from destruction (not from eternal torment, for none were sentenced to torment).

The skins which covered the nakedness of our first parents cost the lives of animals, and thus God typically prophesied "better sacrifices" for the perfect covering of man's sin and shame. In God's dealings with the nation of Israel, he gave numerous types foreshadowing the later blessings, following "the better sacrifices" of the antitypical Atonement Day—blessing all the families of the earth.

God was mindful of man's interests all that time (for over forty-two centuries), even though, during that long period, nothing was actually accomplished. The salvation was purposed, was planned, was assured, but must be waited for until God's due time.

When Jesus appeared the world was still in sin—even the one little nation of Israel was still under Divine condemnation because of sin — because their typical sacrifices were insufficient and merely foreshadows of "the better sacrifices," which God was mindful later to bring to pass.

Those "better sacrifices" are not yet completed, though nearly so, we believe. They consist of "the Man Christ Jesus who gave himself a "Ransom for all," and also of the faithful few whom he has accepted as his disciples and who are walking in his steps, "presenting their bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God," through their Redeemer (Rom. xii., 1).

God is still mindful of humanity. He has not forgotten his responsibilities as a Creator. The theory that God shirks his responsibility and allows the ninety thousand who die daily to drop into eternal torment because of carelessness or indifference on our part is not true—is not Scriptural.

God affirms his own responsibility for every feature of his Plan. He declares, "My Word that is gone forth out of my mouth shall not return unto me void; it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it" (Isaiah lv, 11). Hence we should understand that God sent no message to convert the world during the first forty-one hundred and fifty years after Adam's creation, because he did not will the world to be converted then. He had no message for the world. His time had not come. St. Paul refers to this, saying, "The times of that ignorance God winked at" (took no notice of). But now, since the death of Jesus, the Just for the unjust, and the opening up of possibilities for a future life through a resurrection, God commands all men everywhere to repent. And all who become disciples of Jesus are privileged to be ambassadors for God, to convey to all who have the hearing ear a message of God's mercy—to bind up the broken-hearted, to declare the acceptable year and the opening of the prison doors.

But the work in the present time is restricted. Not all could possibly be blessed now—and the elect must have an ear to hear and must be "drawn of the Father" and must walk in the Master's footsteps and thus become copies of God's dear Son. This is the only work thus far, and it is not to the world, but to the few who have the hearing ear and who leave the world to become followers of Jesus.

The Bible declares that now God is sending forth a "high calling in Christ." Those called during this Gospel Age are called to walk in Jesus' footsteps as saints, "presenting their bodies living sacrifices," suffering with their Master and for his cause. The promise to all these is that, if faithful, they shall share with the great Redeemer his Messianic Throne [illegible] the Redeemer, Lord and Head over ing his sufferings they will share his exaltation to the divine nature and its glory, honor and immortality. And these will participate in the glorious Messianic work soon to begin.

If evangelists and others would preach this "narrow way" of the Gospel of Christ, how we would rejoice with them, and how soon would the true knowledge of God's love spread over the world and appeal to the hearts of all! How gladly we would have them join us in this message and in the further message that God's Plan in the next Age will reach Adam and all of his posterity—"every man," just and unjust — living and dead! They should be told of the "Times of Restitution" that are nearing. They should be advised that if they neglect the "high calling," the "election" now in progress, they will, nevertheless, have responsibility and be liable for stripes or punishments, in proportion as they know right from wrong and wilfully do the wrong.

What we plead for is that the educated ministers and laymen should cease to do evil, cease to misrepresent and traduce our gracious Creator. We warn them that he will not hold guiltless those who take his name in vain—will not hold guiltless those who atrociously malign his name.

As for methods for the calling of the "elect" in this Age, we urge that neither we nor others are wise enough to improve upon the methods and practices of Jesus and the Apostles. We urge that any deviation from their Gospel of "good tidings of great joy for all people" must be injurious. We urge that we of to-day should preach, as St. Peter did at Pentecost, not only of the "high calling" of the Church, but also of the world's blessings—"Times of Restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began" (Acts iii, 19-23).

We urge that such a general presentation of Divine Justice would appeal to all true hearts and heads in the present time much better than any "expediency" preaching and prepare all mankind the better for the future as well as for the present life.

The great revival of religion will come to the world immediately following the great time of trouble with which this Gospel Age is shortly to end. Then, under the blessing of Messiah's Empire, all the ignorance and superstition and misrepresentation of God and of his Plan will flee away before the presence of the Sun of Righeousness, which will illuminate the world.

Then will come God's time for blessing the world. His Kingdom, established in the world with power and great glory, will rule it with a rod of iron, compelling prompt obedience to the Divine Law, both in letter and in spirit. The obedient will be helped upward and will progress step by step to perfection, while the rebellious, after proper testing and provings, "will be destroyed from amongst the people"—in the "Second Death."

Why should we not tell the people plainly that there is a special salvation now in progress and that a common or general one will follow for the non-elect? Why not explain to them the great reward of the present time—joint-heirship with Messiah in the Kingdom for which we pray, "Thy Kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as in heaven?" Why not explain to the world that restitution is the portion of all who do not choose to sacrifice, but that, according to their present course, upward or downward, will be their standing future—more or less disapproved and requiring more or less of chastisements or stripes, difficulties, for their extrication, for their uplifting.

Much better could we understand the giving of money to tell mankind the Truth and to glorify the name of our God and our Redeemer. But we are totally at a loss to comprehend the attitude of those who give time and money for a little outward show and the grievous inward injury to the many through a misrepresentation of their Creator and his Word.

To the out-of-Church millions whom I address through the newspapers weekly I suggest that the power of the Truth is love, and that faithfulness to our Lord and to his Message in the Bible are the two greatest privileges that such possibly come to any of us, and that we should each and all unite hearts and voices in showing forth the praises of him who has called us out of darkness into his marvellous light." Thus we may be helpful to other wanderers seeking "the Way, the Truth and the Life." "The Love of God constraineth us."

SERIES OF ADDRESSES ON "PAIN" WAS CONTINUED

Rev. C. H. Carpenter Spoke on the "Relief of Pain" at the Usual Sunday Afternoon Meeting of the League of Goodfellowship.

AN INTERESTING ADDRESS

The usual meeting of the St. John's Guild of Good Fellowship was held in the Princess Theatre on Sunday afternoon when the address was entitled "The Relief of Pain,55 and formed one of a series on the subject of Pain.

The Rev. C. Carpenter reviewed the teaching of the last meetings, and proceeded to show that Christianity was responsible for the changed view with regard to the care of the body, inasmuch as our Lord's ministry was so much concerned with the healing of disease. His followers left bound to continue in His steps, hence the rise of the great hospital system, and the progress in medical knowledge and relief. Referring to scriptural times it was noted that the Egyptians had a fairly wide knowledge of medicine and dentistry, and that the Israelites in bondage received and accepted much of their teaching. They had their practised midwives, and physicians were paid out of the public treasury. Their doctors were their embalmers and appear to have been specialists. Egypt also sent doctors to Cyrus and Darius. Throughout the Bible we find mention of physicians and apothecaries, although descriptions of disease are very loose. The Jews used salves, balms, poultices, oil and mineral baths as external means of healing, and herbs for internal complaints. Jeremiah gives a list of medicines; the Book of Wisdom speaks of plasters; and Solomon is supposed to have studied medicine and anatomy. The inspection of lepers was part of the priest's work, although in later days medical men were attached to the temple. St. Luke was evidently a skilled physician, and the Bethesda of the gospel, meaning "House of Charity" may have been a collection of huts around a medicinal spring.

"Christianity with its teaching of the brotherhood of man emphasized the duty of visiting and ministering to the sick "in the name of Christ," and the care of the afflicted and diseased became a first charge. From St. James' reference to anointing, with prayer, it is evident that the early church retained the necessity of ministering to the bodies as well as the souls of its members.

In ancient times hospitals (from "hospes," a latin word meaning "guest") were places for the reception of travellers and strangers, but there were no special institutions for the sick men only. However, a hospital was built by the Emperor Valens in Caesarea; another was founded by a rich friend of St. Jerome; and Basil, Bishop of Caesarea put up buildings for the poor, hospitals and leper houses. The earliest distinct record of hospitals in England concerns those built by Archbishop Lanfranc in 1010, one for lepers and one for ordinary diseases. In the middle ages the monasteries had their infirmaries and hospitals, with medical staff and nurses doing splendid work because of our Lord's words. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto me, one of the least of these ye have done it unto me." After the reformation some of these monasteries were set apart entirely as hospitals; as for example St. Bartholomew's, St. Thomas' and Christ's hospitals in London.

A great hospital movement took place in the 19th century, when at least fifty were built. The last century has seen the extension of this work, and the formation of many societies for the relief of pain, such as the Red Cross Society, the Guild of Lazarus, Nursing Sisters, Dr. Barnardoo's homes, Society for the Prevention of Cat, China, S. Africa, Zanzibar, Japan to protect animals. Medical missions in connection with the work of the church in foreign lands have proved of great value in the extension of Christ's work, and Christian hospitals are to be found in Madras, Maungascar, China, S. Africa, Zanzibar, Japan, Sierra Leone, etc. All these movements have been the result of a growing sympathy with the afflicted. The world is more humane because Christ linked himself with afflicted humanity and proclaimed the value of human life. It is for us to take a vital interest in all such good works and to help those who cannot help themselves. The audience was exhorted to give their sypathetic help towards the upkeep of charitable institutions and to do what they could in a quiet way in visiting the sick and afflicted in Christ's name. Also to study and give heed to the warnings of medical men, so as to stamp out consumption and other dread scourges, just as leprosy was overcome in the 15th century in England. Much of the pain of the world was due to ignorance, and vice, and knowledge and purity must be the correctives.

Ashort discussion followed the address and a very pleasing song was rendered by Mr. Lee, after which the meeting was brought to a close with the usual devotional exercises.

BOX SOCIAL AT NORWOOD

Most Successful Event Was Held Last Week

On Wednesday evening last a very successful box social was held at Norwood, under the auspices of St. Paul's church. About 350 people from the local and neighbouring parishes enjoyed an entertainment consisting of a concert, luncheon, cards and dancing. Rev. C. Bretherton of Hastings, and Rev. J. V. McAuley, of the Sacred Heart parish, Peterborough, were present.

The concert occupied the opening section of the programme and afforded much high-class amusement. Messrs. Jupp and Clarke in instrumental solos on piano and banjo were heartily encored. The songs of Messrs. Barrett, Quinlan and McLaren were very choice. M. McLaren being inimitable. Miss White caught the crowd with her elocution, and Mr. Sullivan's dancing was well received.

The auction sale of boxes was amusing, and to the management very profitable. Mr. W. Andrews, of Havelock, was full of business and good humour. Baskets ran from one to five dollars. To a Hasting's lady's basket the best price was assigned and a lady from Rochester received the second highest.

The contest in cards was won by Miss T. English and Mr. R. Heffernan, the latter not losing one game in the two hours of play. Mrs. P. Logan won the fountain pen by discovering the "mysterious person," who happened to be Mr. C. Quinlan.

The dancing was under the capable direction of Mr. J. Fallon. The reception of the visitors was in charge of Mrs. Breault, Mrs. McNeely and their competent body of lady and gentlemen ushers. A sincere request from visitors to have this an annual affair was the appreciated compliment paid to the box social.

THE HAPPY IRISHMAN.

He's an all-round jolly fellow, with a heart that's big and mellow;
You could see your own reflection in his smile.
If you meet him in September, you will laugh until November,
For his jokes have Harry Lauder's beat a mile.

He gets up in the morning, while the rest of us are snoring,
And hits the trail that's narrow, long and straight;
He has no time to worry, for he's always in a hurry;
He could never catch a train that wasn't late.

He also has the notion that the world is kept in motion
By the people that are in it—"you and I."
And to keep this world revolving is the problem he is solving
For if it stops he'll surely have to die.

He never minds the weather, for his shoes are made of leather,
And a gloomy visage never stops the rain;
If they oil the streets next summer, let them oil them, "there's another"
Who has told us all about it, good and plain.

He thinks it awful funny how some people shed their money
For the sake of Billy Travers and the Bank;
And when the Bank went under, you could hear their voices thunder,

But he never lost a penny, for he said he hadn't any;
And he never had a dollar bill to soak.
He's an all-round jollf fellow, and his heart is big and mellow,
And he's never quite contented till he's broke.

—Harold H. Smith, Peterborough.
Feb. 4, 1911.

BARBARA TENNANT'S RECITAL

A pleasing feature in connection with the above recital is the engagement of Mr. MacLean Borthwick as vocalist.

Mr. Borthwick has had a wide and varied experience in all forms of concert work in Scotland, England and Ireland, and in June of last year gave a Lieder recital at the Steinway Hall, London, which was most favourably noticed by the critics.

He is equally at home in oratorical and ballad concerts.

He is a Diplomee of the Royal Academy of Music, London,

The Greenock Telegram says: "Opening his programme with five German songs he showed at once excellent vocal powers, proving himself the real temperament artist in varying moods, from the declamatory to the tenderly emotional.

Mr. Borthwick undoubtedly possesses a very good and pleasing baritone voice; his chief charm last night was his artistry and intellectual conception of music varying so widely."

ASQUITH'S PROGRAMME

THE FORMAL OPENING

London, Feb. 6.—The King's speech excites no curiosity this year. Its outlines were available at the Government and Opposition dinners last night, but outsiders attending the reception in Downing street and at Lansdowne House did not need cues respecting its contents. The fact that Cabinet meetings have been few in number and have broken up early proves that there is no dissension over the veto bill, and that no other important legislation, apart from financial business, will be undertaken.

"Full steam ahead" will be the Prime Minister's order, and the coalition will hold together and carry the measure through the Commons before the coronation. The Easter and Whitsuntide recesses will be shortened, and the holidays will be extended to three weeks at coronation time. These were open secrets when rival receptions were held at Mrs. Asquith's and Lady Lansdowne's after the Prime Minister's, Lord Crewe's and Lord Beauchamp's dinner on one side, and Lord Londonderry's on the other.

There are no signs of high temperature in the Commons. The Liberals are in gay spirits and easily amused. There are loud guffaws of laughter whenever a fortunate member is convicted of having brought a new motor car or a fur overcoat, for he is at once congratulated on his chance of becoming a puppet peer. The pulse is lower on the Unionist side, where everybody professes to be bored with politics and in favor of a benevolent despotism. Strenuous resistance to the veto bill is considered necessary, since the Opposition members were elected for the purpose of fighting it; but there is a cynical indifference to the development of constitutional questions, couple with a lack of faith in the ability of the Unionists to do anything beyond retarding the progress of the measure in the Commons.

The signed pledge has been dropped by the Labor members, because it is evident that there can be no reversal of the Osborne judgment this year. The necessity for avoiding an autumn session in view of the King's departure for India is generally recognized, and it is doubtful whether the bills for the payment of members and the abolition of plural voting can be passed.

There is, indeed, only one mystery in the near future. This relates to the reception of the veto bill by the Lords and the necessity for the creation of hundreds of peers if no compromise can be effected before or after the coronation.

It is understood that King George's speech at the opening of his first Parliament to-day, will be a brief one, referring to the coronation, the Imperial conference and the Duke of Connaught's inauguration of the political move of the union of South Africa, and outlining the legislative program, which will include the veto bill and measures for dealing with workmen's insurance, plural voting, the payment of members of the House of Commons, and, possibly, an amendment to the Aliens Act, as the outcome of the Houndslitch affair.

A notable absentee from the House to-day will be Chancellor Lloyd-George who is now in Naples, where he probably will remain for another fortnight and perhaps longer. His throat trouble is proving unexpectedly obstinate.

The Unionist leaders have held several conferences, but it is still unknown what attitude they will adopt towards the veto bill. It is believed that the Lords may accept it as it is and should the Prime Minister advise the creation of a few hundred new peers, the King cannot constitutionally withhold his sanction. It is understood Lansdowne will almost immediately introduce a bill in the Lords for the reform of the Upper House, along the lines indicated in the Lansdowne-Rosebery measure.

Austin Chamberlain will move a tariff reform amendment, with special reference to the reciprocity agreement. Another amendment to the address will deal with the aliens' question.

Fears Spies Among Aviators.

Berlin, Feb. 6.—It is stated in military quarters that the strategists of the German general staff have some misgivings about allowing the German part of the Paris Journal's Paris-Berlin-Brussels-Paris $50,000 aeroplane competition to be flown next summer.

It is feared that the competitors, especially the skillful French aviators who are expected to participate, may even unwittingly cross German forts or fortified territory, a knowledge of which would be of inestimable value to foreign powers.

DON'T FOOL WITH YOUR LIVER

MAKE IT ACTIVE AND HEALTHY WITH "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

Don't treat the Liver with common purgatives. Salts, senna, calomel and the host of "liver pills" do not act on the liver at all. They merely irritate the bowels.

"Fruit-a-tives" corrects Indigestion and Constipation—not by inflaming the bowels like common purgatives, but by making the liver active and healthy.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest liver medicine in the world, and is the only medicine made of fruit juices.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers, or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

CRONJE IS DEAD

Famous Boer General Passes Away at Klerksdorf, Transvaal —Was Captured by the Canadians at Paardeberg

TOURED THE STATES

Klerksdorf, Transvaal, Feb 6.—Gen. Piet A. Cronje, the noted Boer general, who was captured by the Royal Canadian Regiment at Paardeberg in 1900, died on Saturday.

Piet Arnoldus Cronje, the famous Boer general, was born in 1835. He was of Huguenot descent. In the war of 1880 with the British he commanded a division of his countrymen at Doornkop and Majuba Hill, and led the Boers who besieged Potchefstroom, where, keeping the garrison ignorant of the fact that a general armistice had been signed, he forced its capitulation (1881). It was he who frustrated the Jameson raid at Krugersdorf (1895), and when in 1899, the Transvaal declared war with Britain, Cronje, appointed commander of the western army of the South African republics, unsuccessfully attacked Kimberley, but (November 28) repulsed the British under Lord Methuen at the Modder River, although later his flank was turned, and again (Dec. 11) at Magersfontein, raised the Boer siege at Kimberley.

On Feb. 15, 1900, Cronje retreated. Intrenched in the bed of the Modder River at Paardeberg, he surrendered with his whole army of 4,069 men, with six guns, on Feb. 27, the anniversary of Majuba. He was sent (April, 1900) to St. Helena, but returned to the Transvaal after the conclusion of peace. In 1904-5 he appeared with various amusement enterprises in America.

Unionists Staggered.

London, Feb. 6.—The Imperialist newspapers are staggered by the breadth and scope of the U.S.-Canadian reciprocity agreement.

The Morning Post, in an editorial full of sobs, tears and threats, calls upon the Unionists to fight to the death for an imperial union. It declares that the agreement must afford powerful assistance to the United States in her efforts to control the foreign trade of Canada. It says the Dominion will be linked even closer and closer to her great neighbor by these sordid ties, and American influence over Canadian thought and action will rapidly expand. The links that bind the daughter nation to the Mother Country, it is said, will grow steadily weaker.

Frank McCall of Toronto, a shipping agent, said: "I believe a majority of the people of Ontario favor reciprocity. All friends of international peace and progress wish it success in its further campaign."

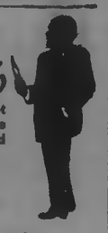
National Grange Opposes.

New York, Feb. 6.—The machinery of the National Grange, an organization claiming membership of 1,000,000 farmers in thirty states, has been started to defeat the ratification by Congress of the Canadian reciprocity treaty. The legislative committee of the grange at a special meeting at the Hotel Manhattan, adopted a resolution protesting against the enactment of the reciprocity bill, calling upon the membership to exert pressure upon the Congressmen from their various districts to vote against the measure and decided to go to Washington to map out a campaign there.

"We are not opposed to a general reduction of the tariff," Mr. Atkeson said, "but we are opposed to any agreement which will make fish of one industry and flesh of another.

"Remove the tariff on steel and iron and manufactured articles along with farm products, and we won't object."

The Fountain Head of Life Is The Stomach



A man who has a weak and impaired stomach and who does not properly digest his food will soon find that his blood has become weak and impoverished, and that his whole body is improperly and insufficiently nourished.

Dr. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY makes the stomach strong, promotes the flow of digestive juices, restores the lost appetite, makes assimilation perfect, invigorates the liver and purifies and enriches the blood. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder and restorative nerve tonic. It makes men strong in body, active in mind and cool in judgement.

This "Discovery" is a pure, glycerie extract of American medical roots, absolutely free from alcohol and all injurious, habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients are printed on its wrappers. It has no relationship with secret nostrums. Its every ingredient is endorsed by the leaders in all the schools of medicine. Don't accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this time-proven remedy of known composition. Ask your neighbors. They must know of many cures made by it during past 40 years, right in your own neighborhood. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

SIX PEOPLE KILLED

Five Trainmen and a Passenger Killed in a Wreck on the G. T. R.—Several More are Injured

A BAD COLLISION

Brantford, Feb. 6.—The lives of six men, including five trainmen and one passenger, were lost and several injured in a terrible catastrophe on the Buffalo and Goderich line of the Grand Trunk Railway, which happened at 9.20 Saturday night, three and a half miles west of Paris, and midway between Paris and Drumbo. The catastrophe was the result of a head-on collision between the westbound passenger train, running from Buffalo to Stratford, and a mogul engine in charge of Engineer Robert Errett of Sarnia, running light from Stratford to Fort Erie.

Following in the wake of the collision came a terrible, devastating fire, which incinerated the bodies of a couple of the victims, and made an easy prey of the three splintered coaches of the train. The fire left nothing but the bare trucks and wheels, and a mass of twisted iron and charred ruin.

The dead are: A. Turner, engineer, Stratford; leaves a wife and grown up family. J. D. Smith, fireman, Stratford; leaves a wife and family. Peter McFarland, baggageman, Goderich; married, no children. John Whitelaw, express messenger, Goderich, formerly of Whitby; wife suffering from shock. William Tye, mail clerk, Goderich; leaves wife and grown up family. D. J. Crozier, passenger, Drumbo.

The list of injured includes the following: W. J. May, mail clerk, Hamilton, severely scalded; W. T. Henderson, city solicitor, Brantford, back injured; William McIntosh, customs clerk, Brantford, back injured; Geo. Hunt, Brantford, shaken up; Robert Errett, engineer, minor bruises and sprains.

The ill-fated train left Brantford 17 minutes late, and was running in charge of Conductor Austbrook, with full right of way. None of the crew were aware of the approaching engine, which, it is understood had running orders to its destination and "to avoid regulars." The engine should have stopped at Drumbo, but instead, proceeded on to Paris, colliding halfway with the passenger train. Had the latter been on time the two would have met at Drumbo. Whether the crew of the engine had forgotten about the passenger train, or whether orders were mistaken, is a matter which could not be learned out of the usual railway reticence here yesterday. Trainmaster Forrester and Supt. U. E. Gillen conducted an investigation and Coroner Staples has ordered an inquest this afternoon at Princeton, where the charred bodies of Peter McFarland, J. D. Smith and William Tye were yesterday conveyed.

When the crash occurred the passenger train was traveling at about 35 miles an hour, according to the Brantford passengers. The engine must have been going much faster, as it struck with such impact that the baggage car was completely telescoped, and the mail end of the smoking car driven in, where the passengers were buried in flying splinter and glass.

Darkness immediately enveloped the train and its struggling occupants, the excitement and confusion being greatly enhanced by the fire, which rapidly spread from the old coal oil lamps in use on the train.

The wreck of the baggage car was complete, and neither of its occupants, Baggageman McFarland or John Whitelaw, express messenger, escaped. McFarland was rescued from the flames, but was so seriously injured that he died early Sunday morning at Scott's farm house.

A pitiful story is told by eye-witnesses concerning Whitelaw, who was pinned within the rapidly burning debris, unable to move. The flames gradually crept around his limbs, and with death merely a matter of a few minutes of prolonged agony. Whitelaw is said to have drawn his revolver and ended his sufferings. At any rate, a revolver shot was heard, and the charred remains of the express messenger were recovered yesterday as well as the revolver. Whether the discharge of the revolver was due to the heat of the fire may never be known, but the sad plight of Whitelaw being unable to release himself from the ravaging fire is an established fact.

The crew of the mogul engine practically escaped unhurt. Engineer Errett only being slightly injured, when he jumped with the others from his cab. The crew is from Sarnia, and is not well known on this division. They must have seen the approach of the passenger train first, as all appeared to clear the wreckage.

The victims are all well known. Mail Clerk Tye had seen nearly forty years service and was about to retire on a pension. Engineer Turner was well known from Buffalo to Goderich. Johnny Whitelaw was a popular Canadian Express Co. messenger, and was well known in and around Hamilton. R. M. Crozier, the only passenger to meet death, was a turnip buyer for Wood Bros., Brantford, and resided with his family in Drumbo. His knife, recovered in the wreck was one used by him in cutting turnips for inspection. J. D. Smith was comparatively a young fireman out of Stratford. Baggageman McFarland was an old Grand Trunk man.

Trainmaster Forrester lent heroic assistance in the work of relief, arriving quickly with special train from Stratford headquarters and working all night at the scene of the wreck. The catastrophe occurred at an out of the way place on the line, and this impeded the assistance sent by the survivors, who worked heroically for the release of the imprisoned ones and succeeded in rescuing Baggageman McFarland.

BIG CROWD SURE FOR TO-MORROW'S GAME

The interest that is being evidenced in the game at Brock Street Rink to-morrow night between the famous Kingston Frontenacs, Canadian Junior Champions, and the Peterborough Grillers, in the Junior O. H. A. series, is so great that a record attendance of fans is assured. Everyone is talking about the game, and it looks as if the crowd will be the largest of the season, even bigger than that which saw the two Trenton games. The Frontenacs have not been beaten this season, but the Grillers are not backing up any on this account, and will do their best to see that there is a kink in the aspirations of the Eastern team after to-morrow night. The Grillers finished their training for the game with a long skate on Saturday night and are now resting up for to-morrow's big game. The line-up will be the same as in the last game against Cobourg, with the exception that Anderson will be played at right wing instead of McMartin. Harvey Sproule of Toronto, will referee the battle. The Peterborough team will be as follows:

Goal—Patterson.
Point—Reynolds, Captain.
Cover—Heffernan.
Rover—Coughlin.
Centre—Hall.

PETERBOROUGH TEAM NOT IN THE BEST OF SHAPE

The line-up of the Peterborough team for to-night's game against Trenton in Belleville which decides the district was problematical when the players left on the regular 1.40 Grand Trunk train for the Bay of Quinte city. The officers have had an anxious day following the announcement that Kelly's hand was in such bad shape that it was doubtful whether or not he could play and that Denison would quite likely be unavailable. Kelly went down with the team this afternoon, but his sprained hand was so badly swollen that it is doubtful if he would be able to play. Efforts have been made all day to secure permission from the faculty of Trinity College School to allow Denison to go to Belleville and when the team left the matter was still unsettled. In the event of his not being able to play McMillan will be used at cover-point. The other players are in good shape. A good crowd of supporters went down on the special train, which left at 4.30 o'clock. Those who left on the regular were Bond, McMillan, Ray, Kelly, Sorel, Giroux, Pratt, Kennealley and trainer Billy Breen.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

F. Guerin, Captain of the East City Hockey team, challenged the Lakefield hockey team to a game of hockey on their own ice. The Lakefield Captain accepted the challenge. The East City team has had a lot of practice together this winter. This will be their first game and is likely to be a good one. Lakefield has a fast team. They have several old players, and the game is one that will likely attract quite a number of spectators. The East City team is running a 'bus to take a crowd from town to cheer for the team. Any one wishing to come with the jolly crowd will leave the post office at 6.35 p. m. Wednesday night. The line-up for the East City hockey team is as follows: Goal, H. Tate; point, J. Revoy; cover, G. Fox; rover, F. Guerin; centre, A. Coughlin; right wing, F. Tucker; left wing, E. Measley.—Manager, J. Revoy.

The following has been submitted for publication:

On Saturday, Feb. 4, 1911, a game was played between the Engleburns and Northern Rough Riders, at the Brock Street rink. The score was 1-1. The referee sounded the bell and all fourteen players were ready. The rubber was dropped and all hands clashed together, and one of the Engleburns, making a lift, landed the rubber in front of the N.R.R. goal, and while all were trying to get the puck away another Engleburn made a pretty slide at the puck and goal No. 1 was scored.

The next goal was scored within 4 minutes, which was scored by an N. R. R. boy, makig the score 1-1.

No more goals were scored. It was a fairly clean game, with the exception of two penalties. The penalties were: Kemp, 2 minutes; Quinn, 2 minutes. The line-ups were:

A telephone message from Trenton this afternoon stated that the Trenton team was not running an excursion to Belleville to-night. The Trenton fans were rather disheartened at the result of the game here Friday night and the management of the club decided not to take a chance on running an excursion.

WAS TERRIBLY AFFLICTED WITH LAME BACK.

COULD NOT SWEEP FLOOR.

Three Boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills Cured Her.

But they can't help it. If more work is put on them than they can stand it is not to be wondered they get out of order.

Weak back is simply a warning from the kidneys and should be attended to immediately so as to avoid years of terrible suffering from kidney trouble.

Mrs. N. Larmour, Smith's Falls, Ont., writes:—"I take pleasure in writing you, stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About a year ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back and was so bad I could not even sweep my own floor. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills, which I did, and with the greatest benefit. I only used three boxes and I am as well as ever. I highly recommend these pills to any sufferer from lame back or kidney trouble."

Price 50 cents per box, or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

CURE

Sick Headache and relieves all the troubles incident to a bilious state of the system, such as Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Distress after eating, Pain in the Side, &c. While their most remarkable success has been shown in curing

SICK

Headache, yet Carter's Little Liver Pills are equally valuable in Constipation, curing and preventing this annoying complaint, while they also correct all disorders of the stomach, stimulate the liver and regulate the bowels. Even if they only cured

HEAD

Ache they would be almost priceless to those who suffer from this distressing complaint; but fortunately their goodness does not end here, and those who once try them will find these little pills valuable in so many ways that they will not be willing to do without them. But after all sick head is the bane of so many lives that here is where we make our great boast. Our pills cure it while others do not.

Carter's Little Liver Pills are very small and very easy to take. One or two pills make a dose. They are strictly vegetable and do not gripe or purge, but by their gentle action please all who use them.

PRAISE OF A STORM-STAYED FOR C.P.R. TRAIN OFFICIALS

A card received here to-day from Mr. A. C. Pokome, who left on Tuesday evening on the Imperial Limited for Medicine Hat, states that the train was storm-stayed for 35 hours at some howling waste, between Fort William and Winnipeg. The passengers did not suffer. On the contrary he writes the train officials looked after the wants of the passengers with so much attention and kindness that but for the detention, the castaways spent a delightful day and a half of enjoyment,—a sort of picnic in a howling waste of trackless snow, outside; but within, warm coaches, plenty to eat provided by the Company, and delightful social intercourse among passengers developed by the common bond of mishap.

OFFICERS ELECTED

A meeting for election of officers for 1911 of St. James' Methodist Church Brotherhood was held on Friday evening, Feb. 3. There were present Rev. Brown, Bros. Prest. Saunders, Saunderson, W. Maclaren, A. Maclaren, Anderton, Leader, Bedworth, Andrews and Davis.

Proposed by Rev. Brown, seconded by Bro. Saunders, that Bro. Davis be secretary pro tem.—Carried.

Proposed by Bro. Bedworth, seconded by Bro. Maclaren, that Bro. Saunders be re-elected President.—Carried unanimously. He suitably replied.

Proposed by Bro. Anderton, seconded by Bro. Leader, that Bro. Barrett be elected Secretary.—Carried.

Proposed by Bro. Maclaren, and seconded by Bro. Bedworth that Bros. Saunderson, Anderton, and Davis, together with the President and Secretary be the Committee to supervise the working of the class and look after the absent members, and those removing from the city.—Carried.

Proposed by Bro. Maclaren, and seconded by Bro. Leader, that a special collection be taken the first Sunday in every month, to form a Reserve Fund for buying flowers for sick members and sundry expenses of the class.—Carried.

Proposed by Bro. Anderton and seconded by Bro. Davis, that Friday night, the 17th, at 8.30, a social evening be held for members of the class and any gentlemen friends.—Carried.

Proposed by Bro. Saunderson, seconded by Bro. Bedworth, that a blank register be procured for each brother to register his name and address as he comes in on a Sunday. Also that a minute book be purchased.—Carried.

Rev. Brown closed the meeting with prayer.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Reluctant as I feel to express an opinion on matters of civic policy, it seems to me my duty to take a stand in view of certain movements in contemplated actions which threaten to undermine the public peace and our relationship and confidence as fellow citizens.

The particular matter which forces this to the surface is the action to be considered in the Council to-night, dealing with a city official. I take it for granted that if the Council decide reluctantly to ask for the resignation of this veteran officer it will only be because they are convinced that he is clearly unequal to the duties of his responsible position. Though this is vigorously denied yet for some years he has been evidently deemed capable and trustworthy, or he would not have continued in office.

But as an opinion is widely prevalent that the real objection lies in this man's Religion, this point should be squarely faced, and proof given that the Council, neither in this, nor in other cases, will allow such a consideration to weigh for a moment.

Character and capability should be the only qualifications necessary for public office.

I do not know the man referred to, even by sight and hold no brief for his defence, but I am one of a great many who desire to see the manifestation of that fair and generous spirit which, after all, does characterize the community.

We can easily see that fairness, toleration and kindliness are essential for the unity and upbuilding of our city and country.

Let us take every possible means to express and exemplify them in our different relationships with our fellow citizens. United we stand, and are happy together. Divided we fall and are miserable.

Yours sincerely,
J. C. DAVIDSON.

Smallpox at Maxville.

Ottawa, Feb. 6.—An outbreak of smallpox has occurred at Maxville, Ont., where 12 cases have developed within a few days. Although there have been no deaths, a Maxville physician yesterday described the disease as of being a virulent type. Effective quarantine regulations have been established. Rumors of a similar outbreak at the village of Chesterville were denied over long-distance telephone by a physician there on Saturday.

Sudden Death.

Huntsville, Feb. 6.—Mrs. J. Youngson of this place had just returned from church, and sat down on a chair, when she suddenly expired from heart failure. She is survived by her husband, and five children, a son and daughter aged 12 and 14 respectively. She was a sister of H. W. Van Every of Toronto.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

THAT "hatred and love are much more similar than friendship and love," was the thesis a very thoughtful young person put to me the other day.

What do you think of it?

Myself, I think there is a specious varnish of truth over it, but down at the bottom, it's dead wrong.

If she had said that hatred and infatuation were more similar than friendship and infatuation, I would have agreed, but that is quite another matter.

I wish our young people could be made to understand more thoroughly that of the truly beautiful and lasting love, friendship is a very large component part.

Married life is a journey which leads occasionally over the mountain crests of sentiment, but for the most part, through long stretches of the valley of everyday living, and unless you have enough friendship for each other to make you thoroughly enjoy the daily travelling hand in hand through the valley, I think you are taking a big risk to start on the journey at all.

The beginning on the sentimental mountain crest of a wedding and newly married life may look fair to you, but remember that "journey's end" is a very long ways off and many valleys must lie between.

Myself, I would put up money on the enduring qualities of the marriage founded on a love which had a very large measure of friendship in it much more quickly than on the marriage founded on the passionate love that may turn out to be only infatuation, after all.

I once knew a girl who said she wanted the man she should marry to be able to say, "I am absolutely positive that you would be my best man friend if you were a man.

I think any girl should be able to say the equivalent of that about the man she is going to marry; that is:

"There is that in this man which would make me love him even if there were no sex attraction."

Real love, it seems to me, should be a wonderful fusing of equal parts of friendship and passion into something immeasurably greater than either.

Leave out either ingredient, or put in too much of either, and the alloy is spoiled, but better have too much of friendship than the other way round.

Ruth Cameron

CITY COUNCIL HAS A BUSY SESSION

Large Amount of Business Was Transacted Last Night---Deputations Were Heard, Reports Received and By-laws Passed.

The regular monthly session of the City Council held last was an unusually busy and important one. The estimates for the year were brought in the rates struck, assessors appointed and a large amount of other business transacted.

There were present Mayor Morrow, Ald. Morgan, Anderson, Graham, Kerneghan, Brown, Edgar, Metheral, Bradburn, Duncan and Buller.

The following communications were received:

From the secretary of the Separate School Board, stating that the demand of the Board for this year would be $10,220.00.—Finance committee.

From J. J. Turner and Sons, asking that an arc light be placed at the corner of King and Water streets.—Fire, Water and Light committee.

From the tax collector giving statement of roll as follows:

Total amount on roll	$210,191.28
Total amount deposited	195,960.66
Balance	$ 14,230.62
Less 2 per cent. discount on 1st payment	$ 3,158.62
Balance	$ 11,072.00
Amount taken and deposited during January	$ 1,542.62

From Davis Thompson Company, stating that the Fire Underwriters Association have recently raised the rates on a number of buildings here, charging for electrical defects.—Fire, Water and Light committee.

From W. J. Barnard Turner, Lieut.-Col. of the Salvation Army asking for a grant to the Army's Prison Gate, Women's Rescue and children's homes throughout Ontario.—Finance committee.

From the Peterborough Light and Power Company quoting rates for lighting the new Isolation Hospital.—Property committee.

From W. D. Lighthall, honourary secretary-treasurer of the Union of Canadian Municipalities, enclosing a copy of an invitation just received from secretary Litchfield of the Co. Partnership Tenants Ltd. of England, inviting representatives of all municipalities in Canada to form a delegation to visit the Co-Partnership and Housing Schemes of England. — Received.

From the Secretary of the Water Commissioners enclosing a copy of a resolution passed by the commissioners asking the Council to issue debentures for $10,000 to pay for the work of extension of mains and laying services during the year 1910.—Finance committee.

Among the recommendations of the committee of the Whole Council was the following:

1. That the Council do not object to the Canadian Pacific Railway reconstructing the overhead bridge over the track at George street on Plan 12a at right angles to their track instead of diagonally across it as at present, provided the property owners are satisfied, and without recognizing the said George street as a public street.

Property Committee.

The Property committee reported as follows:

Gentlemen, — Your Property committee beg leave to report as follows:

1. We recommend that the Public Library Board be given $1,000 for the purpose of purchasing books for the library out of the funds in the hands of the Council from the sale of the Nicholls building.

2. We authorized the Chairman to have an ice house built at the Isolation Hospital and have it filled with ice and to purchase window blinds for the hospital.

Finance Committee.

The report of the Finance committee was as follows:

1. That a request of the Board of Police Commissioners that the City Treasurer be authorized to make payments for expenses connected with the police department on the order of that Board be granted.

2. That $5,090 of the proceeds of the sale of the property on Simcoe street donated to the city by the executors of the Nicholls Estate be transferred to the credit of the Public Library account to defray the cost of the site purchased by the Public Library.

3. That a grant of $50.00 be made to the Hospital for Sick Children at Toronto.

4. That one copy of the Municipal World for 1911 be ordered and that a cheque be issued for that purpose.

5. That notice be given to the Chamberlain Estate that the City will terminate the lease of part of Lot 1 south of Charlotte street and east of Water street on October 31st, 1911.

6. That the following accounts be paid:

Manufacturers' Committee.

The Manufacturers' committee reported as follows:

We authorized the chairman to have an advertisement of the City published in the Canadian Hardware and Stove Journal to cost $25.00.

Legal Committee.

The Legal committee reported as follows:

1. That we authorized the City Solicitor to employ counsel and appeal the suit of Hatton vs. the City.

The Sign By-law.

Ex-Ald. J. J. Turner, jr., waited upon the City Council last night to protest that the sign by-law as it is at present was an injustice to the sign owners. He pointed out that the owners had to pay a license fee of $2 each year and also to sign an just. Either the license clause be responsible in the event of any accident. Mr. Turner did not think this was just. Either the license clause be rescinded or the agreement should be done away with. What was the $2 fee being paid for if it was not for protection. Some of the sign owners had taken down their signs already and he asked the Council to take some action before all the signs were down.

The matter was referred to the Board of Works on motion of Ald. Morgan and Ald. Anderson.

Horticultural Society.

Mr. Peter Campbell representing the Horticultural Society, waited upon the Council and asked that a grant of $200 be made towards the rebuilding of a walk in Victoria Park from the Court House to the fountain. The County Council had agreed to grant $100 if the city would give $200. The present walk would have to be torn up if the grant was not made.

The matter was referred to the Board of Works.

Mr. H. L. Beale also spoke on behalf of the Horticultural Society, asking that the annual grant be increased. This request had been refused last year and as a result the Society had not had enough money to pay proper attention to the parks. Central Park had to go unwatered for some time and there had been considerable complaint about the matter.

The Finance committee will deal with the request.

The following by-laws were passed:

A by-law appointing Messrs. Vincent Eastwood and E. A. Peck members of the City Trust Commission.

A by-law providing for the payment of the expenses of the Police Department.

A by-law authorizing a grant of $3,900 to the Central Charity Board.

The by-law authorizing the execution of an agreement with C. E. Dittman was given its third reading.

Ald. Buller moved that the by-law appointing the assessors be amended by substituting the name of T. B. McGrath, but there was no seconder to the motion.

OVERWORK ALLEGED

It is Said to be the Cause of the Wreck Near Paris—Gillen Blames Engineer

INQUEST HELD

London, Feb. 7.—Conductor William Meecham, in charge of the light engine at the Richwood wreck, was in the city Sunday for some hours. A reporter called at his home, 406 Rectory street, and was told that he had not been at his home since Saturday night.

Meecham, it is said, reached London on train No. 7 Sunday morning. Supt. Bowker received word that Meecham was to be ordered to Stratford, and he sent a message to the house last night to that effect.

"I do not know whether he has been in the city or not," said Supt. Bowker.

A brother-in-law of the much-wanted man said yesterday, in answer to the question, if Meecham had been home: "We have heard nothing about him. We know that he was in the wreck, but he has not been here and we have not seen him."

"Have you heard from him?"

"No, we have not heard a thing. They worked the poor fellow to death. He was not home for three weeks until Saturday night, and then he had to go right out. He has not had a minute to himself in three weeks."

Engineer to Blame, Says Gillen.

Toronto, Feb. 7.—Grand Trunk Superintendent Gillen, when interviewed yesterday concerning Saturday night's wreck near Paris, said that the collision would not have occurred had Engineer Krreol of the mogul engine complied with the rules of the signal code.

The official admitted the entire loss of the baggage and mail car, the complete destruction of three first-class coaches and the putting out of business for two months of two engines. Exclusive of any claims which may be brought against the company Supt. Gillen estimated that the accident would mean a loss of between $16,000 and $24,000 to the Grand Trunk.

Inquest Will Be Thorough.

Woodstock, Feb. 7.—Dr. Staples, coroner, of Princton, announced yesterday morning that he would open an inquest on the bodies of the dead trainmen in the hall at Princeton on Wednesday afternoon next, on the arrival of the accommodation from London, which will bear several of the witnesses.

The scene of the wreck was just about 200 yards within the Oxford boundary, and as Dr. Staples is the coroner for that section, he took charge of matters.

"The wreck is one of the worst of the many we have had in our boundaries," said Dr. Staples, "and you may depend upon it that as far as I myself and the jury can investigate, we will fix the responsibility where it belongs, if it is possible to do so.

"At present it looks as though the crew of the light engine had run past their order, but the truth of this can only be ascertained when the surviving trainmen and other witnesses are put on their oath.

"I am summoning all these men together with other eyewitnesses of the wreck, and the investigation will be as thorough as we can make it."

Conflict of Authority.

Kingston, Feb. 7.—In his attempt to serve the people, Mayor Graham had a lively row with the Board of Works and Chairman Ald. Rigney. The mayor ordered out the snow clearing machine to cut down high spots on Princess street. The engineer ordered the men in off work, as he had not given orders, and Ald. Rigney wrote the mayor that he must not interfere with his department. Solicitor McIntyre stated that the mayor was within his rights. The matter will be threshed out in committee.

"Oatmeal King" Dead.

Mitchell, Feb. 7.—Walter Thomson, a prominent and wealthy citizen of Mitchell, and until recently one of the largest millers and grain dealers in western Ontario, died at the residence of his son in Texas on Friday. He was formerly known as the Oatmeal King, and had milling interests in London, Woodstock, Seaforth and Mitchell. He was born in Kelso, Scotland, in 1835, but has lived since 1860 in Ontario, and since 1867 has been a resident of Mitchell.

Want Particulars.

Montreal, Feb. 7.—A preliminary plea has been filed on behalf of the Pinkerton Detective Agency of New York and Mr. John M. Macnamara, their agent here, in answer to the action for $200,000 damages taken against them by Mr. David Russell. This preliminary, as in the shape of a motion for particulars on most of the allegations made by Mr. Russell.

King of Canada.

Sydney, N.S., Feb. 7.—A luncheon was yesterday tendered to Sir Henry Pellatt by the City Council and business men of Sydney. In responding to an address of welcome from the city, Mayor Gunn referred to Sir Henry as the uncrowned king of Canada.

Tax Autos in Quebec.

Quebec, Feb. 7.—In the Legislature yesterday the Provincial Treasurer gave notice of a bill providing for the taxation of automobiles according to their horsepower, the revenue to be applied to the improvement of the highways.

DETAILS ARE SECRET

YESTERDAY IN HOUSE

Ottawa, Feb. 7.—At yesterday's session of the House of Commons, W. S. Middlebro (N. Grey) interpollated the Minister of Railways on the truth of an article in a United States magazine that an agreement had been reached between the two countries providing for an international commerce commission. Hon. George Graham stated that this was the result of a conference between Mr. Knapp, chairman of the Interstate Commission of U.S., and Judge Mabee, chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Its object was to secure a through bill of lading for goods originating in U. S. and destined for points in Canada. Unless there are a competing line the shipper was obliged to pay the local freight rate to and from the border. There were to be four members of the new body, including the two chairmen. Its duty would be to fix a uniform rate. As the matter was covered by a treaty the details could not be made public at present.

Replying to Col. Sam Hughes, the Prime Minister said the Government had not received any information regarding the plans of a United States company to build a dam at the Long Sault and divert the waters of the St. Lawrence by a canal into Lake Champlain.

The House spent practically all the rest of the sitting discussing a resolution proposed by Mr. Sinclair of Guysboro, urging upon the Government the necessity of taking steps to secure an international agreement which would in the future prohibit steam trawling in such spawning grounds of deep sea fish as the banks of the north Atlantic adjacent to Canada and the St. Lawrence Gulf.

Mr. Sinclair, in the course of his speech, said that steam trawling had resulted in great injury to fisheries in all waters where it had been permitted. The Government had prohibited steam trawling within the three-mile limit, which was all it could do, but Mr. Sinclair expressed the view that if the fisheries were to be properly conserved there must be international regulation. He emphasized the fact that much damage had been done Canadian fisheries in recent years by French trawlers operating off the coast of Nova Scotia, the chief spawning ground of the Canadian deep sea fisheries on the Atlantic coast.

Hon. L. P. Brodeur said he would approve of trawling as restricted on the North Sea by international regulations.

H. H. Miller (S. Grey) sought to read to the House yesterday a resolution condemnatory of Col. Hughes, passed by Ottawa Ministerial Association, in view of certain references made by that gentleman about Dr. Milne a Presbyterian clergyman at the capital. Col. Hughes asked the House to permit the reading of the resolution, but the Speaker ruled Mr. Miller out of order. It is understood the matter will come up on Friday, when a lively interchange is anticipated.

Whole Council Goes.

St. Catharines, Feb. 7.—The thousand fruit men who will go to Ottawa on Friday will be accompanied by Mayor McBride, City Clerk Pay and the whole City Council, in accordance with the following resolution, passed with only one dissenting voice at the regular meeting last night.

"That it being the opinion of the council that the business interests of the Niagara peninsula, and particularly of this city, are deeply concerned in the prosperity of the fruit growers of this section, and, feeling that the agreement for reciprocity which is now being considered by the Parliament of Canada, and whereby it is proposed to remove the duty from tender fruits, will result in serious financial loss.

Therefore, be it resolved that this council appoint a committee, to be named by the mayor, to accompany the deputation of fruit growers who propose to interview the members of the Dominion Government and protest against the oblition of the present duty upon tender fruits."

May Reorganize Regiment.

Ottawa, Feb. 7.—Speaking as to the disbanding of the Prince of Wales' Fusiliers at Montreal, Lieut.-Col. Lessard of the Militia Department said that he hoped the regiment could be reorganized. However, the regiment had become so shaken up that there was nothing left to do but disband it temporarily.

"It is, of course, well known in military circles that a regiment cannot be reorganized properly until it is disbanded," he concluded.

Montreal Snowed Up.

Montreal, Feb. 7.—Five thousand men and 1,500 carts are now engaged by the city to remove the snow from the streets. The city engineer states that it will take over a week before the snow is all cleared away from the streets where there are car tracks.

Power For Eastern Towns.

Kingston, Feb 7.—Ald. R. H. Toye went to Toronto yesterday to interview Hon. Adam Beck regarding power for Eastern Ontario municipalities. He will also visit Brantford and Guelph, to inspect garbage systems.

CROMPTON GOES TO TRIAL.

Farmers Bank Charges Will Be Heard Next Month.

Toronto, Feb. 7.—Fred. Crompton, president of the Crompton Corset Co., and brother-in-law of Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, former president of the Farmers' Bank, was yesterday committed for trial from the Police Court upon a charge of illegally accepting the notes of the bank, contrary to the provisions of the Bank Act.

The only evidence taken was that of Travers, who was given protection by Magistrate Denison when he stepped into the box. Travers told that Mr. Crompton had been introduced by Dr. Beattie Nesbitt and that the illegal scheme by which the bank secured $50,000 in cash from Mr. Crompton, giving in return its own unrecorded notes, upon which interest at 5 per cent. was later paid, was suggested by the fertile brain of the doctor. He said that he did not believe that Mr. Crompton knew that what he was doing was illegal, but that it simply looked like a good investment.

Travers said that the arrangement had been made verbally and that the money had been needed to tide over the bank's obligations at the clearing house. The former general manager was the only witness heard, but Messrs. V. A. Burke, James F. Fitzgibbon and H. A. E. Menshall were bound over as additional witnesses, to be called when the case comes up for trial at the March sessions.

Mr. Crompton, who appeared upon a summons and who has made restitution of $689, said to have been received as interest upon the notes, was allowed to depart upon his own bail of $1,000.

Travers was once more elected in the detective office for the day. At 6.30 he left by street car for the jail with Detective Murray, as he had come up in the morning. He is looking a good deal thinner, but healthier than when he first appeared in court.

Crown Attorney Corley yesterday received a telegram from James J. Warren, charged jointly with Dr. Nesbitt, Travers and the four provisional directors and C. H. Smith, with conspiring to obtain the certificate of the Treasury Boar dby which the bank opened its doors for business.

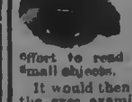
"Understand some proceedings contemplated. Writing you fully, with particulars my address. Telegraph answer to Spencerbridge."

Mr. Warren has interests in British Columbia which take him there frequently.

The Care Of The E--Y--E--S


A person in good health, at the age of 45 years, will ordinarily notice a change in the sight, requiring more effort to read fine print, or to see small objects.
It would then be advisable to have the eyes examined by a Competent Eyesight Specialist and fitted with "Preserving or Best Glasses".
This would give great comfort and prevent eye-strain, which is the cause of much trouble in after years.
Glasses should be changed usually once in two years.
First, to fit changed conditions of sight, and Second, Glasses lose their transparency by wear.
Headaches are often warnings that the eyes need help and they should not be neglected.
The Eyes are the most important organs of the fine senses, and generally the most abused.
Many Eyes Are Ruined by wearing cheap and imperfect glasses.

MORE PINKHAM CURES

Added to the Long List due to This Famous Remedy.

Glanford Station, Ont.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for years and never found any medicine to compare with it. I had ulcers and falling of the uterus, and doctors did me no good. I suffered dreadfully until I began taking your medicine. It has also helped other women to whom I have recommended it."—Mrs. HENRY CLARK, Glanford Station, Ontario.

Another Cure

Harvey Bank, N. B.—I can highly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any suffering woman. I have taken it for female weakness and painful menstruation and it cured me. — Mrs. DeVRAS BARBOUR.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has cured many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, indigestion, dizziness, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result is worth millions to many suffering women.

If you want special advice write for it to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. It is free and always helpful.

"THE INNOCENT MURDERERS"

By Wm. Johnston and Paul West

Gordon arrived in a daze. When the Dean asked him if he could explain Hopkins' note he blushed, stammered, and became inextricably confused. He realized what a botch of it he had made by suggesting that the Dean should ask Rice or Fischer about it. But it was too late to retract.

The students' gossip concerning bothHopkins and Ernesta drove him nearly distracted during the day. He could hardly resist the temptation, when he heard their names coupled, to cry out:

"It's a lie! A miserable lie! They have not eloped!" But he realized that he must say nothing.

For the Dean, also, the day was proving interesting. He questioned the messenger who brought him the startling news of Ernesta Frost's disappearance over and over again, but could learn nothing more. Cautioning him to keep the knowledge of the girl's sudden disappearance from the students as long as possible, the Dean sent him away and began to think. He was not such a blind old fool as they thought. He had noticed the students' comments at the laboratory door. He had long been aware of the evenings that Hopkins was spending in his laboratory with Ernesta as his assistant, and had mentally questioned the expediency of allowing such a thing to continue—merely that the college could not afford the slightest possibility of a scandal.

Was this simultaneous disappearance of Hopkins and the senior the climax of these evenings? Certainly it looked mysterious.

"Moreover," soliloquised the Dean, "if there's no mystery about it, why did Snyder write that note and tell me nothing about it? Why did Rice and Fischer deny that they knew anything about Hopkins, and why did Gordon sa ythat he thought they did? And, what became of the note, anyway?"

As if in answer to this question, there was a knock at his door and the Dean called "Come in!" There entered Detective Sullivan, or, as the Dean knew him, the book agent.

"Dean Quimby, I believe?" was his greeting.

"Yes," said the Dean brusquely, for he was not pleasantly inclined toward this smooth, quiet stranger who, he believed, had stolen the bit of evidence from the door of the laboratory. "That's my name. Who are you?"

"My name is Sullivan," said the detective, "and I have come to see you about Professor Hopkins."

"Oh, you have!" said the Dean. "Well, Mr. Sullivan, I do not know what Professor Hopkins is to you, and before I have any conversation with you concerning him, I would like to ask what you did with the note—Oh!"

"Professor Hopkins' note!" he exclaimed. Sullivan corrected him, saying:

"Professor Snyder's note, I guess you mean, sir."

"How did you know that?" asked the Dean, scowling.

"It's my business to find out," said Sullivan. "I am a detective, and now, if you can assure me that we are absolutely alone, I would like to ask you a few questions and tell you a few things."

"You may go ahead," said the Dean. "But first of all, may I ask if you have any—suspicions regarding the mysterious disappearance of Professor Hopkins?"

"I'm glad, sir," said Sullivan, "that you are willing to admit that there is something mysterious about it. As to my knowing or suspecting anything about him, well, I do suspect a few things. However, I did not want to say or do anything impulsive. I'd much rather hear what you think about it, first."

The Dean started to speak, then stopped, hesitatingly. Should he confide in this stranger? Sullivan seemed to read his doubt, and said:

"You don't need to tell me anything unless you want to. But I may tell you that I'm on this case in the service of Mrs. Hopkins, and intend pushing it to the end. So, any help you can give me will be better for all concerned, I believe."

"You say that Mrs. Hopkins has engaged you to trace her husband?" asked the Dean, greatly surprised. "When did she do this, may I ask?"

"Yesterday, by telegraph," said Sullivan.

"Yesterday! Why, Professor Hopkins—"

'Did not disappear until last night? That is right, sir. But Mrs. Hopkins evidently knew that he was going. In fact, she has suspected that he was going for some time. And with the very person he has gone with."

"You think, then, that he has actually gone with—with—" The Dean could not bring himself to mention Ernesta's name. Sullivan saved him the embarrassment by finishing the sentence.

"With Miss Frost," said he. "There seems no doubt of it. In the first place, Professor Hopkins knew that he was going on considerable of a trip, and drew all the money he had in the bank, yesterday."

"You don't tell me that—"

"But he showed no indications in any way, up to yesterday afternoon."

"Not to you, sir, perhaps, but perhaps to others. Else, how do you explain this note, written late last night and pinned to his laboratory door?"

"And written by Professor Snyder! You are right—Snyder at least must have known of Hopkins' intended disappearance. Besides, I am sure that others know about it. At least one other." Sullivan was none too anxious to tell the Dean more of what he had learned than was necessary. This hesitancy was not from any feeling that the Dean would betray his confidence, but from a fear that hte old gentleman, unused to affairs of the kind, might, in a moment of garrulity, spoil his plans. So he contended himself with saying:

"The one I mean is Gordon. Now, sir, wasn't there something between him and the girl?"

"They were engaged to be married, I believe," said the Dean.

"Had she, as far as you know, ever had any previous love affair"

"Yes," said the Dean, at which Sullivan pricked up his ears. "There was a young man here, last year—a Frenchman named Rassignol. They were very much attached, it was thought, and some went so far as to say that they were engaged. But he went away, and after that it was generally believed that she and Professor Gordon were much in love with each other. But why do you ask about the previous affair? You certainly do not associate the disappearence of the girl now with young Rassignol? He has been in France ever since——"

"No," said Sullivan. "But I wish to learn all I can about her. You have never suspected that she and Professor Hopkins were—"

The Dean smiled.

"My dear sir," said he, "you never saw Professor Hopkins, did you?"

"I saw his picture," said Sullivan, "and I know what you mean. Nevertheless, the fact remains that he is gone, the girl is gone, and there's considerable mystery about it. We must find out what Professor Snyder and Professor Gordon know. Will you help me with the former?"

"I will, with pleasure," said the Dean. "I will call him in here now and demand——"

"No," said Sullivan, "you must go at him more gently. Don't let him know that you suspect him, just yet. He is too clever a man to be taken unawares, I'm afraid. Gordon is different. Leave him to me."

"When do you intend seeing him?"

"At once. With your permission I'll have a talk with him at his first leisure moment. Till then I guess I'll look around and you keep your eyes, please, on Snyder." Sullivan started toward the door. "By the way, Dean," he said, "I don't suppose you would know about such things, but could you recognize a wheelbarrow or a spade, or anything like that belongig to the college?"

"Well," said the Dean, with a smile, "perhaps not. But everything purchased by the college in the way of tools and garden utensils is branded with its name."

"Thanks," said Sullivan. "I just wanted to know. I suppose I could get further details form the gardener?"

"Yes," said the Dean. "You'll find him around somewhere. When shall I see you again?"

"Soon," said the detective. "In the meantime, if anybody should ask you, I am selling books, say something that would interest Professor Hopkins, such as—"

"That'll do," said Sullivan, and went out.

He determined to find the gardener. A search was not necessary, for he found him examining the very things he wished to inquire about, the wheelbarrow and the spade. The gardener looked up quizzically as Sullivan approached.

"Good-morning," said the detective "you look pleased about something."

"Why not?" asked the gardener. "Wouldn't you be pleased if somebody presented you with a spade just about the time you were thinking of buying one?"

"Why," said Sullivan, trying to conceal the delight that this unexpected opening gave him, "isn't that your spade?"

"No," said the gardener, "it looks like some o' them they used ot use over to Bradley's greenhouse when I worked there. I suppose some student found it and thought it was mine. Well, it is not." And he started off with the wheelbarrow and spade.

"Hold on," said Sullivan. "What's that on the spade?"

"Sawdust," said the gardener, after an investigation. "By goah, it is from the ice-house and no mistake!"

"I'd like to ask that fellow where the ice-house is," said the detective to himself as the gardener went off. "But I guess I'd better not. Now, I wonder if I can find Gordon."

He had reached the back of the building in his walk, and entered by a rear door, so that he passed the windows of the Dean's study. The Dean was just closing the door upon a man whom Sullivan recognized as one of the quartette of the adventure with the wheel-barrow. As Sullivan entered the building this third person was vanishing down the hall with every appearance of haste. Sullivan knocked on the Dean's door.

"Was that Snyder?" he asked the Dean as he went in.

"Yes," was the excited rejoinder. "and he knows? He knows!"

"What did he say?"

"I asked him point blank if he did not know about Hopkins' departure, and he had to admit it. Said that Hopkins and he met in this room yesterday afternoon, and Hopkins told him he was unexpectedly called out of town and wouldn't have time to communicate with me. Asked him (Snyder) if he wouldn't give me the message, which he forgot to do. But he did write the note that was on the laboratory door, at Hopkins' request, and meant to tell me all about the affair this morning.'

"So he said that, did he?" demanded Sullivan. "And at what time did he say he put the note on the laboratory door?"

"About five o'clock yesterday afternoon, just before he went home to supper. Is it the truth? What do you think?"

"I don't think," said Sullivan, "I know! Snyder's story is a lie from beginning to end. And now to tackle Gordon!"

But Detective Sullivan did not see Professor Gordon, then, nor for some time afterward, for the young professor left town hurriedly on the noon train, not even stopping to pack a valise.

PRUSSIAN POLICE

An Interesting Description of the Officials Who Enforce the Laws With an Iron Hand

The Prussian policeman is an interesting personage. On first acquaintance he usually inspires the visitor to Germany with a sense of awe. This is hardly wonderful, seeing that his own fellow-countrymen stand in considerable awe of him. But in the case of the stranger it takes time to realize that the stately and commanding figure, adorned with a uniform closely assimilating to that worn in the army, who struts along clanking a sword is that of a policeman.

The Prussian policeman belongs to the great and honored official class. He is not a public servant—there are no "public servants" in Germany. If he is anybody's servant he is the Kaiser's. He is a State official. In his sphere he is absolute; an autocrat.

The Prussian policeman not only looks a soldier, he is one—every inch of him. There are reasons, physical and other, which exempt some men from military service, butt he man who has been exempted can never be a policeman. As a matter of fact the great bulk of the Prussian police have served in the army for considerably longer than the compulsory term. A great many members are men who have been non-com. officers in the army, and they possess the virtues and the limitations of their class. The iron military discipline of the German Army has become part of their nature. Amenable only to their superior officers, they recognise no other authority.

The Prussian is attended by policemen and police enactments from the cradle to the grave. In the realms alike of Church and State the arm of the policeman falls heavily on the shoulders of the citizen. It is the policeman who enforces—and that with characteristic severity—the taxes which the law permits the Churches to lay on their nominal members. If a man secedes from the Church he must make an affidavit to that effect and have it countersigned by the police. From time to time he is called upon to satisfy the police as to his formal secession in order to escape the Church levy. When a girl seeks to enter domestic service she must furnish the police with full information regarding herself, and obtain from them a service book, which contains, among other things, a description of her personal appearance, after the manner of police notices of missing criminals in this country. Every time she changes her situation her book must be countersigned by the police.

Nothing, perhaps, throws such a strong light on the position and power of the Prussian policeman as the high place he occupies at public meetings. There he sits, a conspicuous figure on the platform, and if a speaker ventures to make an observation which he regards as objectionable he may in his absolute discretion dissolve the meeting. His word is law.

PENSIONS ROMANCE

Love in a Workhouse Ends in Marriage of the Parties Concerned

Many a romantic union has been brought about by the old age pensions. It was reported at a meeting of the Huntingdon Board of Guardians that a man named Daniel Peacock, who had been in the workhouse since 1897, and would now become entitled to an old-age pension, intended to leave in order to marry another inmate, who would also be entitled to a pension. He wrote thanking the board for the kindness he had received, and said he would like a small memento of the happy time he had spent in the workhouse. The chairman said he thought the men and women were kept separate in the workhouse. The master of the workhouse stated that they were kept separate. A hope was expressed that the man would send the board a piece of wedding cake, and it was decided to subscribe to give him a wedding present. Peacock, who is a widower, was formerly a saddler, and while in the workhouse he has assisted the porter in charge of the door. His bride-elect, a widow named Susannah Wright, first entered the workhouse in 1908. The officials are puzzled to know when the courting was done. Peacock had his periodical day's leave and went to give the necessary notice of the marriage. The registrar, who is also clerk to the guardians, promised to marry the couple for nothing.

LONG TRAMP IN VAIN

Man of 98 Who Walked Nearly 3,000 Miles on Vain Errand

The London Telegraph tells the story, which comes from Mobile, Alabama, of a man of ninety-eight who has tramped nearly 5,000 miles on a vain errand. Frank Schrom, the hero of this feat, at the beginning of the year, received a letter from his daughter living in San Francisco asking him to go to them. Schrom had been wealthy, but his business had failed, and he had lost all his possessions. Too proud to ask for assistance, he set out to walk from New Orleans to the Californian city. Arriving there, he found his daughters, who, in the absence of any word from the old man, had come to the conclusion that he was dead, had left the city, and that their whereabouts was uncertain. Schrom, being disappointed and almost heart-broken by his failure, turned his face eastward again and walked back to New Orleans, covering altogether a distance of 2,800 miles. Now he is housed in a home for aged men.

TO PUT DOWN DUELLING

Abbe Lemire has introduced in the Paris Chamber a Bill to make duelling a punishable offence. The penalty varies from imprisonment for six days to five years and fines from $20 to $2,000, according to the gravity of the offence. The severest punishment is for the dueller who kills his man; the lightest for taunting a man for not fighting.

ADVENTURES IN THE ANTARCTIC

Dr. J. B. Charcot Tells of Discoveries in Southern Regions, Which May Be Called South American Antartica

Dr. J. B. Charcot, London, has given an account of his second Antarctic expedition, from which he returned last year.

He did not set out with any idea of attempting to reach the South Pole. He had a three-masted vessel with an auxiliary engine, specially constructed for the purposes of the expedition, and named the Pourquoi Pas? It was equipped with every care and supplied with the most modern instruments for observation. The crew consisted of 22 men, most of whom had accompanied him on his former expedition. The staff consisted of seven men, each an expert in some department of natural science. The expedition started from Havre on August 15, 1908, and finally sailed from Punta Aernas for the Antarctic on December 16.

On arriving at Petermann Island, off the west coast of Graham Land, Dr. Charcot, with two companions, set out to discover if it was possible to pass between the Biscoe Islands and the coast. As they expected to return the same day, they took no store of provisions and no camp equipment; but their return was blocked by the ice, and they did not reach the ship again till four days later, narrowly escaping death from hunger and cold. From Petermann Island a journey was made towards the south along the coast, the mapping of which, begun during the previous expedition, was completed. A hydrographical survey was made of Adelaide Island, which was found to be 70 miles long instead of eight miles, as had previously been stated. To the south of Adelaide Island, in a region which had not previously been visited, a great gulf was discovered and named Marguerite Bay. Still farther to the south the expedition traced and studied the hydrography of 120 miles of unknown coast. After two attempts a passage was forced through the ice to Alexander Land, which was mapped and found to be an island. Then the expedition returned to Petermann Island for the winter. The weather, though comparatively mild, was stormy, a formidable north-east wind blowing during nine months. An immense quantity of snow fell. The conditions were found very trying by the members of the expedition, some of whom were attacked by scurvy, and when the winter quarters were vacated in November a course was steered north to Deception Island. Here the expedition was very hospitably received by the whalers settled on the island, and after a rest, another attempt was made to penetrate south. In spite of unfavorable ice and weather conditions all latitudes previously reached to the south and west of Alexander Island were surpassed. Sailing along the edge of the pack ice, the expedition found Peter I. Island in the situation assigned to it on the charts; but as the voyage was continued the icebergs became so numerous as to be embarrassing and dangerous. It was estimated that something like 5,000 were seen in one day. However, the expedition succeeded in reaching 126 deg. west longitude, and then, as the supply of coal was nearly exhausted, and the health of some of the members gave cause for serious alarm, the course of the Pourquoi Pas was directed northwards.

From the geographical point of view the expedition proved that the west coast of what may be called South American Antarctica is cut up by deep fjords and fringed with islands and reefs.

CELEBRATED BACHELORS

Excuses Some Famous Men Had for Not Getting Married

Among authors we have Pope, Goldsmith, Lamb, and Macaulay. The feeble health of "the wasp of Twickenham" stood, no doubt, in the way of his marrying. Goldsmith had not the same excuse, but in his case it was quite as well that he passed through life as a bachelor. A single man who habitually spends twice as much as he has is never likely to make a wise and prudent husband, even though he has the rare fortune to fall in with a model of feminine sagacity. Lamb, "that frail, good man," as Wordsworth calls him, was a bachelor, not from choice but from affection. The singular loyalty with which he devoted himself to his sister in circumstances of melancholy interest prevented his marrying a girl whom, it appears, he truly loved. Lord Macaulay, though he had warm domestic affections, was never married. He rested content with the loving sympathy of his sister Hannah, the wife of Sir Charles Trevelyan, whose children were to him as his own.

Handel, Reynolds, Turner, Sir Isaac Newton, and Cavendish, were among the men illustrious in art or science who remained bachelors.

Nervous Prostration

Makes You Weak, Helpless and Miserable.

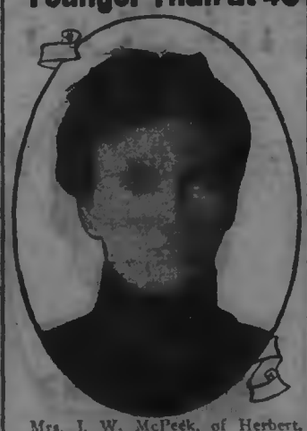
Wherever there are sickly people who are troubled with deranged nerves they will find that Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will restore the equilibrium of these deranged centres, and bring back the shattered nervous system to a perfect condition.

They do this by their restorative influence on every organ and tissue of the body, and their extraordinary curative power manifests itself immediately they are taken.

Mrs. G. D. Ward, Huntsville, Ont., writes: "I take pleasure in sending you my testimonial in praise of your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I suffered terribly with nervous prostration, and became so bad I was not able to attend to my household duties, and now I can truthfully say that I owe my life to them. Three boxes stopped my trouble."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25 at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

53 Years of Age—Younger Than at 40



Mrs. J. W. McPeek, of Herbert, Sask., Can., is more than pleased with the results obtained from the use of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, which has been of great benefit to her family. She says in her letter: "I have been using Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey for the past ten years. It is the best health giver I ever used. I am now 63 years of age, but I am looking and feeling younger than at 40. My friends all say, 'How young you look!'

"It has also proved just the thing for my daughter, who lives in Ohio. She had such weak nerves and heart that the slightest move would startle her. Your wonderful remedy has practically overcome this, and has done her more good than all other treatments."

Mr. McPeek writes about his remarkable experience: "I am 67 years of age, and for a number of years I haven't been strong. I have a weak heart and for some time was almost helpless. Lately I have been using Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, and it has helped me wonderfully. I sincerely recommend Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey to every one."

The genuine is sold in SEALED BOTTLES ONLY by all grocers and liquor dealers, or direct, $1.25 a large bottle. Look for the "Old Chemist" on the label and make sure the seal over the cork is unbroken. Medical booklet containing rare common sense rules for health and testimonials, also doctor's advice, sent free to any one who writes.

SAVED THE KAISER'S LIFE

It is not generally known that General Sir Archibald Hunter, whose marriage recently aroused so much interest, was the means of saving the German Emperor from an accident which might have been attended with fatal results, when His Majesty was paying a visit to Lord Rosebery at Dalmeny a few years ago. At that time General Hunter was in command of the troops in Scotland, and was present in that capacity on the station platform to welcome the Emperor. Lord Rosebery's carriage was waiting, and the Emperor had just taken his seat in it when one of the horses commenced to plunge violently, and in another instant the pair would have bolted. Like a flash, however, General Hunter reached the animal and dealt it a smashing blow on the nose that quickly quieted it. Another pair of horses were soon secured, and Hunter received the hearty thanks of the Kaiser for the smart way he grappled with the situation.

COMFORTING

The other Sunday a very small boy was sent to church with his grown-up sister, and on his return, his father asked him:

"Well, Bobby, what was the text?"

The little chap thought for a moment, then said: "Oh, it was something like: 'Don't be scared, you'll get back your quilts.'"

The sister didn't remember the text, so the father called upon the clergyman to be enlightened, and discovered that the text was: "Fear not, for the Comforter will come."

ROADS IN ENGLAND

Are Being Improved by Associations —Some of the Methods

After agitating for over 20 years to try to get somebody to do something in the way of improving the roads throughout the kingdom, the Roads Improvement Association comprising over 150,000 road users of all classes, has at last succeeded in rousing symptoms of activity among the authorities. The road board which was formed by the Treasury in pursuance of the development and road improvement funds act of 1909 has appointed an advisory engineering committee. They have also intimated that they will give special consideration to applications from local authorities for grants for reconstruction, and widening of important roads, alteration of dangerous corners curves and gradients, strengthening weak bridges, construction of new by-pass roads to avoid villages, and acquisition of vacant land for future widening. There are 2,000 local authorities which have control over roads. The Great North Road from London to Carlisle is supervised by 72 authorities, out of which 46 have a definite part in its maintenance. Hitherto there has been no central body to co-ordinate the efforts and standardize the methods of these various local administrators. It is expected that the new centralisation scheme will prevent a great deal of confusion and overlapping, and will bring about some uniformity in the style and character of the roadways throughout the country.

JAPANESE WARSHIP

Contract for Dreadnought is Let to English Firm

Japan's newest Dreadnought will be built at Barrow-in-Furness by Messrs. Vickers, Sons, and Maxim. The contract, which has just been signed, provides that every portion of the warship, including the armor plate and gun mountings, shall be constructed by the same firm, which will not be allowed to sublet any part of the work.

The new vessel will have a displacement of between 27,000 and 28,000 tons and will cost, complete with armament and ammunition, nearly £2,500,000. Thirty months from the signing of the contract the vessel should be ready for sea.

Both Japan and Great Britain have reason to be pleased with the placing of this important contract in England. Japan has always admired British warship construction, and can never forget that the Mikasa, Admiral Togo's flagship, was built by the firm which has now been commissioned to build the new Dreadnought. The Imperial Japanese Government in placing the contract has also wished to give practical expression to the sincere regard it has for the alliance with Great Britain.

A COOL REQUEST

"Had I not practised physical exercise night and morning to the present time, I should never have been able to perform the work which has fallen to my lot." In these words Lord Alverstone the Lord Chief Justice, who is sixty-eight years of age, recently paid tribute to the value of sport and recreation. A great athlete in his younger days, he carried off the prize for the mile and two miles in the 'Varsity sports, and distinguished himself in the cricket field. His lordship's running feats were once recalled to him in court in an amusing manner by a prisoner whom he was trying. "I knows yer," said the prisoner, "and many's the time I've given yer a hand when ye've been stepping it round the track like a greyhound; so let's down lightly, like a good cove as yer are."

"IN THE CLOUDS"

Taking advantage of the brilliant light furnished for a gigantic illuminated fountain recently erected in Vienna, scientists there have made some interesting calculations as to the height of the clouds. By means of a projector it was found that a beam of light could be sent up to the clouds, producing upon them a luminous spot capable of being observed simultaneously from points on the earth two or three miles apart. By such observations the height of certain clouds of the cirrus variety was found to be nearly 33,000 feet, or 6¼ miles.

This Home-Made Cough Syrup will Surprise You

Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly. A Family Supply at Small Cost.

Here is a home-made remedy that takes hold of a cough instantly and will usually cure the most stubborn case in 24 hours. This recipe makes sixteen ounces—a family supply. You couldn't buy as much or as good ready-made cough syrup for $2.50.

Mix two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, and stir 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle, and add the Sugar Syrup. This keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste—children like it. Braces up the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

You probably know the medical value of pine in treating asthma, bronchitis, and other throat troubles, sore lungs, etc. There is nothing better. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guaiacol and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this inexpensive remedy have made friends for it in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed "Tender for Public Building, Tillsonburg, Ontario," will be received until 4 P.M., on Tuesday, February 28, 1911, for the construction of a Public Building at the place mentioned.

Persons tendering are notified that tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed forms supplied, and signed with their actual signatures, stating their occupations and places of residence. In the case of firms, the actual signature, the nature of the occupation and place of residence of each member of the firm must be given.

Each tender must be accompanied by an accepted cheque on a chartered bank, payable to the order of the Honorable the Minister of Public Works, equal to ten per cent. (10 p.c.) of the amount of the tender, which will be forfeited if the person tendering decline to enter into a contract when called upon to do so, or fail to complete the work contracted for. If the tender be not accepted the cheque will be returned.

The Department does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order,

GEORGE OWEN SQUIER: SOLDIER, SCIENTIST, PATRIOT

CLOSE View of the Man Who Has Devised a Method, Worth Untold Riches, Which May Girdle the Globe with "Wired Wireless" Communication and Who Has Laid His Invention on the Altar of Patriotism

"DEDICATED to the Public."

Those four words, printed at the head of the official documents just issued by the United States Patent Office, known as Patents Nos. 980,356 to 980,359, inclusive, tell the story of the devotion to his country and his country's good of Major George Owen Squier, assistant chief signal officer of the Army Signal Corps, soldier, scientist and patriot.

With an invention that bids fair to revolutionise the whole existing system of telephone communication in his hand: with a potential fortune in royalties almost literally within his grasp, Major Squier, his rights and title secured by the letters patent of the government, voluntarily gives up all claim to remuneration, because, as he puts it, "When an army man begins to think about money he begins to forget about the army."

If there were no such proviso attached to Major Squier's patents, the invention of multiplex telephony which the papers just issued disclose would still be of worldwide interest and importance, not only because it has solved a scientific problem that has been baffling savans for decades, but because it opens up a practical field of telephonic communication beyond the wildest dreams of the most daring of previous inventors. By harnessing the wire to the wireless this army scientist has shown how not only to make one wire do the work of many, but to do things no wire ever did before.

"Stretch a wire from Nome to Patagonia and you can talk over it and be heard from one end to the other," says Major Squier, and scientific men who have studied his invention agree that he is not exaggerating.

Moreover, not only is distance conquered by this new invention, but as many different conversations as there are sets of current generating apparatus can be carried on over the same wire at the same time. But important as the invention itself is, and interesting as are the possibilities that it opens up to the imagination, those four words, "Dedicated to the Public," compel attention to the inventor rather than to the invention and invite a study of the character of the man who can thus coolly toss prospective millions aside on the grounds of patriotism.

I found him in his office, on the fourth floor of the great War Department building in Washington. A slender, wiry, blue eyed, bald headed, red mustached man, who did not look within a decade of his forty-five years, responded when I inquired for Major Squier. Seated at his desk and attending to the multifarious details that devolve upon the chief of staff of the Signal Corps, he looked as little the man of science as he did the army officer. One could go through the building and pick out a score of hundred dollar a month clerks who look more like either the savant or the man at arms. But one cannot talk to him long without being impressed both with his remarkable attainments in scientific work and his keen sense of military honor and the duty of a soldier.

The bare biographical details of his life are interesting in themselves. Born at Dryden, Mich., on March 21 1867, with an ancestry that entitles him to membership in all the organizations of descendants of the founders of the Republic, he entered the United States Military Academy at the age of eighteen and was graduated with high honors in 1887.

"I was always interested in scientific matters, and especially in electro-physics," said Major Squier, talking about this stage of his life, "and I got a good groundwork of scientific knowledge at West Point, which I was fortunately able to build on by a course at Johns Hopkins University."

Major Squier stated his case with characteristic modesty. The fact is that the War Department, feeling the need of more officers educated in the then youthful science of electricity and attracted by his remarkable attainments at West Point, gave the young lieutenant of artillery five years in which to learn all that the greatest modern teacher of physics, Professor Rowland, of Johns Hopkins, could teach him. How well the young soldier improved his opportunity is shown by the fact that he was made a Fellow of Johns Hopkins in 1892 and received the degree of Ph. D. in the following year.

To the lay mind there is something somewhat incongruous in a doctor of philosophy holding a commission in the army. It was not so in Major Squier's case, however. In the early '90's the United States army was just awakening to the fact that something besides bulldog courage and patriotism was needed to make an army efficient. The best and latest knowledge that science could furnish was needed for the new army. Major Squier and his knowledge were needed badly. Down at Fort Monroe there had been established the Artillery School, where the science of the modern long range coast defence rifle and its armor piercing shell was being inculcated into young officers. He was sent down there as instructor in electricity and mines. He not only taught but he invented. He improved the old fashioned range finder until his electric synchronotome had superseded all cruder methods of pointing a 12-inch gun into the air at exactly the right angle to pulverize the enemy's men-of-war at a distance of ten miles or so. He worked out methods of connecting mine fields with the man behind the ramparts, and he did a dozen other things in the field of electricity that attracted attention from savans all over the world. In short, he applied to the practical army problems a wealth of scientific information that had never before been at the service of the government, and for amusement solved abstruse and academic scientific questions, the value of which was not immediately apparent, but which served to keep the scientific spirit of research and investigation at a keen edge.

It was in this service that the outbreak of the Spanish War found him. But in the Spanish War, except for a few timid New Englanders, every one realised that the coast artillery was a negligible factor. Young Squier—he was a captain by this time—wanted action. The Signal Corps, that arm of the service which, more than any other, deals daily with scientific problems, wanted officers. It demanded Squier and got him. He was made chief signal officer of the Third Army Corps.

It was one of his great disappointments, perhaps the only real disappointment of his career, that the Third Army Corps, which was to have occupied Havana, did not get any nearer the scene of action than Chickamauga. But he was soon to see action, and more of it than many a soldier who went to Cuba saw. The termination of the war and the possession of the Philippines by the United States brought many new problems to the fore, and among them not the least important was that of establishing communication between the hundreds of islands of the great Oriental archipelago. Here was a man's size job for the Signal Corps to tackle, and Captain Squier was the man assigned to tackle it.

There were several reasons why Captain Squier was the right man for the place. In the first place, his work in the Artillery School had dealt largely with submarine cable problems. Then, as it happened, he had prepared and read before a learned society in 1899 a paper on the proposed transpacific cable, in which he pointed out for the first time the advantage of Midway Island as an intermediate station between Hawaii and Guam—a suggestion that was afterward adopted when a private corporation, instead of the United States government, laid the cable in 1902. Besides, he had spent much time abroad studying cable systems of foreign countries, and he was, all in all, perhaps the best equipped man in the United States—certainly the best equipped in the government service—to undertake the work in the Philippines. For in those days the wireless had not been developed to a practical point, and nothing but a cable was ever considered as a means of intercommunication between the islands.

It was not merely a problem of cable laying that confronted Captain Squier—nothing so peaceful as that. It was the problem of laying a cable between islands filled with hostile savages and semi-savages, in an active state of revolt against the newly imposed authority of the United States, and making some six hundred shore connections in the very teeth of the enemy. How this work was accomplished, with the aid of the U. S. S. Burnside, the first armed cable ship ever sent out on such a combined errand of war and peace; how the Moros were overawed where necessary, pacified where possible; how lone cable operators were left on isolated islands in shacks hastily constructed by ship carpenters and with only their miniature arsenals to protect them against raids by the hostiles; how landings for the cables had to be forced by the persuasive power of Gatling guns mounted in launches; how the hostile Dattos were initiated into the mystery of the white man's "talking wire," and how, under the sole command of Captain Squier, the work was finally accomplished after two arduous years, would make a story in itself if one could drag the reluctant details from the man who did the job. Perhaps the best testimonials to the success which he achieved are the beautiful swords and other trophies that decorate his bachelor apartment, given to him by tribal chiefs whose hostility was changed to friendliness, and the bronze medal which the army regulations permit him to wear on the breast of his full dress uniform, inscribed "For Service."

Getting back to civilization in the beginning of the new century, Captain Squier found that the wireless telegraph, of which he had learned the theory while at Johns Hopkins, had become a practical device. He studied the work of Marconi and De Forest and the European inventors at first hand, and, as Chief Signal Officer of the Department of California, set about the development of this new means of communication to the needs of the army. His researches and contributions to science in this respect make a long series of papers, among the most interesting being his discovery that it is not necessary to erect poles and string wires into the air to obtain wireless communication, but that the branches of living trees are sufficiently conductive to answer every purpose. Field wireless telephones, their only aerial connections through nails driven into the trunks of trees, are in use today by the Signal Corps as the result of this discovery.

The scientific discoveries of this military doctor of philosophy were again interrupted, however, by another problem of communication. Alaska and the gold country along the Yukon were rapidly filling up with settlers, and the cry was coming there for better means of communication. Captain Squier was pressed into service as an expert. He decided upon the wireless telegraph as the best practical means of establishing communication quickly. The distances to be covered were longer than had ever before been attempted on land. He devised apparatus that met the needs and established the system which is now in operation.

First Aeroplane Passenger.

This difficult task was hardly completed before another and a still bigger one popped up to engage his energies. In the fall of 1907 the Wright brothers changed the world's ridicule into awe and respect by flying. The tremendous possibilities of the new means of locomotion instantly challenged the attention of the armies of the world and Congress appropriated money for aviation experiments and the purchase of such aeroplanes as might meet the army's requirements. The War Department Board of Aeronautics was created and the selection of Major Squier as its president, an office which he still retains, followed as a matter of course.

Plunging into the science of aviation with the same scientific ardor that he had applied to his electrical problems, Major Squier prepared the specifications that governed the selection of an aeroplane to be used by the government, and in doing so worked out the tables of resistance, pressure and air that are still the standard authority on the subject. In charge of the tests of the Wright brothers' aeroplane at Fort Myer, in the autumn of 1908, Major Squier earned the distinction of being the first passenger ever carried in an aeroplane, accompanying Orville Wright around the parade ground on the very day before the accident that cost the life of Lieutenant Selfridge.

Aviation as adapted to military needs provided a permanent employment for Major Squier, but he did not allow either that or the duties of Assistant Chief Signal Officer to interfere with his interest in his first love, electricity. In the laboratory of the Signal Corps numberless experiments in wireless telephony were being worked out under Major Squier's direction. A little more than a year ago the idea occurred to him that possibly the difficulties that surround both the wireless telephone and the instrument which requires the wire might be overcome by combining the two systems. It was a mere theory. He took pencil and paper and burned the midnight oil until he had developed the theory into a practical possibility. Then he proceeded to demonstrate it. The Bureau of Standards offered the use of its great research laboratory at Chevy Chase, a telephone wire was strung between that point and the laboratory of the Signal Corps, machinery that would produce the results which Major Squier had calculated must be produced was bought and installed, and the practical experiment was made. It worked, and multiplex telephony, wireless telephony directed by a wire, long distance telephony with no calculable limit to the length of the line of communication, and practical telephony on a single wire instead of the metallic circuit all became possible at a single stroke.

Then Major Squier patented his invention and dedicated it to the public.

That is the story of the inventor whom the scientific world is acclaiming to-day as the logical successor of Edison, Marconi and the other great pioneers in the world of electricity. It is a story that has to be dug up from the records or extracted piecemeal from the inventor by methods known to the experienced interviewer, for Major Squier would much rather talk about his invention than about himself. And when one asks him, "Why did you give this invention to the public instead of making a fortune for yourself out of it?" he replies, with a trace of impatience: "Because I am an army man, and when an army man begins to think of money he begins to forget about the army."

It is really a source of surprise to Major Squier that any one should wonder at his altruistic action. It seems to him the only proper thing for a man to do in his circumstances. He has been overwhelmed with letters, requests for photographs and for interviews, inquiries from scientists and telephone experts for details of his invention, since the moment when his discovery was first announced. With unfailing courtesy he has answered their interrogations, but always with an air of being somewhat puzzled at finding himself so suddenly the centre of public attention.

There was nothing to compel the inventor to give the fruits of his invention to the American people, in spite of the fact that his discoveries were made in the pursuit of his work for the army. The records are full of instances where government employes have made their own fortunes out of inventions made while working for the government. There are a few—only a very few—shining instances in which others have done what Major Squier has just done.

"I made it perfectly clear in my patent application," said Major Squier, calling attention to the paragraph in the patent papers which states that "this application is made under the act of March 3, 1883, chapter 143, and the invention herein described and claimed may be used by the government of the United States or any of its officers or employes in the prosecution of work for the United States, or by any person in the United States without the payment of royalty thereon." But the statute to which he refers, an almost forgotten one, is permissive, not mandatory. It simply provides that any employe of the government who is willing to dedicate his patent to the public may obtain it without paying the usual Patent Office fee. That is all.

"I want to make it clear," said Major Squier, dismissing as of no further interest the question of altruism and turning to the discussion of his invention, "that I have not invented any new machine or device of any kind. I have merely patented a method of using the wireless currents for telephoning along the line of a wire. All the machinery and apparatus which I use or which any one needs to use to carry out this method is purchasable in the open market."

"But just what, stripped of technical terms, is your invention?" he was asked.

"To put it briefly, it is wired wireless," was the reply. "The public understands the difficulties in the way of long distance telephony pretty well, I believe. The principal one is that only the direct current can be used in ordinary telephone work, and to carry the direct current to any great distance requires conductors so large as to be impracticable. Now, what I have done is simply to adapt the alternating current of high frequency to the use of the telephone, and I have done this by adapting the instruments used in wireless telegraphy to the purpose. This high frequency current travels along the wire, but not in it, as I believe, but through the ether immediately surrounding it, exactly as the wireless waves travel through the ether. But where the ordinary wireless waves are diffused, radiating in every direction from their starting point, these waves travel along a fixed path, which is marked out by the wire, which serves as a core.

From Nome to Patagonia.

"In wireless we are using everybody's ether, and the ether is full of cross currents, static electricity and other disturbing elements. In this device we make our own hole through the atmosphere, as it were, by means of the wire, and nothing else interferes with it. The result is that we can send messages along the path of the wire as far as the alternating current will carry, and no practical limit to that distance has yet been found. Stretch a wire from Nome to Patagonia, and you can talk over it and be heard from one end to the other."

"Can the alternating current waves be used at the same time that the telephone is being used with the direct current on the same wire?"

"Yes, and more than that; any number of alternating current messages may be transmitted in either direction at the same time," replied Major Squier. "The alternating current, with frequencies above twenty thousand alternations a second, makes no audible disturbance, and by tuning the instruments, exactly as wireless instruments are tuned, to receive or transmit only vibrations of a certain wave length, all interference of one alternating current with another for instance, to carry on a dozen conversations over it at the same time."

"Not only that, but conversations with Cincinnati, St. Louis, Denver and all intermediate points, provided there were a generator for each line of communication," is modified. "The limit is only the number of generators of alternating current, each at a different speed, that it may be found desirable to connect with a single wire."

"Then it would be practical, if a wire were stretched between Washington and San Francisco, for it necessary to have these generators at each end of the line?"

"No, a single generator will serve to transmit messages by the alternating current from either end of the line."

"Will there be no danger in using the telephone with the alternating current?"

"Not at all. While the current used in this work is of tremendous frequency the voltage is low and one can take it through the body without injury or without even experiencing any sensation whatever."

"As a matter of practical use, what changes will have to be made in existing telephone equipments to make your invention applicable?"

"None at all except the addition of alternating current generators. I have invented nothing that will destroy the usefulness of any existing telephone system. All the wires and central stations now in use can remain exactly as they are, and the companies may add as many generators and sets of apparatus as they desire to use. Take a central station with, say, a thousand trunk lines radiating from it. By adding ten generators, each producing an alternating current with a different frequency of alternation, every one of those radiating lines can be made to carry eleven messages at once instead of one, to any point along the route of the wire at which the simple receiving and transmitting instruments that occupy no more space than those now in use may be set up.

"The capacity of such a central station would thus be multiplied eleven-fold. A hundred generators might be used, each of them furnishing a different speed of alternating current for each of the thousand wires. On the other hand, a single wire running to one building, could be made, by the use of a number of generators in the central station, to supply a private branch exchange of as many instruments as there are generators, each instrument being tuned to a different frequency of alternation."

"Your patents describe a method of getting the return circuit through the earth. Is this a new departure in telephony?"

"That is another feature that makes the new system more economical," replied Major Squier. "The ordinary telephone current cannot be used without a complete metallic circuit, since the earth currents disturb it and cause interference and noises in the telephone. The alternating current, such as is used in this system, will return through the earth without difficulty, making it possible to use only one wire where two are now necessary."

"What will be the expense of installing each generator in a central telephone system?" was the interviewer's final question.

"I have not calculated it, but it will not be large," said Major Squier. "A very few thousands of dollars at the outside. Everything necessary can, as I have stated, be bought in the open market, and any kind of a dynamo that will produce a high frequency, low voltage alternating current will answer the main purpose."

The plant at the Bureau of Standards laboratory, which the inventor declares would suffice to energize a wire stretching from ocean to ocean, occupies a space less than ten feet square. Aside from the switchboards and driving motor of common types the thing that strikes the eye is the tiny dynamo, practically a solid disk or flywheel of nickel steel, revolving at the rate of twenty thousand revolutions a minute. In order that there may be no vibration at this terrific speed a flexible shaft that tapers down to hardly three-eighths of an inch in thickness is used and the whirring wheel finds its own centre and revolves almost without noise.

"If that wheel, a foot in diameter, could travel over the ground as fast as it revolves in the machine it would roll to the Pacific coast in four hours," said Major Squier, "for its circumference is revolving at the rate of more than twelve miles a minute."

Upstairs in the laboratory are the telephone instruments. One is an ordinary telephone set and is connected in the ordinary way with the wire leading to the Signal Corps laboratory on Pennsylvania avenue, seven miles away. The other instrument differs in outward appearance from those ordinarily used in having two rubber tubes attached to the transmitter.

"This is a transmitter we used for wireless telephony and we had these tubes put on for a water circulation in case the instrument got heated," explained R. R. Hermann, a remarkable youth of eighteen, who is one of Major Squier's principal scientific assistants—"a wizard" Major Squier calls him.

Experiments With Phonograph.

It will not be necessary, it was explained, to use the water circulation with the "wired wireless." The receiver for the alternating current impulses is just like an ordinary telephone receiver, mounted on a head piece, but the hand type may be used as well. But between the wire and the receiver is the wireless detector, the application of which is regarded by scientists as one of the most important features of the invention—a real stroke of genius.

On the table in the laboratory stands a phonograph. It is explained that this was used in the experiments of sending two messages at once, because there could not always be two assistants on hand to talk simultaneously. And it has been found that the music of the phonograph, like the sound of the human voice, is carried very much more clearly by the alternating current than by the ordinary telephone. There is a complete absence of any buzzing or external noises, and the labial and consonant sounds which are indistinct over the best of the ordinary type of telephones come through as clearly as the vowels.

As to the popular interest in Major Squier's invention, there is no room for doubt. When the Patent Office announces the granting of a patent it has prepared in advance a hundred printed copies of the drawings, specifications and claims for general distribution. It is a rare patent the files of which are greatly depleted after many years. Within twenty-four hours after Major Squier's invention had been published in the official gazette every copy of the four patents that cover the ground had been called for, and the demand for additional copies was so great, from scientists, telephone companies and technical publications, that a new edition of two hundred copies had to be ordered.

As to the scientific importance of the invention the Patent Office authorities cannot speak—they are not allowed to. But it is no violation of confidence to say that privately and anonymously they look upon the "wired wireless" as one of the great epoch making forward steps in electrical invention, revolutionary in its character, basic in its breadth and of tremendous importance as a practical and commercial asset.

And it is "dedicated to the public."

No Drinking Man Need Despair

The Neal Cure—Greatest of all Modern Discoveries—Offers a Means of Escape from the Curse of Drink. A Cure of the Drink Habit is Guaranteed in Three Days, no matter whether the Patient is a Hard and Constant Drinker, Social Tippler or goes on Occasional Sprees

MANY SUCCESSFUL CURES IN TORONTO

There was wandering in the streets of Toronto lately, a homeless man, who at one time held a splendid position, but drink was his downfall. To-day his wife, a cultured woman, works out by the day endeavoring to support herself and little family. Think of it, you wives and mothers, who have homes of comfort and all that makes life worth living, what it would be to you to be deprived of these and forced to face the wash tub for an existence, as this poor wife has to do to-day?

But this home which was made a hell on earth through strong drink—as every drunkard's is—may be made into a heaven upon earth, as many have been made, as a result of the Neal Treatment. Three days only—the wonder of it—to effect a cure and make the victim of strong drink a new man physically, morally and mentally.

We undertake to guarantee to effect a cure of the Drink Habit in Three Days, no matter whether the patient is a hard and constant drinker, social tipp er or goes on occasional sprees. Are you interested in a poor fellow going down, down, through the curse of drink; then bring your influence to bear on him and bring him to the Neal Institute for treatment, drunk or sober, and we will undertake to remove the awful appetite for strong drink and deliver him to you a new man.

Here is an opportunity for REFORMATION SOCIETIES for INEBRIATES or any institution for the reformation of the drunkard to test our ability to change the hard drinker into a new man physically and mentally in THREE DAYS' treatment.

We invite these Societies or any institution interested in the poor drunkard and the problem of dealing with him to send us for treatment any victim of the drink habit, it makes no difference how much enslaved, and we guarantee to effect a cure in each and every case. Can you spend your money to better advantage or in a way that will bring in greater returns than in redeeming these victims of strong drink and giving back to their families kind fathers, brothers, husbands and to the country most desirable citizens?

RUBBER PLANT CULTIVATION

Some Interesting Facts About the Industry Which is Thriving in Many Southern Countries

Owing to the rubber boom trees are being planted in every part of the tropical world suitable for their culture. Day after day the demand for rubber increases. Twenty-five years ago about 5,000 tons of rubber sufficed for the world's requirements. Now the estimated annual consumption of rubber, owing to the development of the electrical industry and motor-trade, is 70,000 tons. Taxi-cabs, for instance, use up four sets of tires a year, and create a demand for something like 50,000 tons of rubber. No substitute for natural rubber has yet been invented—though clever chemists are experimenting all over the world—and, as the wild trees of South America and the Congo are insufficient to meet the increased demand, the world's supply is being supplemented from great forests of plantation rubber.

Hundreds of new companies have been floated to develop rubber estates in various parts of the world, and hence the great boom in rubber shares. As showing the extraordinary rise in price, it might be mentioned that two years ago rubber sold at 2s. 9d. per lb.; to-day the price in Mincing Lane is over 12s. per lb. What is more, according to Sir Robert Laidlaw, who is a great authority in the rubber world, there seems no immediate prospect of the price being reduced. "In fact," he says, "the presumption is the other way. There are some good judges who think that rubber will go up to £1 before it falls, but personally I should not like to prophesy."

Success in Ceylon

The rubber which comes from Para, the centre of the rubber industry on the Amason, is regarded as the best for most purposes, for in the forests of Central and Northern Brazil the Hevea Brasiliensis—to give the proper scientific name to the best rubber trees—grow in abundance. These trees have been introduced with great success in Ceylon, the Malay States, and other parts of our Eastern possessions. One great advantage growers have had in Ceylon is that they were able to continue cultivating their tea while the rubber trees were maturing in the same plantations. Their rubber is of the best quality, containing about 95 per cent. of pure rubber as against 83 per cent. in the best Para.

An acre of good land will support about 120 trees of the Para variety, and under favorable conditions the trees grow with great rapidity. It is recorded that rubber trees planted in Ceylon have attained a height of 50 feet and a girth of 2 feet from the surface of the ground in six years. At the end of that time the trees are ready for tapping in order to extract the latex or sap which is transformed into rubber.

The Art of Tapping

The process of tapping is a very interesting one, and on it depends a great deal; for unsuccessful tapping might mean the destruction of full-grown trees, or the impoverishing of the supply of latex. In gathering the latter, the collector goes out armed with a bill-hook for cutting the bark. In cutting, however, he must be very careful not to cut into the tree—only to go bark deep. Should he cut farther in he runs the risk of spoiling the rubber latex.

The bark is cut in a "herring-bone" pattern—that is to say, a perpendicular cut is made on the trunk of the tree from which other cuts branch round the trunk. Sometimes, however, the spiral method is employed, a spiral cut being made round the tree to a great height. Then a vessel is placed underneath the main cut to catch the latex.

From Latex to Rubber

When the latex has been collected, the owner proceeds to make it into rubber. This is done in a very simple but at the same time somewhat tedious manner. As a rule, a fire is made with a certain kind of nuts and wood, over which a funnel-shaped inverted tin is placed. The nuts, which do not burn, cause a dense smoke to come through the narrow opening at the top of the tin.

As soon as the heat has become very strong, and the esmoke assumes a whitish color, the operator takes a broad piece of stick and dips it into the vessel containing the latex. Withdrawing it covered with the latex he holds it over the narrow opening of the tin through which the smoke is issuing, slowly turning the while, until the latex upon the stick has become thick and filmy to appearance. It has now become rubber. Without removing from from the stick the rubber which has coagulated thereon, he dips it back again into the vessel, and goes on repeating the performance of dipping and smoking until he sometimes has as much as 60 lbs. of rubber upon the stick. The stick is then withdrawn from the rubber, which is quite ready for the market.

LAND REGULATIONS.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH WEST

ANY PERSON who is the sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter-section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. The applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the district. Entry by proxy may be made at any agency, on certain conditions, by father, mother, son daughter, brother or sister of intending homesteader

Duties—Six months' residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres solely owned and occupied by him or by his father, mother son, daughter, brother or sister.

In certain districts, a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter section alongside his homestead. Price $3 per acre. Duties—Must reside upon the homestead or pre-emption six months in each of six years from date of homestead entry (including the time required to earn homestead patent) and cultivate fifty acres extra.

A homesteader who has exhausted his homestead right and cannot obtain a pre-emption may enter for a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3 per acre in certain districts. Price $5 00 per acre Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate fifty acres and erect a house worth $300.00.

MARK TWAIN MADE THE WORLD LAUGH

The famous humorist who has just died was a wit before he left the nursery. One day his father led him into the garden, and, pointing to a bed of flowers that had a considerable number of weeds in it, said: "I want you to weed out this flower-bed." Young Clemens looked at it for a moment, and then naively inquired, "Wouldn't it be better, father, to flower out this weed-bed?"

London police are not a little proud of the compliment Mark Twain paid them when he visited this country in 1907. "They would not only salute me," he observed, "but would hold up their puissant hands and paralyze the commerce of the world's greatest city just to let me cross the street."

It was during this visit that a London paper, either by accident or design, came out on the day of his landing with this placard:—

MARK TWAIN ARRIVES.
ASCOT CUP STOLEN

This was too much for "Mark." He publicly declared that he had not got the Cup. He didn't know where it was. He didn't want to know. All he wanted was that his character should be cleared at once. The sequel came when the Savage Club took up the joke and presented the humorist with a facsimile of the Cup.

Talking of this incident reminds one of Twain's "Notice to the Next Burglar," which he wrote on a piece of cardboard and nailed to the front door after burglars had entered his Connecticut home and carried off considerable booty. The notice ran:—

"There is nothing but plated ware in this house now and henceforth. You will find it in the dining-room, over in the corner by the basket of kittens. If you want the basket put the kittens in the brass thing. Do not make a noise. It disturbs the family. You will find goloshes in the front hall by that thing which has umbrellas in it—a chiffonier, I think they call it, or a pergola, or something like that. Please close the door."

The humorist had something of a tenderness for burglars.

"The burglar," he said once, as he fondled a new revolver, "like everyone else, must make a living; perhaps he has a family to support." Then he whistled, and three great dogs leapt into the study. "What a pity it would be," he continued, pensively, "if the burglar's family should be deprived of its invisible means of support."

Mark Twain has not been wanting in personal homage of humble admirers, and often a representative of them rang his door-bell and asked the privilege of paying his respects. Not long since a big, good-natured countryman—a butcher, as he introduced himself—after a few minutes' chat, asked, "Now, tell me for a fact, are you the one who wrote all them books?" "Truly I am," said Mark. "Of course you are, of course you are," cried the earnest fellow; "but, by George, I shouldn't think it by your looks." Whereat Mark was hugely tickled.

Mark Twain's passion for smoking was, of course, well known, but it came as a great surprise when he confessed last autumn that he had enjoyed forty cigars a day for twenty years. It was a great deprivation to him when the doctors cut his allowance down to four a day.

"My only restriction as regards tobacco," he once remarked, "is never to smoke more than one cigar at a time. I smoked discreetly during my father's lifetime. He died fifty-eight years ago; ever since then I have smoked publicly. I never smoke when asleep, and never refrain when awake. As for drinking, my rule is, when others drink I like to help, otherwise I remain dry."

When Mark Twain was a young and struggling newspaper writer in San Francisco a lady of his acquaintance saw him one day, with a cigar-box under his arm, looking in at a shop window. "Mr. Clemens," she said, "I always see you with a cigar-box under your arm. I am afraid you are smoking too much." "It isn't that," said Mark Twain. "I'm moving again."

In his autobiography Mark Twain has placed it on record that he was "a sickly and precarious and tiresome and uncertain child," and lived mainly on allopathic medicines for the first seven years of his life. "I don't think I needed them," he said, referring to his childhood during a speech on his seventieth birthday. "It was for economy; my father took a drug store for a debt, and it made cod-liver oil cheaper than the other breakfast foods. We had nine barrels of it, and it lasted me seven years. Then I was weaned. The rest of the family had to get along with rhubarb and ipecac and such things because I was the pet. I had it all. I was the first Standard Oil Trust."

Talking of speeches, at a public dinner on one occasion Mark Twain's name was associated with the toast of literature by an orator who, in the course of his speech, eloquently referred to Homer, Milton, Shakespeare, and—Mark Twain! The humorist, in reply, thanked the speaker for his allusions, and excused himself for acknowledging them at greater length by saying: "Homer is dead; Milton is dead; Shakespeare is dead; and I am not feeling any too well myself!"

Mark Twain gained a reputation as a humorist in the days when he was writing for the newspapers, and a comedian once offered him five dollars for half-a-dozen good jokes. Mark refused on the ground that if he were found with five dollars on him he would be suspected of stealing the money, and if the comedian were discovered with six good jokes he would be arrested for theft.

FAIR AVIATORS

Keen Rivalry Among the Women Champions of the Air

There is a remarkable competition in France just now between the fair flying champions of France, Mlle. Dutrieu and Mlle. Marvingt. Mlle. Helene Dutrieu flies at Etampes, and Mlle. Marvingt at Mourmelon.

The latter is a pupil of M. Latham the former is a pupil of M. Henri Farnam. Not long ago Mlle. Marvingt flew for fifty-three minutes at Mourmelon, and now Mlle. Dutrieu has snatched the record from her by flying for one hour nine minutes a Etampes. Both are handsome young women, lively on the ground, and a cool as cucumbers in the air. The "Telegraph" says they steer aeroplanes as if they were only perambulators, and have a miraculous way of avoiding accidents.

They know nothing about the motors and want to know nothing. One of them was told not to touch a feed pipe when in the air. She did touch it, however, because she forgot, and the machine came down gently, knowing, as it were, that the intention was harmless. Both of them are competing for the Coupe Femina, which is a prize offered by M. Pierre Laffitte for the best flight of a feminine pilot before the end of this year.

When Mlle. Marvingt achieved her record at Mourmelon, Mlle. Dutrieu was piqued at Etampes. A pupil of Farman, she prided herself that she could do as well as a pupil of Latham. Despite a breeze she went up and flew till it became too dark to see. She covered a distance of about thirty-eight miles round a four-mile course.

For the present, therefore, she is entitled to the Coupe Femina, but Mlle Marvingt is getting ready to fly one better at Mourmelon under the direction of M. Latham

A SALMON'S LEAP

Jumped Into Boat 15 Inches Above the Waterline

A curious thing happened at Dunfallandy, Pitlochry, during the night recently. The Tummel was in high flood, and Mr. Stewart Fergusson's overman went down early in the morning to see to the safety of one of the boats, riding in the river at the end of a long rope, and about 15 feet from the bank. There had been a lot of rain during the night, and the boat had about nine to ten inches of water in her, in the middle of which floated a fine, almost clean, salmon of about 20 lbs. It was still alive, though much exhausted, as the water had become quite deoxygenized. It had leaped into the boat during the night. The sides of the boat are quite 15 inches above the water line. The salmon soon revived and swam away, after being put into some clean water.

DRINK HABIT

CURED IN THREE DAYS

Victims of Drink Renewed in Mind, Body and Nerves

For eleven years the Gatlin Institute has been curing men and women of appetite, craving and desire for liquor. There has been failure to cure in NO case. Thousands of successful business and prof-ssional men owe their social and financial standing to the fact that they were cured of the drink habit by the Gatlin treatment.

THE GATLIN
"The Treatment That is Harmless"

Any child could safely take the Gatlin treatment—no poisonous drugs, no substitute stimulants, no pain or suffering—NO HYPODERMIC INJECTIONS—therefore, no possibility of bad after-effects. No one need be AFRAID of the Gatlin treatment, because it contains nothing that could possibly injure; but ALL men should be afraid of liquor—it destroys the nerves, weakens the brain, saps the physical strength, ruins the business and home, and kills manhood.

ONLY TREATMENT ADMINISTERED UNDER CONTRACT TO CURE

Have the one you desire cured of the disgusting habit of liquor drinking come to the Gatlin Institute. Under contract, executed in writing, a cure shall be effected in THREE DAYS—a perfectly satisfactory cure—or the fee paid will be refunded when the patient leaves the institute and treatment cost nothing. The very highest financial references.

The Gatlin Home treatment is for those who would find a three days' visit to the Institute inconvenient.

Call or write, telephone or telegraph for book of particulars and other information. Telephone North 4538.

A Win For the Wets.

Barrie, Feb. 7.—A recount of the local option vote, which was asked for by some in favor of the bylaw, took place yesterday before Judge Wismer, and resulted in a further victory for the anti-local option side. Two votes which had been counted in favor of the bylaw were thrown out, thus defeating the bylaw by ten votes instead of eight.

Refused to Be Rescued.

Viborg, Finland, Feb. 7.—Two vessels sent to the rescue of the fishermen who on Friday were swept out to sea on an ice floe in a gale yesterday found the floe stranded near the Island of Seiskar. The fishermen, who numbered 253, were in no danger and refused to be taken off.

Incensed at Discharge of Foreman.

St. Catharines, Feb. 7.—Over a hundred men in the blacksmith and press departments of the McKinnon Dash Co., walked out yesterday, incensed at the discharge of Foreman Russell and his replacement by an American. The men say they will not go back until Russell is reinstated.

Says:—"Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is the Best Cough Syrup She Ever Used."

She writes:—"Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is the best cough syrup I ever used. My baby had a very bad cold. I was using Dr.'s medicine but that didn't seem to help the awful cough she had until I got a bottle of this great syrup. I have it in the house at the present time for the children and I think I couldn't get along if I didn't have it. I wish to thank you for all the good it has been to my family."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup contains all the lung healing virtues of the Norway pine tree, which combined with Wild Cherry bark and other pectoral remedies makes it one of the greatest known preparations for Coughs, Colds and all Throat and Lung Troubles.

It is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents at all dealers.

MILITANTS REFRAIN

Called Off Interference With the Opening of British House of Parliament Yesterday—A Brilliant Affair

SPEECH FROM THRONE

London, Feb. 7.—The formal opening of the new Parliament yesterday was marked by gorgeous ceremony and was attended by King George and Queen Mary and their suites, most of the dignitaries of the Empire, many members of the diplomatic corps and all others who could crowd within the doors of Westminster.

The processional display of nobility and military was one of magnificence. The streets were massed with people from dawn on, waiting to catch a glimpse of the coach containing the King and Queen and the Prince of Wales. Among the spectators were many Americans, some of whom paid large prices in order to see the great procession. The immense throngs cheered mightily for the King and Queen.

The suffragettes gave up their proposed attack upon the Parliament Building and King George at the last moment. Christobel Pankhurst, one of the leaders of the militant suffragettes, issued a statement declaring that no attempt would be made to storm Parliament or mob the King. However, believing this might be a ruse, the police kept up their strict guard.

Following the example of his father, the late King Edward, King George V. delivered the crown's address to Parliament in person. It contained a strong plea for the furtherance of friendly relations between England and other powers of the world. After expressing pleasure at the result of the trip of the Duke of Connaught to South Africa, the King said:

"My relations with foreign powers continue friendly. Japan intends to terminate the treaty of 1894. It is hoped that satisfactory arrangements can be made for a new treaty."

The King next referred to the action taken by the British Government to restore order along the trade routes of Southern Persia.

His Majesty announced that proposals will be submitted to settle the relations between the two Houses of Parliament, with the object of securing a more effective legislation.

That the King made no further announcement on the veto question caused great surprise among members of both branches of Parliament.

Continuing his speech His Majesty announced that measures would be presented to provide insurance for the industrial population against sickness and invalidity. This measure will embody the plan of a slight tax to provide the principal for the payment of the insurance pensions.

Both Lord Lansdowne and A. J. Balfour took occasion to denounce the reciprocity agreement between the United States and Canada, but the evening session was mainly devoted to getting the legislative ship under way.

Premier Asquith gave formal notice of the veto bill, and his intention to claim the whole time of the House until the Easter recess in order to get the veto bill disposed of before the coronation. The Government's policy was discussively criticised in the two Houses, but outside of references to the reciprocity agreement, the debate on the address was of no special interest.

Lord Lansdowne intimated that the House of Lords was still ready to negotiate with the Government on the necessary changes in the constitution of the Upper Chamber and the relations between the two Houses. James Ramsay Macdonald, who, yesterday elected chairman of the Labor party to replace George Nicoll Barnes, who retired on account of illness, characterized Mr. Balfour's description of the reciprocity agreement as an imperial disaster, as the most awkward and colossal blunder he had ever heard in Parliament.

The Prime Minister replied to the Opposition speeches, saying that for the present it would be wise to withhold criticism of the reciprocity agreement. It was as certain as the rising of the sun, that sooner or later the U. S. would have been bound to level the tariff wall with Canada. He said it was certain that the Government could do nothing by preference to prevent the natural trend of even this.

It is expected that the debate on the address will be carried over into next week. As the speech from the throne made no mention of the Aliens Act, the Opposition has given notice of an amendment raising this question.

The Irish party, at a prolonged meeting, adopted a resolution to the effect that, while approving the principle of the payment of members of the House of Commons, they desired this measure excluded until home rule has been granted, preferring to depend on voluntary contributions, and would therefore ask the Government to devote the money to some useful public purpose in Ireland. It is known that Mrs. Asquith is opposed to any such differential action, and is unlikely to accede to this.

Might Have Been Serious.

Palmerston, Feb. 7.—Fire broke out in the Albion Hotel stable, a large frame building close behind the hotel, also frame, and situated close to the Grand Trunk yards. A fierce easterly gale was blowing, and for a time things looked serious for the business street of the town, but thanks to the new waterworks system, the fire was confined to the building in which it started.

Following Toronto's Lead.

Winnipeg, Feb. 7.—An agitation among consumers here over gas bills has reached the City Hall. It is likely that the council will be urged to take action towards securing a reduction of rates. The present prices are $1.20 to $1.35 per thousand net. Efforts will be made to secure an agreement similar to that in Toronto, where rates have been lowered to 70 cents

The death occurred on Sunday of Loucks, one of the heaviest men in and around Smith's Falls. He weighed until he was taken ill last November, three hundred and sixty pounds.

Edward F. Mylius, who on Feb. 1, was found guilty of criminal libel against King George and was sentenced to one year's imprisonment, had lodged an appeal against the judgment.

In reply to a question by Mr. Borden, Hon. Mr. Graham stated in the Dominion House yesterday that the cost of the N.T.R. between Winnipeg and Moncton to the end of last year had been $89,553,740.

Want Better Food.

Montreal, Feb. 7.—Claiming that their food is not fit to eat, the students of the Presbyterian Theological College threaten to leave the college in a body unless some change is made. Incipient riots have broken out in the dining-room on several occasions, and recently the trouble came to a head, when the students complained to the faculty.

A Farmer's Suicide.

Brockville, Feb. 7.—Albert Carroll, a prosperous farmer, living three miles from Westport Village, committed suicide by drinking carbolic acid. Worry over a recent business transaction is reported to have caused mental derangment, with the above result. Carroll leaves a widow and family.

THE MARKETS.

Liverpool Wheat Futures Close Higher, Chicago Lower—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Feb. 6.—Widespread snow, directly beneficial to fall-sown wheat, carried down the price of wheat to-day. The far southwest, the, where moisture would be of greatest help, received very little. As a result, the advance was checked, with closing figures at a net loss of only ¼c to ⅝c. The day's trading left corn unchanged to a sixteenth lower, oats off a shade to ¼c, and provisions not altered more than a nickel either way.

The Liverpool market closed ¼d to ⅜d higher than on Saturday for wheat futures; corn, ⅛d to ¼d lower. Berlin closed ⅜c higher; Buda Pest, ⅜c lower; Paris, ¼c to ⅜c lower, and Antwerp, unchanged.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, Feb. 6.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 78 carloads, consisting of 1401 cattle, 37 hogs, 355 sheep and lambs, 34 calves and 18 horses.

Exporters.

Alexander McIntosh bought 37 export steers, 1320 to 1400 lbs. each, at $5.50 to $6.15.

Butchers.

Prime picked lots of butchers sold at $5.90 to $6; loads of good at $5.60 to $5.75, medium, $5.15 to $5.40; common, $4.90 to $5.15; cows, $3 to $5.15; bulls, $4 to $5.

Milkers and Springers.

Veal Calves.

Thirty-four veal calves found ready sale at $8.50 to $9.50 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Sheep, ewes, sold at $4 to $4.50 per cwt.; rams at $3.50 to $3.75; lambs, $5 to $5.65 and one extra lot at $5.90 per cwt.

Hogs.

Hogs were reported at $7.60, fed and watered, and $7.15 to drovers for hogs f.o.b. cars at country points, which means $7 to farmers.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Feb. 6.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending Feb. 4, were 1620 cattle, 320 sheep and lambs, 1650 hogs and 375 calves. The offerings on the market this morning amounted to 750 cattle, 200 sheep and lambs, 1000 hogs and 100 calves.

The stronger feeling which developed in the market for cattle a week ago has been fully maintained owing to the continued small supplies coming forward and the higher prices demanded for them at country points on account of improved condition and quality of the same.

There was a large gathering of buyers, notwithstanding the cold weather, and as they all seemed to be short of beef the demand was good and a fairly active trade was done. A few extra choice steers sold as high as seven cents per pound, but the bulk of the trading was done in choice stock at 6¾c, good at 6½c to 6¾c, fairly good at 6¼c to 6c, fair at 5½c to 5¾c, and the lower grades at 4½c to 5c per pound. There were a few extra choice heavy bulls offered, which brought as high as 4c, 6¼c and others sold at 5c to 5½c per lb.

There was a stronger undertone to the market for hogs and prices scored an advance of 10c per cwt. Supplies were fairly large for the demand was keen from packers, and an active trade was done, sales of selected lots being made at $7.35 to $8 per cwt, weighed off the cars. Owing to the limited supplies of lambs coming forward a stronger feeling developed in the market and prices advanced ½c per lb. The demand was good and all the offerings met with a ready sale at 6¼c to 6½c per lb. The market for sheep was steady at 4½c to 4¾c per pound.

TALK OF IT--Let No Other Meetings of Any Kind be Announced for This Date. Every Soul in Peterborough is Thankful for Our English Bible--TALK OF IT

THE TRADE AGREEMENT IN RELATION TO THE INTERESTS OF THE FARMER

Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P., for West Peterborough, Speaks in an Interview of the Bearing of the Proposed Agreement for Free Exchange, Upon Fruit Growing and Farm Products.

The trade agreement between Canada and the United States, now under discussion by the legislative bodies of both countries, with a view to ratification or rejection, as the case may be, is naturally attracting universal attention. As to be expected of a proposal so wide in its scope, containing so many details, and whose effects cannot be estimated by any arbitrary standard, there is considerable difference of opinion; and it will, perhaps, be interesting to have some expression of representative opinion; of men, who, from their position, will have a voice in the final decision of the fate of the agreement.

The Examiner, therefore, took advantage of the presence in the city of Hon. Mr. Stratton, the representative in Parliament of West Peterborough, to solicit some expression of opinion from him in reference to the agreement.

"I see, Mr. Stratton, by Montreal and Toronto papers, that it is reported that the trade agreement is 'making things warm for you' in your constituency. Have you any objection to stating how the matter affects you?"

"It is a difficult matter," Mr. Stratton said, "to give an off-hand, and anything like, an exhaustive statement on so large a subject, with so many details. There has been so much utter rot handed out to the papers in the form of opinions, speculations and guesses, that it seems to me that little attention has been given the subject by these moulders of public opinion."

"I have not had the time as yet to give the matter study enough to form a general and conclusive opinion. But there are two or three outstanding features so apparently simple and self evident that I have little difficulty in forming an opinion regarding them.

"And, what are these, Mr. Stratton?"

The Fruit Industry.

"Take, for instance, the products of the soil generally—farm, dairy, and orchard crops, which are generally on the free list. There does not seem to be much chance for difference of opinion as to their bearing upon the farmers of the country."

"I noticed that it was stated that the fruit growers of South Monaghan were alarmed as to the results of the agreement upon the fruit-growing interests of the Township."

"Is South Monaghan a great fruit growing township?"

"There's the surprising thing. I am not aware that fruit growing is its chief industry. But, if it were, it is reasonable to ask if the free entry of Canadian fruit into the United States would be an injury? If every foot of land in this splendid township were devoted to fruit, a market could be found for it at good prices. All that the trade agreement has done to the fruit production of South Monaghan, as well as other parts of Canada, is to provide a market; and next to a good crop a good market with good prices is the farmers' bonanza. That's what the farmer wants, whether he grows fruit or grain."

Will Boom Small Fruits.

"Will the fruits of the United States, do you think, displace Canadian fruits in the home market?"

Your question almost answers itself. Can any one see any prospect of this happening except for a few days early in the season? In some parts of the United States small fruits are earlier than here. They come into Canada in small quantities and the prices are high. More for the name than for the quality—for they are generally watery and tasteless—they are bought by those who can afford luxuries. But the minute Canadian berries come in the other fruit goes out."

"Will the agreement for free fruit both ways help the fruit-growing interests in Canada?"

"It looks like it. Small fruit-growing would be greatly promoted, I think. It is a profitable business except with a restricted market. At present Montreal and Toronto are the only consuming and distributing markets, beyond supplying the local demand, in Ontario.

An Unlimited Market

"If the agreement for free fruit to the United States comes into force there will be an unlimited market for Ontario fruits. With the present splendid transportation facilities, fruit can be gathered in almost any part of southern Ontario in the afternoon, and shipped so as to reach Buffalo, Detroit, New York and other large cities, for breakfast, and to more distant cities for luncheon.

"Would there not be increased production of fruit—a tremendous increase? The fruit industry, which, by the way, is a very profitable one, has been limited to the capacity of the home market. With an enlarged market, would it be unreasonable to expect a great boom in the fruit growing industry?"

Farmers and fruit growers must look for markets where there are people, and ninety millions are a good many."

"From what I see, and from the way I see it, there seems to be every reason to regard free fruit as a good thing for Canadians.

Effect Upon Apples.

Then, as to apples. We haven't half reached our possible limit. We can and do grow the best apples on the continent—the farther north an apple will ripen, the better it is.

"Nearly the whole of Ontario is suited to apple growing. And, if the lack of a large and convenient market has prevented more extensive apple growing—the excuse will be removed if the trade agreement admitting apples to the States free—with the 25 cents a bushel duty taken off—is adopted. I am told that fruit dealers are leasing farmers' orchards, taking full charge of them, pruning and spraying them. If the agreement for free fruit is sanctioned, they will make big profits, for they will have a market of 90 million people for better apples than the States can grow.

"I don't see why we should strain and struggle for far-distant markets when we have an open market of ninety millions just across the border.

"For the present, and for many years to come, Canada is a producing country."

"The United States has become a consuming country—in many respects—eating more than they grow. They furnish a good market for our surplus, wheat, barley, oats, fruits and all farm products."

"And I should like to have some one point out where the farmer will be injured by having a market close at hand. This, in a general way, is how the matter seems to me. If I am wrong I am willing to be convinced, for I want to vote intelligently when the trade agreement comes to a test in Parliament.

"There are some features of the agreement that require more study, and are not so easy a proposition, but, as far as the farmer is concerned, he seems to be all right. The Western farmer may think that he did not get a big enough slice off the duty on farm implements, but the manufacturer must have a little show.

That North Monaghan Declaration.

"But, Mr. Stratton, have you noticed that the North Monaghan farmers don't agree with you?"

"Oh, yes; that manifesto is one of the funny things in the situation. I don't know much about the "Canadian Century." It seems to be an organ printed in the interests of getting ready-made opinions on short notice."

"Yes; I have read the declaration. It is a long, loosely-worded affair. The gentleman who circulated it says that it was signed by 189 out of 218 farmers asked, but it is safe to say that not one out of the 189 read it through from beginning to end, and that not half a dozen could, off hand, remember ten words of what he signed.

"It reminded one of the man who won a bet that he could get a petition signed to hang a prominent and respected citizen. As a rule people don't take the trouble to read even short petitions they sign; they take the word of the party presenting it and sign, especially if the petition is in line with their opinions or prejudices, political or otherwise.

"The strange thing about the signing of the North Monaghan 'declaration' against reciprocity, said to have been signed by North Monaghan farmers, is that they should have been able to size up the situation and come to a decision so much quicker than many men supposed to be able and skilled in judging."

Rapid Opinions.

"About ten days ago Mr Fielding presented the proposed trade agreement to Parliament. In that time the members of parliament have not made their decision And the members of both sides will be debating the question two weeks, and perhaps more, before they will be ready to express an opinion by their votes.

Yet we find '189 out of 218' North Monaghan farmers, meeting a petition-peddlar, on the highway, perhaps, and shivering in the cold wind for two or three minutes, and sizing up a trade agreement and condemning it in less time than it would take the cleverest member of parliament to clear his throat ready to make a speech to find out where he was at."

"I don't believe that the farmers knew what they were signing, for the declaration they are said to have signed is loosely worded and self contradictory—it declares against 'reciprocity that will permit American farm products that come to Canada more freely than they do at present' —'we believe in the home market.' Now, in all seriousness, the home market is a narrow market. We can not consume in this country one-tenth of the wheat, cheese, bacon, oats, barley, fruits, and other things this great agricultural country can produce."

The Largest Market.

"Where shall we sell it? The first article of the declaration said to have been signed by the North Monaghan farmers, says 'the farther the consumer is away the more it costs to carry farm products,' and another section ties us down to the British market. Why send farm produce three thousand miles away when at our very doors we have a good market, insuring quick returns? The British market will always be open to our surplus of wheat, a surplus that is sure to grow every year. What's the sense of talking about the home market, about Canada consuming all she produces here? 'The time will come in Canada's production when this whole continent cannot buy what Canada produces any more than a farmer can eat all he grows? What's the use of talking about Canada as 'the granary of the Empire' or 'the granary of the world' if we narrow ourselves down to selling among eight or ten million the farm produce we raise, which is enough, or will be enough, to supply a hundred millions or two hundred millions? It seems to me that people that talk that way are Little Canadians. They don't appreciate our resources; they don't look ahead; they dont' see how we are bound to grow.

"I look at it in this way. I don't believe that United States farm products will come into this country to any much greater extent under the proposed trade agreement than they have done before. But as far as farm products are concerned Canadian farmers seem to be the gainers. They still have the home market, the British market, and, in addition, they have a new market of 90 millions, for all they have to sell. The way we are going ahead, the way farm products are increasing, we shall grow enough to supply the home market, the British market and the new market opened out by the trade agreement.

Need Market More Than Protection.

"The North Monaghan 'declaration' concludes with a plea for 'protection to all the products of our farms. Mr. Stratton. What do you think of that?"

"Think! Why, it's childish. Its worse than that, it's humiliating. What 'protection' do the Canadian farmers want? Not protection against the farmers of the United States, who cannot raise enough to feed their own people. Why should the farmers of Canada, the most intelligent in the world, with the best farming land, and a soil and climate that grows the best grains and fruits in the world, whine and ask protection for their products that have only to be offered to be bought.

"What the farmers want, more than protection, is a market, a ready, a quick and big market, and, so far as their products are concerned the trade agreement opens out a new one, ninety millions strong."

"Another thing might be said. We observe that there are those who pretend to see in the trade agreement, part of a deep-laid scheme of the United States, to get free access to the Canadian market to their own profit, and to the injury of Canadian farmers. If the United States were anxious to do this they could do it without any trade agreement; all they would have to do would be to take off the duties and make farm products free and we couldn't help ourselves.

"I may say that I have not quite settled my opinions on the trade agreement, as a whole, but as far as the farmers' side of it is concerned, it seems to be all right—to be a good thing. And, I think the great mass of Canadian farmers think the same, in spite of the activity of emmisaries seeking to rouse partizan prejudice in the interests of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Manufactured opinion is one form of manufacture that should not be encouraged—that needs no protection."

COMMITS SUICIDE

Geo. W. Graydon, Well Known Horseman, Kills Himself While Out on Bail on Larceny Charge

USED A REVOLVER

Special to The Examiner:

Buffalo, Feb. 7.—While out on bail on a charge of grand larceny, Geo. W. Graydon, the ex-manager of the Best Racing stables in Canada and lately in the hotel business at Gowanda shot himself in the head with a 44-calibre revolver, dying at the hospital. Graydon comes of a prominent London, Ont., family and had a very adventurous career.

Brantford, Feb. 7.—So far as is known here none of the three railway employees reported responsible for the wreck near Paris on Saturday night are yet located, though it is understood that relatives have heard from them thus clearing up the fear they were buried and burned under the wreckage.

HENDERS DENIES THE STATEMENTS

Special to The Examiner.

Winnipeg, Man., Feb. 7.—President Henders of the Western Grain growers to-day hotly denied the statements contained in despatches from Montreal and Victoria, stating that J. J. Hill, the railroad magnate had financed the Western Grain growers in a demand for free trade in wheat. He intends to take action against those responsible for the statements.

W. H. THOMPSON AND W. J. HENRY APPOINTED ASSESSORS FOR THE CITY FOR THE YEAR

Councils Made the Appointments at Last Night's Meeting ---Salary Will be the Same as Last Year---There Were Ten Applicants For the Position.

Messrs. William Henry Thompson and W. J. Henry were appointed assessors for the City of Peterborough for this year by the Council at its regular meeting last night. The salary will be the same as last year, $700 each. There were ten applicants for the position, including Thos. B. McGrath who has been an assessor for twenty years. The matter was decided at the meeting of the committee of the whole and a by-law confirming it was carried by the Council.

The applicants for the position were Messrs. T. B. McGrath, Geo. W. Powell, W. C. Bourn, W. J. Henry, Wm. Van Every, Wm. Henry Thompson, R. J. Kidd, W. Aldridge, W. J. Johnston, Thos. McKee, the last two making a joint application.

Mayor Morrow pointed out the desirability of appointing at least one assessor who had had experience.

When the matter came up, Ald. Buller moved that Thos. B. McGrath be appointed one of the assessors.

Ald. Bradburn in seconding the motion said he did so because he felt that Mr. McGrath was qualified for the position by reason of his long experience. He was of the opinion that one of the officials at least should have experience.

The motion was defeated only the mover and seconder voting for it.

Ald. Graham moved, seconded by Ald. Edgar, that W. J. Henry be appointed.—Carried by a vote of 6 to 4.

Ald. Morgan moved, seconded by Ald. Anderson that W. H. Thompson be appointed. The vote was 5 to 5.

Ald. Edgar and Brown moved that Wm. Aldridge be appointed. Lost by a vote of 8 to 2.

Ald. Kernaghan and Brown moved the appointment of R. J. Kidd. Lost by a vote of 6 to 4.

Ald. Buller at this stage said that he felt it an injustice that there was not a Roman Catholic on the Council or among the city officials. Protestants were taught that they should not be domineering or over-riding. It had been said that were the Roman Catholics in power, the Protestants would be wiped out. Here there was a whole Protestant Council in power and they should do what was right and fair. The Council had gone too far. It should be more liberal. He believed that Mr. McGrath was a good assessor. No complaints had come in about him. He thought the Council should deal fairly with him. The good citizens would deal squarely with the people that gave them a square deal. Last year when the ward system was being voted on he had argued on behalf of the Catholics that it a Protestant Council was appointed the Roman Catholics would get just treatment.

Ald. Graham said that personally he felt that he had not got justice from Mr. McGrath and that was why he had voted against him.

Ald. Morgan remarked that the Council was not voting against anybody because he was a Roman Catholic. A lot of people were clamouring to have the assessment roll published. He felt that if two new assessors were appointed for a year there would be no difficulty in seeing whether or not the publishing of the roll would be necessary or not.

It was decided to nominate some other candidate with Mr. Henry to act as the assessors.

Ald. Graham and Morgan moved that Messrs. Henry and Thompson be appointed assessors. Carried by a vote of 7 to 3.

City Trust Commissioners.

The apointment of two commissioners to the City Trust Commissioners to fill the vacancies caused by the expiring of the term of Mr. Vincent Eastwood and the death of Mr. H. LeBrun, was also taken up by the committee of the Whole.

Ald. Bradburn moved, seconded by Ald. Anderson, that Mr. Eastwood be re-appointed.—Carried.

To fill the vacancy caused by Mr. LeBrun's death, Ald. Metheral and Ald. Kernaghan nominated E. F. Mason.

Ald. Anderson and Edgar moved in amendment that E. A. Peck be appointed.

Ald. Buller and Brown moved in amendment to the amendment that ex-Ald. Phelan be appointed.

Mr. Peck was appointed on a vote of 6 to 5, the Mayor casting the deciding vote.

The casualties on both sides are heavy. Surgeons have asked the United States' interference, as both sides have fired on the red cross.

MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION WAITED ON THE COUNCIL

At last night's meeting of the committee of the Whole Council a deputation from the Peterborough Ministerial Association composed of Rev. Robt. Pogue and Rev. C. H. Coon, waited upon the Council to ask that they pass a resolution to be forwarded to the Ontario Legislature asking that the Consolidated Municipal Act be amended so that municipalities may be given the power of refusing to grant licenses to pool rooms. At present municipalities have the authority to grant such licenses upon the payment of the necessary fee, but have no power to refuse any applications.

Ald. Morgan moved, seconded by Ald. Metheral, that a resolution such as asked for be passed and forwarded to the Legislature.—Carried.

LOCAL PARTY WERE LOST ON CHEMONG LAKE

Some evenings ago a party consisting of Messrs. J. H. McClellan, superintendent of the Trent Canal, Mr. W. McIlroy, C.P.R. ticket office, and Mr. E. C. McLeod, manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia, started out to attend and take part in a concert held under the auspices of the Chemong Indian Band. They left Peterborough in good humour and in bright hopes of enjoying a pleasant evening. The gathered at Chemong Park in due course and headed for the Indian village along the ice. The evening was dark but the sleighing was good. So interested were the happy party in their conversation and so dreary the outlook for the driver that after spending three hours wandering over Chemong Lake they found themselves lost on the ice. Presently at 10.30 they made their way back to the Chemong bridge, but all hope of reaching the entertainment in time was of course gone. Mr. McClellan's eloquence and Mr. McIlroy's vocal ability had been wasted on the desert air as far as the people waiting for them at the concert were concerned.

EGGS WERE STOLEN

Thieves Entered the Store House of Wm. Scott, East City—No Money to be Had DISCOVERED THIS MORNING

The building of W. Scott and Co., Ltd., 124 Robinson Street, was broken into last night, by some unknown person or persons, and a case of eggs was stolen. The thieves succeeded in gaining an entrance by a window on the east side of the building. They managed to make their way through the main building into the office, where they ransacked the papers. Fortunately, however, all the cash had been taken away in the evening, so that the intruders got nothing for their pains. The office safe had been left unlocked, they took advantage of this and ransacked it, but found nothing there either. After making a careful investigation of everything, they departed with the eggs.

The theft was discovered this morning about seven o'clock, by one of the office assistants. The thieves made their exit, the way they entered. Their is no clue, so far, as to their identity.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

Fools the Calendar

Don't look older than you are. It is just as easy to look younger. While lack of hair or poor hair is not always an indication of age, it is frequently accepted as such.

Everyone can retain beautiful, luxuriant hair if they make the effort. In almost every instance poor hair or the loss of hair may be traced to the activity of the dandruff germ. Newbro's Herpicide kills this germ and puts the scalp in a perfectly healthy condition. With the destruction of the dandruff germ the hair no longer drops out. The itching of the scalp stops almost at once.

Newbro's Herpicide is the original remedy for which there are many substitutes, preparations claimed to be "just as good." You don't have to accept a substitute. Insist upon having genuine Herpicide.

For sale by all druggists. Applications obtained at good barber shops. One dollar size bottles are always guaranteed. Send 10c in postage to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich., for sample and book.

Water Commissioners Report To Council In Regard To New Dam

Give a Statement of the Amounts Expended on the Pumping Station and Plant and in Other Ways.

THE COMPLETE REPORT

The Water Commissioners submitted the following report to the City Father Monday night, which was read and received without comment:—

To the City Council and the Ratepayers,—

Although there remain to be adjusted some small amounts with the contractor in relation to the new dam and pump house, your commissioners feel that the time has arrived when as full information as possible should be given of the works constructed and the sums expended by them.

When asking the people for a vote of $120,000 for a new dam and pump house and pumping machinery, it was the opinion of the commissioners and of their engineer, Mr. William Kennedy, Jr., of Montreal, that this amount would be sufficient to build the dam and pumping station, and install an additional set of pumps capable of discharging three million gallons of water every twenty-four hours against a pressure of one hundred and thirty pounds to the square inch. The commissioners had the estimate from their engineer, arrived at after a careful survey of the whole situation, and had also as a guide the judgment of their superintendent, Mr. Henderson, whose large experience is well known.

For several years your commissioners were convinced that it would be necessary to build a new dam, if it was desired to take advantage of the full flow and fall of the river for pumping and power purposes, the old dam having served almost to the limit of its usefulness the object for which it had been erected. If the city had remained stationary in population and consumption of water, it would have been possible to struggle on a while longer with the old dam and the same pumping plant, but when it was considered that the number of water takers had increased from 1070 in 1901 (with 18 miles of mains), to over 3000 in 1910 (with 35 miles of mains), and was likely to increase at the rate of 250 to 300 in water users each year, it will be seen that it had become an imperative necessity there should be increased pumping capacity, and that the city should erect a dam that could be relied on, and would developed greatly increased power.

As far back as 1906 the matter was carefully considered and information obtained from expert engineers, not only as to the rebuilding of the old dam, but on water purification and filtration as well, and the commissioners had decided to advise going ahead then, but during the next two years the condition of the money market together with the high cost of materials made it appear to be wiser to await a more favorable opportunity. Therefore the old dam was kept repaired and in as good working order as possible.

In the fall of 1908 it was thought that the time was opportune, and on the advice of the engineer and superintendent it was decided to abandon the old site and move down stream 700 feet to where apparently a better river bottom, more head, and consequently more power, could be obtained, and where the distance across the river was less by 200 feet than at the old dam. Estimate plans for the new dam, etc., were prepared, and two years ago the council was asked to submit a By-law to raise $120,000, for their erection, which was carried by a large majority.

When it became known that operations were about to begin, the company owning the power next above, notified the commissioners through their solicitors that they must not infringe on the company's rights by raising the water, and that their actions would be carefully watched. This related to the greater head of water proposed to be carried at the new dam, and the increased backing up of the water of the river towards Nassau. The owners at Nassau had considerable land on the east side of the river below their dam, but they did not own nearly all the land on the West side of the river, the larger part being owned by the Estate of the late J. M. Irwin. It appeared to the commissioners that it was of vital consideration to the city that this Irwin property should be purchased from the Executors, the National Trust Company, Limited, immediately it was found to be in the market. The land in question is known to many citizens as the home of Mr. Harvey and his bees, the portion of the river opposite his house being the "Harvey Rapids." This purchase included the large fields down the river from the house, and extends 1000 feet up-stream, to within 800 feet of the Nassau dam. The cost was $2000. Your commissioners felt at the time, and equally so now, that for obvious reasons this was a prudent and provident course to take and that it was necessary to act promptly in the matter. The city now owns the lands and power rights if any, on the one side of the river, and it is not likely that there will be the least friction with the Power Company at Nassau, so long as the water is not actually backed on their wheels. The city's dam will have from 12 to 13 feet of head instead of 10 feet. The McCauley property, on which the western end of the dam rests, had to be acquired, and cost $1500. It has a frontage on the river of about 450 feet.

The commissioners also purchased from Mr. John Stothart a further strip of land south of the McCauley property, of about 500 feet along the river, at the price of $200. This was obtained in order to secure a better tail race and enable dredging and excavation to be made at a future time when it is desired to have a more free discharge of the water from the wheels. The city now owns over 1500 feet of frontage on each side of the river and adjoining the dam, in addition to the Irwin property.

One unexpected heavy, additional expense incurred, was in connection with the river bottom where the dam was placed. The rock was found to be rotten and porous, and it was necessary to take out many hundreds of yards more than estimated, which called for the replacing by an immense mass of concrete. The estimated quantities of the engineer, and the actual amount of materials taken out and put in are dealt with in the statement presented with this report. In it is included a further large quantity for excavation and concrete for the erection of extra deep, heavy additional piers intended for the foundations of a power house that the city might think fit to erect at its own expense, and which were intended by the commissioners as a substitute, for the proposed expenditure by the City Council of $15,000, at the east end of the dam. This now represents an extra of about $3000.

Some time after building operations began, it was seen that the engineer's estimate would be below the actual requirements, but it was impractieable to suspend operations and ask for a further sum, as even then it could not be determined how much would be required. The situation presented was one that it was impossible to have foreseen. Therefore it was decided to push the work through to completion, and the only regret felt by the commissioners is that this should have been made the subject of discussion before knowing the facts, and before the final settlement had been obtained with the contractor, who in addition to the small items not yet adjusted, is making a large demand for unwatering, which the engineer has not allowed, and which your commissioners are advised by Counsel the city is not responsible for.

In addition to the above it was decided to do certain work along the banks of the river above the dam, so as to prevent contamination of the water, and also providing for cutting away a portion of the eastern bank below the dam, in order to facilitate the escape of water at flood time. This also was extra work. It was necessary to put a concrete core wall in the embankment on the west side. The first intention was to build a watertight embankment with a clay core, but it was found impossible to obtain enough good clay for the purpose. The expense would not have been much different, and the engineer advised using concrete.

It was also decided to install another pumping unit to cost $9,736, in order to bring the capacity up to the point demanded by the Fire Underwriters, namely, ten million gallons per day of twenty-four hours. To make the plant still more efficient a Venturi Meter was purchased at a cost of $1,404, plus the cost of installation, in order that an accurate daily and also hourly record of the quantity of water pumped might be made, and also in order to enable the engineers to observe readily whether the pumps were in all respects doing their proper work.

After a careful scrutiny of the Engineer's estimate together with his final statements now given of the cost of dam construction, etc., your commissioners are hopeful the ratepayers will be satisfied they have throughout acted in the best interests of the city. To spend wisely, as they believe they have done, the large sum of money entrusted to them, has only been accomplished at the sacrifice of very considerable time on their part, and of continued, anxious attention to the details of all the works in hand. Every expenditure has been carefully scrutinized, and when the work is complete and the opportunity given of an inspection of what the commissioners consider to be the best municipal pumping plant of any city in Canada of less than 50,000 population, they are assured the cost will not be considered excessive.

About six months ago at the request of the City Council your commissioners made a lease of the surplus water at the dam to The Canadian General Electric Company for a period of twenty years, at the reserved rental of $2000 per year, the company binding itself to erect on the extra heavy piers adjoining the east end of the pump house, a power house, similar to the pump house, of about 45 feet square, and to install therein modern machinery for the generation and transmission of electric power. It was estimated that if the city had proceeded with this development of power the cost would have been at least $70,000, and judging from the work already done by the company it appears to your commissioners that the cost will be considerably greater. All the improvements of the company and the machinery will become the property of the city at the expiry of the lease, and both the building and the machinery must at all times be kept in first class condition by the lessees. The commissioners reserved the right to take all the flow of the river that is necessary for pumping power, and for supplying water takers, and for fire protection, the surplus only going to the company. This surplus water is estimated to produce about 1000 h.p. It will be observed that the rent to be paid and the return of the property without cost to the city, at 20 years, represent an annual value of at least $4000, thus paying interest at 4½ per cent on $90,000. The arrangement looks like a good one for the city.

In conclusion your commissioners would point out that the revenue of the waterworks department is sufficient to meet the additional demand for interest and sinking fund required by reason of the construction of the new works, and no additional water rates or taxes will have to be imposed.

As a matter of further information it may be mentioned that the water rates have supplied sufficient income to operate the works and to pay the interest on all the debentures issued, and have also contributed from the year 1902 to 1910, inclusive $65,035 as a sinking fund to retire the debentures at maturity.

Your commissioners confidently believe the city is now possessed of a dam and pumping station, of excellent design and lasting construction, supplied with a pumping plant not surpassed in quality in the Dominion, to all which the citizens will be able to point with some degree of pride, and upon which they can always rely to effectively answer all demands on them.

Much attention has been given to the absolute necessity of securing a good and healthy supply of water for citizens, and the River and Stony Lake have been carefully patrolled for the past two years in an endeavor to prevent impurities from entering, which has had a very improving effect on the water supply. It is intended to continue in this course until every apparent source of danger is removed.

Attention is directed to the fact that the city owns a block of 18 acres on the east side of the river, at the dam, over which there is a bridge. This property is suitable for park purposes, and your commissioners would suggest that the city make the necessary improvements, and have the street railway extended to the pump house, which would be reached in a fifteen minutes' ride from the centre of the city. It is hoped the city council may take this suggestion into their early consideration.

Yours sincerely,
THE PETERBOROUGH
WATER COMMISSIONERS

PETERBOROUGH TEAM DEFEATED BY ONE GOAL AFTER THIRTY MINUTES OVERTIME

Trenton Won Sudden Death Game by 3 Goals to 2—Denison Was Off Peterboro' Line-up and Kelly Played but Was Badly Crippled—At That the Petes Were Robbed by a Bad Decision on Part of Goal Umpire.

AN EXCITING STRUGGLE

The Peterborough Intermediate O.H.A. team is out of the running. It took one hour, twenty-nine minutes and twenty seconds of actual playing time to decide the sudden death game at Belleville last night. Trenton scored the winning goal with forty seconds left to play in the third extra period of ten minutes. The teams were tied half way through the first half with two goals each and from that period until the end of nearly thirty minutes over time, neither team could score. It was one of the hardest fought and most sensational games ever played in this district or in the history of the O.H.A. competitions. A Peterborough team never lost a game under more creditable circumstances. With Fred Denison, their star cover-point unable to play and with Kelly crippled so badly with a sprained hand that he practically had to play the game with one hand, the Petes went down with their colors flying. At that they should have won. They were robbed of the game when victory was theirs. A few minutes before the end of the hour's play Peterborough scored from a scrimmage. Everybody at that end of the rink saw the rubber in the nets and there was a thunderous cheer from the Peterborough supporters but the goal umpire a Trenton man refused to allow the goal. Even the Trenton goal-keeper would not say that the puck had not gone into the nets but the umpire said: "no goal." Had this score been allowed as it certainly should have been there would have been no over-time needed and Peterborough would have won by 3 to 2. As it was the game went on. There was no more scoring until the end of the game and the first two periods of over-time were marked by no counters. It was not until near the end of the third period that Croft scored the winning goal. The Trenton point took the rubber down the side and the Peterborough defence had him apparently skated into a corner. He wheeled suddenly however and circling cut drove one past Derocher putting Trenton into the lead. Even then the Petes had a chance. Kelly, Ray and Sorel got clean through the Trenton defence but Kelly could not shoot on account of his hand and a golden opportunity was lost. With Denison on there would have been nothing to the game, but the Petes. Even the Trenton supporters will admit that fact.

The speedy rushes of the husky young cover-point which had such an important bearing on the result of the two games played in Peterborough were sadly missed last night. It was on the attack that the big boy was needed. His dazzling rushes which were responsible for six goals in Friday's game, would have won the game for the Petes last night without any over-time being needed. Even without Denison however, the blue and white team would have won had not Kelly been so badly handicapped. The speedy left wing played a star game in spite of his injury but he could not shoot, every effort to do so being agony to him and he had half a dozen chances that would have been sure goals had "Bud" been in his usual condition. All credit is coming to the team for the grand showing they made under the circumstances. It was one of those games that can most aptly be described by the appellation: "Anybody's." The teams played for every ounce of strength that was in them, checking each other like demons. When one stops to figure that in the three other games or three hours actual play the two teams scored sixty goals and that last night in an hour and one half only five goals were scored, some idea may be had of the closeness of the checking. Both forward lines checked back with every rush and as a result both had trouble in breaking away and it was a most difficult matter to play combination. Both defences were superb and the work of the goal-keepers bordered on the miraculous. Derocher and McGiffin stopped scores of shots from all angles and distances. Naturally in such a game they were called upon frequently and both played phenomenally. A big crowd saw the game including two hundred loyal Peterborough fans who went down by special train. Owing to the blizzard the train was very late and it was nine o'clock before they reached the rink and 9.20 before the game started. The train carrying the fans did not arrive home until five o'clock this morning.

Trenton had a stronger lineup than on their last two appearances in Peterborough. Croft was shifted back to his old position at point, Palmer was rover, and Art. Armstrong back in the game again at left wing.

It was clear robbery, according to everybody at the end of the rink at which Peterborough scored, what should have been, the winning goal. Kelly shot from the side, striking McGiffin and dropping into the nets. The crowd and the players saw the rubber in the goal, and the teams skated back to face off the puck. Much to the amazement of everyone, the goal umpire, Harry Felion, of Trenton, failed to put up his hand. Affidavits can be secured from a score of spectators as to to the goal being scored. Every man on both teams worked desperately. For Peterborough, where everyone tried so hard for victory it would be unfair to specialize. Derocher played a magnificent game in the nets, getting shots with his stick, his hands or his body in grand style. One stop of a shot from Fletcher from the mouth of the net was a marvellous one. Bond and McMillan who had to jump into the game at the last minute, played spiendidly on the defence, their checking being all that could be desired. Denison was missed, not on account of his defence work, but because of his help to the attacking division. All the forwards played remarkable games. Kelly deserves the greatest credit for playing at all. His hand was so badly swollen that to close it on his stick caused him the greatest pain, and when the team left yesterday it was not thought possible that he would play. However, he pluckily went on and played a remarkable game, although one of his best assets, his shooting ability, was rendered ineffectual. Ray played his usual brilliant hard-working game in spite of the fact that he was almost knocked out in the first few minutes after a heavy body check into the boards by Croft. Giroux and Sorel never let up for a moment, and both played sterling hockey. For Trenton, McGiffin, Croft, Fletcher and Armstrong were the stars. In the overtime, when the forward lines of both teams had tired to the stage of collapse, Croft's puck carrying ability came into evidence and eventually resulted in the winning goal. Trenton scored the first goal after five minutes of play and Peterborough evened up in eight minutes. Trenton scored again in two minutes and Peterborough quickly tied the game again. There was no more scoring in the first half and the teams battled all through the second half without breaking the tie, at least officially breaking it, although there is no doubt in anybody's mind that Peterborough scored. Two extra periods were played without a score and then the teams had to go back on the ice again for the third ten minutes overtime. Nearly everyone was ready to drop with exhaustion then, but they plugged away and it was anybody's game until the time was finally up. The teams were as follows

TRENTON

	McGiffin
	Croft
	McGaw
	Powers
Armstrong	Fletcher	Powers
Kelly	Giroux	Sorel
	Ray
	McMillan

LINE-UP FOR TO-NIGHT'S BIG KINGSTON GAME

Last night's sensational game with Trenton is sharing with the Kingston Frontenacs-Peterborough Grillers game in forming the chief topic of conversation among the fans to-day. There will be a record crowd at Brock street rink to-night to see the battle between the two fast junior teams. The Kingston team, last year's junior champions, are said to be worth seeing at any time. The visitors will come up supremely confident of a victory, but the Grillers are determined to make the visitors extend themselves as they never have been called upon to do before. The game will start at 8.15 o'clock with Harvey Sproule of Toronto refereeing. The teams will be as follows:

Kingston.
Goal—Marchand.
Point—Davidson.
Cover—McCammon.
Rover—Brouse.
Centre—Hunt.

Peterborough.
Goal—Patterson.

McCART WILL PROBE.

He Puts a Series of Questions to Hon. Mr. Hanna.

Toronto, Feb. 7.—Had it not been for the foresight of the Prime Minister last week in having Government business placed on the order paper on Mondays, yesterday would have seen but little progress in the Legislature, as the private members did not avail themselves of the precedence which belonged to them.

The Government set the members an example of prompt business methods by having three bills ready for the committee stage, and when Government orders were called for, about 169 clauses of the bills in question were dealt with.

The time was taken up almost solely in committee. W. F. Nickle, Kingston, was in the chair. The majority of the members were conspicuous by their absence, less than half not wishing to brave the storm. Report had it that Hon. A. G. MacKay, Opposition leader, was snow-bound in North Grey.

Four Government bills went through the committee stage. They were: Bill 83, respecting the law of landlord and tenant; bill 85, respecting the support of illegitimate children; bill 91, respecting infants, having Hon. I. B. Lucas as their sponsor; and Hon. J. J. Foy's bill, No. 97, respecting trustees and executors and the administration of estates.

This afternoon the budget debate will be resumed by S. Clarke, West Northumberland, who is expected to make a vigorous reply to the fighting speech of T. W. McGarry.

An inquisition into the affairs of the Provincial Secretary's Department is indicated by notice by W. J. McCart, Stormont, for a return of all the officials in Hon. W. J. Hanna's Department on Feb. 1, 1905, when the new regime began, and on the first of last month.

Hon. J. S. Duff's report for the Department of Agriculture shows the attendance at the Guelph College was the highest in its history, aggregating 1,288, including Macdonald Institute.

In the Niagara district it was found that while there are at present only about 375,000 trees in bearing, there are young orchards comprising approximately 500,000 trees. This means that in the next few years the production of the district will be doubled. Nearly 200,000 peach trees have been planted in Norfolk, Kent, Essex and Lambton Counties.

An aggregate of 7,561 immigrants were brought to Ontario through the Colonization Department.

Good News For Travelers.

Toronto, Feb 7.—Commercial travelers will be interested in a decision of Justice Riddell's in an appeal in William Canning and W. J. Sarvis from the decision of the local judge at Guelph, on matters relating to the liquidation of the Morlock & Clinex Co. of Guelph. This decision of Justice Riddell's allows them the preferred creditor's chances to both salary and expenses, amounting in each case to $209.94.

"Expenses," declared the justice, "are as much a part of the wages as any fixed sum. It is not as though these sums were paid for the company to the railway companies, hotels, etc., with an undertaking that the company would repay the sums so paid as a debt, as would be the case if the commercial traveler were to pay some creditor of the company. The servant is paying money for himself the repayment of which to himself is payment of part of his wages."

Aeroplane Scouting.

Washington, Feb. 7.—So far as an aeroplane can discover the U. S. Government will probably soon be in a position to determine the facts as to the activities of the insurgents along the Mexican border. At present, owing to the conflicting reports and absurd and extravagant claims on the part of the different leaders and their neutrality law, and troops are continually making wild goose chases after military expeditions reported to be crossing the Rio Grande, which rarely materialize. When the troops are on these false scents, it is presumed that armed parties make their way across the river at unguarded points.

Yesterday Gen. Wood, chief of staff, let it be known that at least one aeroplane would be employed in observation work along the Rio Grande.

May Be "Tong" War.

Ottawa, Feb. 7.—There may be trouble among the local Chinese as a result of a big seizure of oriental liquor made by the license officers on Saturday night. Those who understand the ways of Chinese state that Ottawa may have something of the nature of a Tong war. It is said the members of the Reform Association are indignant at the actions of certain members of the Freemasons, the Opposition "Tong," and claim the latter were the informers who told the police where they could expect to find the liquor that was seized. They resent especially the injury to Hum Quong, the member of the Chinese Parliament who was one of the losers in the raid.

Troubles Didn't Come Singly.

Niagara Falls, Feb. 7.—The season's severest storm struck here early yesterday. A forty-mile gale blew and snow fell in great quantities. Traffic on both steam and electric lines was handicapped. Cold dinners were the rule in hundreds of homes, as there was scarcely enough gas pressure in many houses to boil the kettle. Then the high wind caused the level of the river to fall greatly cutting off the supply of city water. If a fire were to occur during present conditions great damage would be done. Ice in the upper river gave the power-house employes great trouble early last evening.

Fire In Moving-Picture House.

Montreal, Feb. 7.—A fire broke out in the Wonderland Moving Picture Theatre here yesterday morning. Fortunately only about 25 people had entered the building at the time of the outbreak and they made good their escape by way of a door at the back of the hall.

DEW'S CAREER.

Crippen's Captor Retires After Twenty-Five Years on the Force.

A London despatch says: As has already been made public, Chief Inspector Dew, the man who raced across the ocean to capture Crippen, the principal detective figure in the important criminal cases in the last twenty-five years, is to retire from Scotland Yard on Dec. 5.

"I have had nearly twenty-nine years of it, and that's enough for a young man," he said. "But I feel far too young to give up work altogether, and after my retirement I shall start as a private enquiry agent. I am not resigning in consequence of any attacks that were made on me in certain quarters at the beginning of the Crippen case."

Chief Inspector Dew is only forty-seven years old. He was barely nineteen when he joined the Metropolitan Police Force, where he won early promotion.

He was one of the detectives investigating the series of Jack the Ripper crimes, and it was for his energy in this work that he was given the rank of detective sergeant. He rose rapidly, and became inspector at Bow street, which led to his gaining the post of chief inspector four years ago in succession to Mr. Froest.

His career has been one long, adventurous criminal hunt, and it is noteworthy that though he had to deal with many dangerous men he never carried a revolver until the hunt after Crippen, and has only used handcuffs about three times.

Among the people he arrested recently are:—

"Harry the Valet," the expert jewel thief, who stole $100,000 worth of jewels from the Duchess of Sutherland.

Conrad Harms, the bank swindler.

Dr. Crippen.

These are only the more striking cases, but there have been hundreds of minor arrests, and latterly Mr. Dew, entrusted with some special inquiries for the War Office, with regard to stolen cartridges, ran the thief to earth.

All the important investigations came his way; he frequently had to leave for the continent at a moment's notice to secure the arrest of some international swindler.

He has often said that, while it is imagined that detection of crime is now made easier by the use of telegrams and improved locomotion, the truth is that the work is far more difficult to-day.

Criminals are better educated than they used to be, the means of escape are much easier, and there are so many ways by which a wanted man may cover up his tracks.

Formerly it was only necessary to scour a country for a criminal—to-day the detective must search the world.

In Search Of Beauty

You Must First Win Health by Getting the Blood Rich and Red

DR CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

Every man and every woman has an individual idea of what constitutes beauty.

Is beauty skin deep or does it depend on the glow which health alone can give? Is it due to regularity of feature or to the gracefulness and elasticity which accompany health and vigour?

To win beauty you must first gain health. Rich, red blood is the secret. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is successful and popular because it forms rich, red blood and in this way gives gracefulness to every movement and a healthful, natural glow to the complexion.

Thin blood and weak nerves soon give one a tired, worn out appearance. Worry and anxiety show themselves in wrinkles and care lines. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food enriches the blood, restores vigour to the nerves and drives away headaches and bodily pains.

By filling the arteries with new, red blood, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food rounds out the form to healthful proportions, makes the muscles and tissues firm and strong and gives vivacity to mind and body.

Dr. A. W Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto

CELEBRATED TENOR WILL POSITIVELY APPEAR

Since the announcement has been made that the Sheehan English Grand Opera Company will give a performance of Verdi's 'Il Arovatore' at the Grand Opera House.

Numeorus inquiries have been made as to whether or not Joseph F. Sheehan, America's greatest tenor, will sing at the performance here and the managgement take this means of stating that Mr. Sheehan himself will positively sing and furthermore will guarantee to refund mone yshould the famous star not appear.

In as much as Mr. Sheehan's contracts call for his appearance in Chicago and Boston practically exclusively for the next two years this will no doubt the last opportunity we will have of hearing his golden voice for some time.

GAS, INDIGESTION AND HEARTBURN GO

Makes Your Out-of-order Stomach Feel Fine in Five Minutes

The question of how long you are going to continue a sufferer from indigestion, Dyspepsia or out-of-order Stomach is merely a matter of how soon you begin taking some Diapepsin.

If your Stomach is lacking in digestive power, why not help the stomach to do its work, not with drastic drugs, but a re-enforcement of digestive agents, such as are naturally at work in the stomach.

People with weak stomachs should take a little Diapepsin occasionally, and there will be no more indigestion, no feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach, or heartburn, Sour risings, Gas on Stomach or Belching of undigested food, Headaches, Dizziness or Sick Stomach, and, besides, what you eat will not ferment and poison your breath with nauseous odors. All these symptoms resulting from a sour, out-of-order stomach and dyspepsia are generally relieved in five minutes after taking a little Diapepsin.

Go to your druggist and get a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin now, and you will always go to the table with a hearty appetite, and what you eat will taste good, because your stomach and intestines will be clean and fresh, and you will know there are not going to be any more bad nights and miserable days for you. They freshen you and make you feel like life is worth living.

HOLD-UP ON AYLMER STREET

A well-known local physician was held up on Aylmer street, near the Montreal House, last night, about 8 o'clock. He was just returning from a long trip into the country and his horse was tired. When he got near King street, on Aylmer, two men ran out, and one caught his horse bp the head and pulled it fo ore side. At this stage, a stranger, whom the Doctor had given a ride, jumped out and offered resistance. The Doctor managed to get free and drove on a few rods, and then stopped to see what was taking place. The man who had been riding with him, called out to him not to leave him, and when the Doctor turned around to see what was going on, one of the men pinned him in the eye with an onion, wit hthe result that the Doctor has a badly blackened eye, today. At last the stranger managed otget free, and ran and got in again with the Doctor and the two soon left the men in the distance. This would make it appear that it is time something was done, when a man is held up in the very centre of the city at 8 o'clock in the evening.

PRICES FOR HONEY

From Farm and Dairy.

Wm. Couse, Peel Co., Ont.

The Bee Keepers of Ontario are now practically setting the prices which they receive for their honey. They have done this by getting out their own reports of the honey crop. Formerly, the buyers used to get out the reports and consequently light crops of honey in certain districts are not mentioned. By compiling favorable reports in this manner, the wholesale price of honey was kept down. For the last two or three years we have been getting out our own crop reports and giving an estimate of the prices which should be received by the bee keepers.

And the members of the Bee Keepers' Association have been able to get the prices demanded too. Our reports are very complete and when we know exactly how much honey there is, it is no trouble to determine the price which should be received and the buyers simply have to pay it. Next year, the Bee Keepers' Association are going to make a few trial shipments of honey to the British market.

REQUEST OF C. G. E. FOR SIDING WAS GRANTED

The matter of the Canadian General siding across Park street was taken up at the meeting of the committee of the whole last night.

Ald .Graham said that he could see nothing for the council to do but grant the request of the Canadian General Electric Company.

The Mayor read the form of agreement drawn up by the City Solicitor.

Ald. Morgan said that he did not wish to block the siding proposition at all but he thought the C. P. R. should be asked to do something about a foot bridge over their bridge, when the siding proposition was being considered.

Ald. Duncan suggested that the company or railway should pay the expenses of a flag-man to be stationed at the siding in question, and this was embodied in the agreement.

"Would you want this to go into force at once?" asked Ald. Bradburn.

As soon as the traffic warrants it." replied Ald. Duncan.

"Who should be the judge?" asked Ald. Bradburn.

"I think the city should," replied Ald. Duncan.

The city clerk pointed out that at present the Railway Board decided such points.

Bowmanville May Lose Its McGill Bequest

BOWMANVILLE, FEB. 6.—Information has reached town authorities here from Washington, D.C., that an attachment for $191,045, said to be due the Royal Trust Company of Canada on a judgment secured in Canada against Chas. McGill, brother of the late James H. McGill, was placed Monday, Jan. 30, on the McGill building at 908 G street north-west.

The judgment was procured by the trust company in its capacity as liquidator of the Ontario Bank of Toronto, which failed in 1906. Charles McGill held 2,008 shares of the bank's stock, on which he was found to be liable under the Canada law to pay 95 per cent. of the par value of the stock, amounting to $190,769, which, with the costs, amounts to $191,045.

Charles McGill transferred his interest in the McGill building to his daughter, Isabel M. McGill, in 1909. Recently she and her uncle, John McGill, brought suit in the District Supreme Court to set aside the devise of the building by McGill's will to the Town of Bowmanville, Canada.

Attorneys Herbert and Micou and A. H. Ferguson, who represent the Royal Trust Company, clai mthat the transfer to the daughter is invalid under the law, which forbids an alien to purchase real estate in the district. Miss McGill being a citizen of Canada. The attachment is to hold against the half interest of Charles McGill in the event the suit against the Canadian town is successful.

Thought it Was Cancer

Sores Spread From Eye to Neck

Miss Mary Conley, of 184 Colborne street, Montreal, writes: "Over a year ago I became bothered with an unsightly spot on my right cheek. The sore spread until the whole cheek was covered from the eye to far down on the neck, below the ear. It was so noticeable that people asked me if I had cancer, and I began to feel I had. I fully expected the sores would heal some day, and I tried numerous highly recommended salves and ointments

"I was about to consult a specialist when a lady friend spoke of Zam-Buk, and advised a trial of it, first. Acting on her advice I procured a box and was surprised to notice the immediate effect the balm had on the sores. I used three boxes only, and as I kept applying it each evening before retiring I could see how the sores were being cleaned and dried up. This improvement continued until my face was cleared of sores completely. Zam-Buk is certainly a marvellous balm."

Zam-Buk is a sure cure for cold sores, chapped hands, frost bites, ulcers, blood-poisoning, varicose sores, piles, scalp sores, ringworm, inflamed patches babies' eruptionsand chapped places, cuts, burns, bruises, and skin injuries generally. All druggists and stores sell at 50c. a box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price. You are warned against hermful imitations and substitutes. See the registered name "Zam-Buk" on every package before buying.

TRAINS DELAYED

The passenger service on the railroads was somewhat delayed this morning by the storm. The Grand Trunk flyer, which was preceded by a snow plough, was about an hour late, while the Belleville train was about thirty minutes behind schedule time. Dire results are predicted by old-time railroaders should a strong north west wind arise and blow the newly-fallen snow into the cuttings.

BARBARA TENNANT.

The Barbara Tennant recital at Montreal on Saturday was a triumph for our gifted townswoman. The Windsor Hall was packed with a fashionable audience, whose applause, as piece after piece was given, left nothing to be desired. The critics were in ecstasies over Miss Tennant's work Dr. Walters, per the New York papers, speaking of her as a 'revelation. The Montreal Star said in part:

Her voice is of splendid sonority, compass, and quality. Her gestures are perfect, all-expressive, never exaggerated, never conveying other than an absolutely clear significance, and invariably instinct with delicacy and grace. Her play of features is carefully restrained, but adequate, and at times of immense illuminating force. That she possesses true dramatic instinct is beyond question; that she directs it through the medium of a cleverly-controlled and polished art is equally undeniable.

Her diction alone is a delight, so smooth, clear-cut, and beautifully modulated it is. She does not adopt any eccentric chant-form for her recital work, but relies on the direct appeal of words through the interpretative medium mof dramatic expression. And in this she is wise, for the appeal is potent, and succeeds.

The Montreal Herald.

The dramatic recital is a rather nondescript form of art, and generally strikes the regular theatregoer as a sort of compromise whereby some suggestion of the charms of the drama may be afforded to those who cannot by their principles or their geographical location attend theatrical performances. There are a large number of both classes in Canada, and it is quite possible that an artist of Miss Tennant's calibre may be performing a useful and profitable function by ministering to them. But she is much too good an actress to be in a place anywhere save in a high class theatrical production. On a continent which is starving for players of poetic imagination, well-trained diction and well-modulated voice, it is little short of a crime for anybody possessed of all those to keep them from the stage.

The first thing that revealed the actress's power of impersonation was "Gunga Din," which in spite of her feminine garb was given with bearing, gesture and inflexion brilliantly suggestive of the soldier who narraates the story. . . . The Potion Speech of Juliet, given with a curtained stage and some amount of setting and in costume, was a very remarkable tour de force of the actor's art, for it established the situation instantly and held its tense to the end. As to whether Miss Tennant is a really great tragic actress this small sample would not suffice for judgment, but it left no doubt that she has the intelligence and the technique to go very far indeed. Her face, though most people would certainly call it beautiful, is hardly of the tragic cast; her eyes lend themselves more freely to fun and light satire than to haunting introspection. One conceives that she would be at her best in the more delicate Shakespearean comedies — an excellent Rosalind, surely, with that profound poetic quality which is almost but not quite of the essence of tragedy. . . . Austin Dobson's "Sedan Chair," was full of the fine air of connoisseurship, the delicacy of touch and the allusiveness which the author intended, and much of Miss Tennant's inflection and gesture in this piece was really masterly in its illustrative quality.

The Montreal Witness:

The potion speech from Romeo and Juliet,' to put the last and most ambitious number first, was given with great dramatic power. Miss Tennant made a very convincing and tragic Juliet from the moment she realizes that she 'needs must act her dismal scene alone,' though the natural shrinking from the gruesome terrors called up by her young imagination face to face with seeming death, until the sublime moment when, love triumphing over misgivings, she drinks from the potent vial.

Miss Tennant's dramatic skill was also displayed in 'The Ballad of Splendid Silence' and in Kipling's 'Gunga Din,' while the alluring 'Lesson with the Fan' was given with a merry wit, and Ella Wheeler Wilcox's woman of the 'pin' like characteristics was presented in a way that made her quickly recognized by any in the audience who had met her kind.

The Montreal Gazette:

Miss Tennant's final selection the Potion Speech from "Romeo and Juliet" lacked nothing in dramatic power and expression.

Miss Tennant will be supported, amongst others to-night, by Mr. Maclean Borthwick, L.R.A.M., the well known bass singer of Toronto.

$4,000 In The Appropriations For Industrial Commissioner

An item of $4,000 for the salary of the Industrial Commissioner was responsible for some discussion at the meeting of the council last night. Ald. Morgan raised some objection to the amount.

Ald. Bradburn estimated that the amount was not half a mill on the assessment. A man who was assessed for $1500 would only have to contribute 70c.. He thought Mr. Duggan should be retained for another year.

Ald. Buller said that he had been surprised when he found the amount of work that was being done by the Commissioner. He expressed himself in favour of retaining the office for another year.

Ald. Morgan thought the Board of Trade should pay half the salary of the Commissioner the same as last year and made a motion to that effect.

Ald. Bradburn pointed out that the $2,000 given by the Board of Trade last year had been contributed by subscriptions. The Board had no money of its own.

Ald. Morgan inquired if the Commissioner had accomplished sufficiently more than the City Clerk used to in his correspondence in regard to new industries, to warrant the expenditure of $4,000.

Ald. Metheral was in favour of continuing the office for the present. He thought some good results might be expected before the Commissioner's year was up on May 15th.

Ald. Anderson moved in amendment that the Council should contribute $3,000 to the Commissioner's salary and that the balance be paid by the Board of Trade.

Ald. Duncan thought that the Commissioner would make good and might have two or three industries here before his first year expired.

The appropriation was allowed to remain.

Ald. Duncan reported that Miss Morey has returned from training in Montreal as Matron for the Isolation Hospital here and moved her engagement, at $600 a year, commencing February 15th. This was seconded by Ald. Graham, and carried.

A Question of Salaries.

Ald. Buller moved, seconded by Ald. Edgar, that there be no more increases in the city officials' salaries this year.

Ald. Bradburn moved in amendment that no action be taken in this respect. The amendment was carried on the following vote:

Ayes—Ald. Duncan, Bradburn, Metheral, Graham, Anderson, Morgan

Nays—Ald. Buller, Edgar, Brown, Kernerhan.

To Entertain.

Ald. Morgan moved, seconded by Ald. Anderson, that the Reception committee be authorized to take whatever action necessary to entertain the Hardware Convention.

Ald. Duncan insisted that some steps be taken to provide for M.H.O. McPherson's increase in salary as promised when engaged. Ald. Duncan had to be content to leave the matter in abeyance until a later date.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Ald. Bradburn asked for and was given a leave of absence for two and one half months at last night's meeting, and will leave this week for California. On Ald. Bradburn's motion Ald. Anderson was appointed to act as chairman of the Finance committee during his absence.

THE FINAL SETTLEMENT

A Vital Drama of Business and Social Life

What is conceded to be one of the most powerful American dramas written in recent years is L. B. Parker's new romance of a phase of life in our idle rich class entitled "The Final Settlement," which comes to the Grand next Saturday, matinee and evening.

The theme of the story is daring and sensational and attacks those members of society who seek recourse to the divorce courts to relieve themselves of undesirable mates. The climaxes and situations are startling and spontaneous and the story well told and consistent. The piece was a big success on the city time in the west last season and this is its first tour east. Seats on sale Thursday evening.

All Saints' Young Peoples' Society Were The Hosts

Delightful Evening Was Spent Last Night — Old-Fashioned Spelling Match Was a Feature of the Night.

THE PROGRAMME

All Saints' Young People's Society entertained the Young People of St. John's and St. Luke's in the Parish Hall last evening. In spite of the weather goodly numbers of all three churches were present, and a most enjoyable evening was spent.

A feature of the evening was an old fashioned spelling match. First, St. John's defeated All Saint's, and then met defeat at the hands of St. Luke's successful spellers elicited great applause, and the contests were most enjoyable and interesting. The winners' prizes were awarded to Miss Ada Graham o fSt. Luke's and Miss L. Whitcroft of St. John's. To Miss Adams of St. Luke's and Mr. Miles of St John's were also given tokens of the audience's confidence that they would be more at home on smaller words. Rev. Mr. Carpentier of St. John's presented the prizes.

The programme was as follows:

Instrumental duet—Misses McKee and Starke.

Piano solo—Miss Phyllis Dawson.

words. Rev. Mr. Carpenter of St. St. John's and Mr. Short of St. Luke's.

Vocal solo—Mr. H. Rush.

Recitation—Mr. Brisco.

Vocal solo—Miss Ruth Dawson.

The old fashioned game of musical chairs, refreshments. Auld Lang Syne and God Save the King brought the evening to a close.

MISS GOULD'S WEDDING

Special Wire to the Examiner.

NEW YORK, FEB. 7.—One of the most fashionable and notable weddings seen in NewYork in many years was solemnized to-day when Miss Helen Vivien Gould, aged eighteen, the second daughter of George Jay Gould, multi-millionaire, was united in marriage to Lord Decies, the prominent Irish soldier and sportsman. The groom is forty-four years of age.

Get Away With It.

By extraordinary strategy the bride and the groom had sneaked out of the back door and were now whirling away in a taxicab far from the maddening crowd.

"What will they think of us, dearest?" giggled the bride.

"If they're fair they've certainly got to credit us with some generalship," laughed the groom, "for I tell you, sweetheart, it's no child's play to pull off a safe and sane wedding nowadays."—Sunday Illustrated Magazine.

As Usual.

For two long hours he worked away
And shoveled to the street.
That night when he was fast asleep
It snowed about two feet.

Next morn to get them clean ones more
He worked with might and main.
Came from the roof an avalanche
And filled them up again.

When ordered by the stern police,
Grim guardians of the law,
He shoveled out those walks once more—
And it began to thaw! —Puck.

Love's Labor Lost.

A silly young man
Of the cigarette clan
One night sought the home of a maid.
It was not very far,
And with voice and guitar
He turned out a grand old serenade.
He warbled of love
To her window above
In a voice that was soft and mellow,
Then found, to his cost,
'Twas love's labor lost,
For she'd eloped with another fellow.

Fanny Kemble's Quick Wit.

Fanny Kemble had a fiery temper, which matched that of her husband, Pierce Butler, and speedily brought about one of the most noted divorce trials reported in the lawbooks. In her youth she was remarkably beautiful, and in the role of Juliet she was the personification of dazzling loveliness. She was noted for her keenness of wit even in the days of her old age. Once when an impertinent street lounger stepped up to her while she was looking in the window of a bric-a-brac store and said, "Are you fond of antiquities?" Mrs. Kemble quickly unpinned her veil and, turning on the man her aged face (she was then seventy-three), asked, "Are you?"

How a Meaning Changes.

"Cheat" is a word that now has a very ugly sound. To cheat a man is to defraud him. Originally the word conveyed no such meaning. The old word "escheat" referred to the dues that fell to the crown. It came from the French echoir (Latin, excadere). The modern meaning that attaches to the word tells a sad tale of the extortion and greed that must have been practiced in collecting the dues.

Shiloh's Cure quickly stops coughs, cures colds, heals the throat and lungs. . . . 25 cents.

Treatment of a Cold.

The possibilities in a common cold are such that the wisest course is to call a physician and be regularly treated. Quack remedies are dangerous. Remember that the brain is in close relationship with the nose and its accessory cavities and that inflammation and infection of these cavities, if not recognized in time, may lead to abscess. "Cold cures" often mask the symptoms without curing the disease. Heavy doses of whisky and quinine often do more harm than good.

In emergencies when a physician is not within call the following measures will often check a cold:

First.—A mustard foot bath as hot as can be borne, lasting twenty to thirty minutes, the body being enveloped in blankets to induce a profuse perspiration. Hot lemonade, hot flaxseed tea or ten to thirty drops of spirits of camphor in a glass of hot water will assist the action of the bath.

Second.—A brisk cathartic, as castor oil, calomel, etc.

Third.—The neck and chest should be rubbed with camphorated oil or liquid mustard plaster.

Further than this the treatment of a cold is in the province of a physician.

The method adopted among the Hungarian gypsies of preparing foxes for their Tzigan banquets is singularly eccentric. They first place the carcass of the animal in running water for a couple of days; it is then removed and cooked under hot coals in a hole in the ground. At these banquets cats are considered a princely dish.

30 Years Of Success

The B. M. Hyde Co. Offer a Remedy for Catarrh. The Medicine Costs Nothing if it Fails

When a medicine effects a successful treatment in a very large majority of cases, and when we offer that medicine on our personal guarantee that it will cost the user nothing if it does not completely relieve catarrh, it is only reasonable that people should believe us, or at least put our claim to a practical test when we take all the risk. These are facts which we want the people to substantiate. We want them to try Rexall Muco-Tone, a medicine prepared from a prescription of a physician with whom catarrh was a specialty, and who has a record of thirty years of enviable success to his record.

We receive more good reoprts about Rexall Mucu-Tone than we do of all other catarrh remedies sold in our store, and if more people only knew what a thoroughly dependable remedy Rexall Muco-Tone is, it would be the only catarrh remedy we would have any demand for.

Rexall Mucu-Tone is quickly absorbed and by its therapeutic effect tends to disinfect and cleanse the entire mucous membraneous tract, to destroy and remove the parasites which injure the membraneous tissues, to soothe the irritation and heal the soreness, stop the mucous discharge, build up strong, healthy tissue and relieve the blood and system of diseased matter. Its influence is toward stimulating the muco-cells, aiding digestion and improving nutrition until the whole body vibrataes with healthy activity. In a comparatively short time it brings about a noticeable gain in weight, strength, good colour and feeling of buoyancy.

We urge you to try Rexall Mucu-Tone, beginning a treatment to-day. At any time you are not satisfied, simply come and tell us, and we will quickly return your money without question or quibble. We have Rexall Mucu-Tone in two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Peterborough only at our store,—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets.

CHAMBERLAIN DISCUSSES RECIPROCITY TREATY

Special Wire to The Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., FEB. 8. The reciprocity agreement between Canada and the United States was brought up in the Commons this afternoon by Austin Chamberlain, who remarked that it was a very delicate question involving the tariff policy of a great dominion. He asserted that the agreement removed Canada from the imperial orbit to draw her into the vortex of continental policies and one result would be, he said, that food in England would cost more and he demanded to know if the British government was taking steps to secure similar reciprocity with Canada.

"THE LOTTERY MAN" WILL BE PUBLISHED BY EXAMINER

The Examiner has made arrangements by which the story of "The Lottery Man" the novelization by Albert Payson Terhune of Rida Johnson Young's famous farce of the same name and the very funny story commence in the Examiner to-morrow.

Briefly—"The Lottery Man" is Rida Johnson Young's narration of Jack Wright, a newspaper reporter, traveller and man of the world in general, who owes the proprietor of his paper "The New York Examiner," the sum of $1,000, borrowed. Failing in the payment of which he has promised the editor a world beater feature story. Called upon to make good, he finally hits upon the idea that there are 5,000 women in the United States of various sizes, who would take a $1 chance in a lottery for a husband.

Inducing the editor to "pull off" the lottery as a big newspaper feature, publishing one letter of his name each Sunday, together with a section of his photograph, also publishing numbered coupons to be cut out and mailed with $1 to the editor of the contest department, he offers himself as the capital prize in the newspaper matrimonial lottery, $1.00 the coupon bridal pair to take all the money. Scarcely is the contest launched till the coupons and dollars begin to pour in, when the reporter meets the one girl, his real affinity, in the person of the editor's niece, and a dual battle ensues. Fascinating in its humour and keen satire, gripping in its dramatic intensity, and situations, Mr. Young has introduced into "The Lottery Man" several types, including the funniest spinster that has been written about in years. The story abounds with the spirit of present day business bustle, humour and not a little good, sound sense.

A person in good health, at the age of 45 years, will ordinarily notice a change in the sight, requiring more effort to read fine print, or to see small objects.

It would then be advisable to have the eyes examined by a Competent Eyesight Specialist and fitted with "Preserving or Reed Glasses".

This would give great comfort and prevent eye-strain, which is the cause of much trouble in after years.

Glasses should be changed usually once in two years.

Headaches are often warnings that the eyes need help and they should not be neglected.

The Eyes are the most important organs of the fine senses, and generally the most abused.

Many Eyes Are Ruined by wearing cheap and imperfect glasses.

FARM VALUES AND WAGES IN CANADA.

The Census Monthly for January says that values and wages in Canada make a good record for 1910. The total value of live stock on the farms is $593,768,000, which is $34,979,000 more than in 1909. The price per head of horses is $132.50, as against $130.72 in 1909, of milch cows $42.60 against $36.36, of other cattle $30.90 against $28.81, and of sheep $6.00 against $5.89. Swine alone show a drop in average price, being $11.30 per head, against $11.80. The total value of horses is $293,398,000 for last year, against $278,789,000 for 1909, of milch cows $121,613,000 against $103,601,000, of other cattle $131,781,000, against $126,326,000, and of sheep $15,819,000 against $15,735,000. The value of swine, however, fell from $34,388,000 in 1909 ot $31,157,000 in 1910.

The highest average price of horses was in Saskatchewan, of milch cows, other horned cattle and sheep in Ontario, and of swine in Quebec. Horses, three years old and over, reached the highest price in British Columbia, where the average was $225. Swine per 100 lb. live weight ranged from $6.50 in Manitoba to $9.62 in Quebec. The price of unwashed wool was 18 cents in 1910 and 17 cents in 1909, and of washed wool 24 cents for each year.

The average value of occupied farm land in the Dominion was $38.45 per acre, or 15 cents less than for the previous year. It was highest in British Columbia, where the cost of clearing is heavy and the land is largely occupied for fruit growing—the average being $74 per acre, or 56 cents per acre more than in the previous year. Ontario comes next with $48 per acre, which is $2.22 less than in 1909.

Farm help for the summer season shows an average of $35.15 per month for males, and $20.70 for females, counting board, as compared with $33.69 and $19.08 respectively in the previous year. Males have an average of $347.10, and females $209.69 per year, counting board, as against $336.29 and $206.08 respectively for 1909. The highest prices per month in summer are paid in Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, where they are $40 and over for males and $25 and over for females, counting board. The average rate of board per month ranges from $8 for males, and $6 for females in Prince Edward Island to $20 and $17 respectively per month in British Columbia.

The rates of wages and board are quoted for the farm, where males are employed on the land and families in the house. They are averages computed from a large number of returns by farmers to the Census Office.

THE NEW WATERWORKS DAM.

The report of the Water Commissioners, presented to the City Council on Monday night, and printed in yesterday's issue of the Examiner, is an excellent report; excellent in every way but one, in that it shows that the original estimate of the cost of the new dam is exceeded by about $30,000. But there is this to be said, that even with that, the report and what it deals with is a credit to the Commissioners, and marks a culminating point to the excellent services the Commission has rendered the city for the past eight or nine years.

In considering the excess of cost over estimate, it is to be remembered that the city has received ample value represented by a completed water system; not only one of the best on the continent, but one of a substantial character, that it is not only good for the next generation but, if the world lasts that long, good for the next hundred years. It is well worth while when doing a thing to do it right. This has apparently been done in connection with the new dam and the associated improvements which give us a dam, pumping house and mains system that can be depended upon in every stress of demand. The importance of this is shown by a recent incident at Ottawa where the failure of the water works system was credited with a serious fire, which may make the city responsible for large damages, which the sufferers from the fire are said to claim.

If excess of cost over estimate is justified, it is in securing the best. Hardly any large undertaking is completed on a level with the estimated cost. We have thousands of examples. The city buildings of Toronto cost many thousands nearing the million, beyond the original estimate. Even our own Public Library cost more than the estimate, and the Smith street bridge is another example. In these cases the excess of cost was not due, as is largely the case with the new dam and associated works, to aiming at superior excellence, but to error of estimate on the part of architect and engineer.

The Water Commissioners employed one of the best engineers in Canada, the same as is now in the employ of the Canadian General Electric Comapny; and, that unexpected difficulties of construction created disparity between estimated and actual cost is not the fault of the commissioners, who were bound in the interests of the citizens to do good work, even if the estimated expenditure was surpassed.

As work progressed on the new dam difficulty in the matter of foundation were met, as was the experience of the Quaker Oats people in putting down the foundation of one of their buildings. The rock under the site of the dam was found to be porous and rotten and very great expense in supplementary concrete work was required. Another additional cost was the extra expenditure incurred in excavation and construction of extra deep and heavy additional piers to serve as a foundation for a future power house the city might want to erect. This has been already utilized and permitted of a bargain with the Canadian General Electric Company of so favourable a character as to far more than compensate for the total excess of cost of the new dam over the estimate. The agreement with the Electric Works for the use of the surplus water, involves the erection, by the Canadian General Electric Co, on the foundation provided, of a power house, 45 feet square at an estimated cost, with equipment, of $70,000; all the improvements by the company and the machinery, to be always kept in first class condition, in addition to a yearly rental of $2,000 per year, in the interval, will be turned over to the city and become its property—not only without cost to the city, but with the advantage of the accumulated value of a rental of $2,000 per year. This will, 20 year hence, put the city in possession of a first class equipment, capable of generating 1,000 house power for city lighting and for other purposes. Besides the additional cost has been increased by the acquirement of a line of property on the river bank nearly to Nassau. The control of this riparian property will permit the company to enforce regulations to prevent the contamination of the water of the pumping basin, and the whole city supply.

It is unnecessary to instance other considerations that legitimately increased the cost of the new dam beyond the estimate. It is sufficient to say that a careful reading of the report will show that the city has splendid value in the new dam and that Peterborough can now boast of having a waterworks system, unsurpassed, both in purity of the natural water supply and completeness, for its capacity, by any waterworks system on this continent, and at a cost, which, though larger than expected, will not cause an increase of water rates to meet payment. Nor will the increased cost prevent the profits of the works from paying interest and providing for sinking fund to retire water works purchase debentures on maturity.

FARM PRODUCTS AND THE NEW TARIFF.

(Ottawa Citizen (Conservative.)

The chronic fear of the American agriculturist that the free importation of Canadian farm products may eventually drive him out of the market has been long responsible for the tariff on such products between the two countries and it is a matter of congratulation that the new reciprocity negotiations have wiped out to a great extent the old time restrictions.

Last year the United States sold in this country more than $6,000,000 worth of fruit and nuts; $5,500,000 worth of corn; about $300,000 worth of cattle; more than $1,000,000 worth of wheat; $350,000 worth of hams; $300,000 worth of bacon; $300,000 worth of beef and $1,300,000 worth of pickled pork. In turn Canada has exported food-stuffs to the value this year of perhaps $153,000,000 but the greater amount has been exported to Britain and Europe, the high tariff wall between the United States and this country preventing any reasonable interchange of such commodities.

Under the new arrangement cattle, poultry, swine and horses are admitted free. On cattle the United States tariff was formerly 27 1-2 per cent. on certain values and $3.75 per head on certain classes. In the matter of wheat, now on the free list, the American duty was 25 cents per bushel as against the Canadian rate of 12 cents. On swine the American tariff of $1.50 as against our 1 1-2 cents per pound, is wiped out. On bacon and hams the American duty is reduced 2 3-4 cents from 4 cents, on pickled pork, 13 per cent. and on lard, of which we bought from the United States last year some $1,000,000 worth, the reduction is 1-4 cent. Eggs in the shell, formerly listed at 5 cents per dozen, are now free. The American duty on oatmeal of $1 per 100 pounds to our 60 cents, is reduced one-half, while the tariff on flour is reduced by 70 cents per barrel by the United States.

It is obious that Canadian agricultural interests have been given access to a new market in the United States. It is likewise apparent that the American farmer, with the old fear possessing him, will bring all the pressure possible to bear on Washington for a modification of the new terms.

But even with all the advantages of a perfectly free market it is difficult to see where Canadian products can injure American agriculturists for the present at any rate. The entire Canadian surplus cannot possibly affect a market so huge as that provided by the United States with its vast and ever growing population.

PETERBOROUGH CO-OPERATIVE POULTRY ASSOCIATION

A County Organization Formed---All the Eggs in Peterborough County Will be Marketed From One Centre ---Modern Plant for Peterborough.

Our farmers in Peterborough county are setting an example to the farmers of all Canada in marketing their poultry produce. The members of the local egg circles formed in Peterborough county last June yesterday organized themselves into one central association to be known as the "Peterborough Cooperative Poultry Association." Representaties from all of the local circles except Lakefield gathered in the office of Farm and Dairy, our local farm paper, to form this central organization. Lakefield would have been represented had it not been for the bad condition of the roads.

Mr. H. B. Cowan, Editor-in-Chief of Farm and Dairy, was requested to take the chair. All of the representatives present expressed themselves as much pleased with the progress which had been made in the marketing of eggs through the local circles and expressed their desire to go further and combine all of the circles under one central organization which should look after the marketing of all eggs produced by circle members in the county and make reports of the sales to circle members.

A constitution was submitted defining the duties of this central organization and on the motion of Mr. McGregor of Central Smith, and seconded by Mr. T. B. Young, of Monaghan, the constitution was adopted. The following officers were elected: Pres., C. E. Moore, Central Smith; vice-president; W. A. Rosborough, Zion; Secretary, W. Scott, Central Smith; directors, Wilbur Bennett, Monaghan and S. Matchett, Stewarts.

The Buyer Talks.

Mr. John I. Brown, of Montreal, representing the buyers, Gunn, Langlois & Co., said that while at present they were maintaining and paying the man at the central warerooms in Peterborough, his firm was looking forward to the day when the farmers should take over this central warehouse and ship their eggs directly to the firm's headquarters at Montreal. The constitution of the organization does not bind its members to ship to Gunn, Langlois & Co., or to any other firm. They will sell where they can get the most money. Mr. Brown was quite confident, however, that so long as good eggs were put up, they could compete with any other firm in offering the price that would get the eggs and poultry.

The interest which this firm takes in promoting the production of better eggs and poultry was evidenced when Mr. Brown offered to put pure bred stock in the hands of our farmers at cost price or less. Mr. Brown also submitted to the meeting a resolution passed by the Montreal Produce Exchange making it a criminal offence to knowingly sell bad eggs. Members of the Peterborough egg circles have nothing to fear from legislation of this kind and the resolution was passed unanimously.

A Crate Fattening Establishment.

Gunn, Langlois & Co., with the aid of Mr. Wm. Scott, of Peterborough, proposed to establish in the city this spring a modern crate fattening establishment. Birds delivered by the farmers in a thin condition will be given a couple of weeks feeding in this establishment and will then be marketed as first class dressed poultry. Mr. Scott has visited crate fattening establishments in various parts of Canada to become familiar with the work and it is anticipated that Peterborough county farmers will be enabled to market their live poultry to much better advantage than before when this finishing station is gotten in running order.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Cowan and Mr. John I. Brown for the splendid work which they have done in forwarding the organization of both the local circles and the central association was moved by Mr. T. D. Young and seconded by Mr. W. A. Rosborough. The appreciation of the meeting of this movement was expressed in the usual manner.

Those Who Were There.

The representatives of the various circles present were: C. E. Moore, Alex. McGregor, and W. Scott from Central Smith; T. D. Young and Wilbur Bennett, Monaghan; Mr. Matchett and Bert Deyell, Stewarts; W. A Rosborough from Zion. Mr. A. Knox, of Norwood, was present for Norwood Egg Circle, which is working independently of the other egg circles in the county. H. C. Duff, district representative of the Department of Agriculture, was also present and took part in the discussion.

Our farmers of Peterborough have the distinction of being the first to get together and market their eggs co-operatively on a large scale, thus cutting out a large part of the middle man's profit and at the same time guaranteeing to the consumer the quality of the poultry which he buys.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

THE MISHAP TO ERNESTA

There was a telephone in Graydon College. Over it this Tuesday morning when so many things were happening in and about the old building, came a message for Professor Gordon. He excused himself from his class and went to answer the caller.

"Hello! Professor Gordon? Well, this is the telegraph operator. There's a telegram here for you. Shall I wait till the mail's in or repeat it now?"

This was according to custom in Graydon, where there were no such things as messenger boys, and the telegraph operator, who was also the station agent, was in the habit of holding a wired message until the man from the post office came down to the station to get the mail. Otherwise he would telephone its contents to the proper person if he could be reached by that means.

Gordon asked the agent to repeat the message.

"Here it is," came over the wire. "It's dated Boston, and says: 'Come immediately, South Terminal. Am in terrible trouble. Let nobody, least of all H., know.' It's signed Ernes—"

"That's all right! I know," said Gordon, in a trembling voice. "Is that all?"

"That's all."

Gordon hung up the receiver mechanically. Ernesta in trouble and sending for him! Of course he would go. He looked at his watch and found that it was ten o'clock. The next train would go at 10.30. He had time to make it, but he must not let anybody know that he was going.

As he returned to his classroom the students noticed his over-wrought appearance and exchanged looks. What had happened to him? Gordon made a brave effort to resume his work where he had left off and heard a few students recite; but he was unable to stand the strain very long. At the earliest possible moment he excused himself again, this time taking his hat and saying that he felt faint and would take a turn around the building to recover.

Once outside he hurried down the hill to the village, and when out of sight of the college fairly ran to the station. He made his train with hardly a minute to spare.

To reach Boston from Graydon you change cars at Burrville, eighteen miles from the college town. There you catch an express that lands you in Boston an hour later. To-day the journey seemed endless to Gordon, for his imagination had full play, and he pictured the various things that could have happened to Ernesta. He considered with satisfaction the fact that she could scarcely have suffered any bodily injury, or she would not be waiting for him in a railroad station.

He was the first out of the train when it reached Boston and he dashed up the long platform toward the great waiting room. Among the thousands his eyes instantly caught sight of Ernesta, and she espied him simultaneously. She stretched out her arms in mute appeal as she saw Gordon, and he with a hungry cry rushed toward her. She fell into his arms, and he drew her closely to him.

"O," she sobbed, "I am so glad you've come! So glad!"

"What is it?" he asked. "Tell me, Ernesta, what has happened?"

"I've been robbed," she moaned. "Robbed — of $5,000!"

Gordon gasped. "Five thousand dollars!" He looked at her in wonderment. The girl must be crazy. Something had happened to her to dethrone her mind, suddenly. He knew that she could not have had that sum of money.

"Don't look at me like that," she cried. "It's true, I tell you. I had it. And now it's gone! Gone! Oh, what shall I do?"

Gordon led her to a seat in a remote corner of the waiting-room, and tried to calm her. He was still convinced that she was suffering from some fantasy of the mind; the whole thing was so unnatural—her flight from Graydon without notice, her note of him, and now the telegram and—this. "Quiet, little girl," he said, soothingly. "Quiet! You're all right. I'm here!"

"You don't believe me," she said; "I see you don't, George! But it is so. It's all so. Don't think I'm crazy—I am, almost, but not that way—I did have five thousand dollars all in my bag here! I was waiting to take the train to New York. I saw my bag was open, and looked, and the money was gone. Then I telegraphed you. Oh, what shall I do?"

Her earnestness convinced Gordon in spite of the preposterousness of it all. He said:

"When was this?"

"This morning at half past seven," faltered Ernesta. "I was going to New York. He wanted to ask her a great deal more; but this was not the time. If she really had had the money and it was stolen, the police must be notified and something done to recover it. He asked her if she could identify the robbers, if she had noticed any suspicious persons in her vicinity in the station. No, she sobbed, she had not. She could not account for the loss of the money in any way. It simply was in her bag—and then was not.

In vain he tried to comfort her. She stopped her crying, but only to sink into a condition of blank despair, gazing vacantly around her. Gordon was distressed, but finally he rallied his senses and said:

"Well, Ernesta, there is only one thing to do. If you have lost this immense sum of money, the police must be notified."

She leaped to her feet.

"Why not?"

"Because—because—Oh, I cannot tell you, but the police must not know!"

"Then how on earth do you expect to get the money back?"

"I don't know—I don't know! But the police—never! Promise me you won't tell the police! It would be in the papers—it would—no, it is impossible!"

Gordon was more mystified than ever. Here was a girl, who had never had $5,000 in her life, to the best of his belief, claiming to have just lost that sum and yet refusing to have the police notified, because it would get in the papers. What was there back of it? Suddenly the thought came to him—she does not want the matter made public—because somebody else would know she had lost the money. Who is this somebody? Hopkins! The tableau on the window curtain, in which they had seen Hopkins giving Ernesta money! It was all plain. He recoiled from her in horror. She noticed it and said:

"George, George, what is the matter? Why do you look at me so"

"Ernesta," he said slowly and deliberately, "where did you get that money Who gave it to you?"

She was silent. She seemed about to speak, but restrained herself and averted her face. He repeated:

"Who gave you that money? Tell me, was it Professor Hopkins?"

"Oh," she cried, "you must not ask me. I cannot tell you. But believe me, believe in me. You shall know, not now, but sometime—yes, I promise you, but don't ask me now."

"I must," he insisted. "I ask you again. Was it Hopkins?"

Ernesta drew herself up.

"Mr. Gordon," she said, "I have asked you not to press me on that subject. I had the money for—for a purpose. I have lost it. I thought I could call on you to help me. If you still insist on catechising me, I shall ask you no more favours. You may go."

She made a bold effort to walk away from him, but he clutched her arm.

"Forgive me, Ernesta," he said. "I didn't mean to distress you. You don't know the doubts and fears that have been running through my mind since yesterday. You don't know the things that have happened. I trust you. You don't need to tell me anything. But, if you want to find the money, you must let me do something."

"No," she said, "I am sure it is gone for good. But I must have an equal amount and you must get it for me."

"Impossible," said Gordon. "You know that I haven't that much money."

"You must get it," she said coolly. "You told me once, when you—when you asked me to marry you—that you owned some property here, in Boston. You must raise five thousand dollars on it at once. Oh, I know what I am asking, I know you must think me crazy or—or something. But I tell you George, if I do not get the money to-day, I shall kill myself. Yes, I mean it!"

"And if you do get it—Ernesta, tell me all! Tell me what you want it for. Tell me—has Professor Hopkins anything to do with your going away from Graydon?"

The question was out before Gordon knew it. He would have swallowed his words if he had known the effect they would have on her. She fairly bristled with indignation.

"So that is it," she said. "I might have known it! My association with the professor, my evenings in the laboratory! It's gossip, is it! And my sudden departure caused the scandal to burst! Well, if that's what they think, if that's what you think—why didn't you ask Professor Hopkins before you came away in answer to my telegram? Yes, why didn't you ask him?"

Gordon stared blankly at her. He saw a picture of Hopkins as he had last seen him, that refulgent, grinning, inert thing, just as they wrapped it in the paper and threw their coats over it. He could make no answer.

"Oh," cried Ernesta, "if they only knew! If they could only understand! But they wouldn't! What do I care, though? Let them think anything they please. But I won't have you suspect me, George. I tell you, you must not, cannot! You don't! As to this money, won't you believe me when I tell you that it is a matter of life and death! Yes, life and death! Oh, I'll repay it, you'll be repaid over and over again. I am not speaking wildly. I mean exactly what I say. But if you love me, if you want me to live, you'll get the money. Will you?"

Gordon could have denied her nothing at this moment. He would have believed her against the evidence of the world. He said:

"Ernesta, I don't understand it, but I trust you. Come, I'll try to get the money for you!"

Ernesta's gratitude was beautiful. She looked at him with expression of perfect love, and he knew that there was nothing of deceit in that look. He felt that he could trust her with his life. Even the shadow of doubt was removed from his eyes just then. He did not want to know her secret. They rose.

Suddenly, as the full realization of the man's goodness and generosity came to her, she threw her arms about his neck, saying:

"My own! My deliverer!" Those who saw the action, gasped in wonder. Gordon blushed and hung his head. Ernesta was the only one not embarrassed. Gently he disentangled her embrace and led her to a cab outside the station. In a moment they were whirling away to his lawyer's.

DYSPEPSIA
Can Be Cured.

This disease is the all prevailing malady of civilized life, and one which oftenest baffles all ordinary treatment. It gives rise to a great variety of distressing symptoms, such as distress after eating, rising and souring of food, wind in the stomach, heartburn, etc.

Nearly everything that enters a weak dyspeptic stomach acts as an irritant; hence the great difficulty of effecting a cure.

The long train of distressing symptoms, which render life a burden to the victim of dyspepsia, may be promptly cured by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters.

B.B.B. regulates the stomach, liver and bowels, stimulates secretion of the saliva and gastric juice to facilitate digestion, purifies the blood, and tones up the entire system.

Mrs. Herman Dickens, Benton, N.B., writes: "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters and find that few medicines can give such relief in dyspepsia and stomach troubles. I was troubled for a number of years with dyspepsia, and could get no relief until I tried Burdock Blood Bitters. I took three bottles and became cured, and I can now eat anything without it hurting me. I will highly recommend it to all who are troubled with stomach trouble."

MARRIED IN CHICAGO

The wedding of Miss Lulu St. Claire Browne, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Browne, of 5820 South Park Ave., to John Reeve Cole, son of Delevan B. Cole, was a quiet, but very pretty nuptial event of last week. The knot was tied in the presence of a few friends in Christ church, Woodlawn, Rev. Charles Young officiating. Bishop Williams of Michigan an old friend of the bride's family was an interested witness. A choice wedding repast was served at the bride's home later at which the guests numbered 20. Mr. and Mrs. Cole have started housekeeping in a cozy flat at 6000 Michigan Ave. The bride, who was born in Peterborough, Ont., is a handsome girl of decided musical talent. She and her mother are active in the Ladies' Auxiliary of St. Edmund's Episcopal church. Her father is advertising representative of the Canadian American. Mr. Cole holds a responsible position on the office staff of the Union Pacific Railroad.

Nature's Cure For A Cough

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is the Most Largely Imitated Medicine in the Country

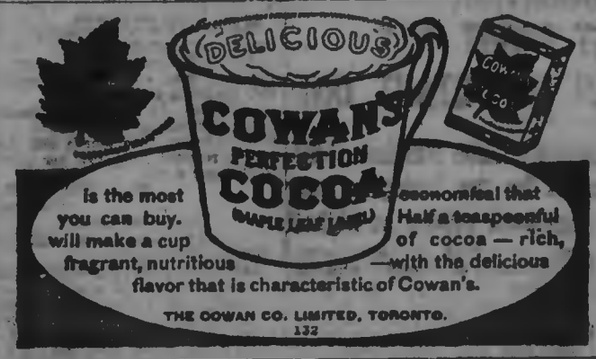
What to give the children for croup and colds is the problem mothers now have to solve. Most of them finally decide on Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and make it a rule to always have some in the house.

In this medicine are linseed, turpentine and other well-known ingredients of unmistakable value in the cure of colds. It is pleasant to take, so much so that children delight to use it.

So generally is this great medicine used that several imitations have been put on the market. All alike in name only. They are not made from the same formula, nor do they bear the name of Dr. Chase.

You know what you can expect from the use of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, but you cannot put much faith in an imitation which sells on the reputation of the articles it imitates.

On every bottle of the genuine will be found the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author. This is for your protection and for the protection of your children. Be sure to get the genuine, even if it costs a few cents more. 25 cents a bottle, family size, 60 cents, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.



THE IRES OF LIFE

A child that's alive
When the stork arrives,
Respires.

Most assiduous care
The cranky young bear,
Requires.

In a short course of time
The cherub sublime,
Inquires.

The knowledge received
And firmly believed,
Inspires.

Then for wealth to be had
This industrious lad
Perspires.

And by constant grind
Of hand and mind
Acquires.

Then with wallet fat
This plutocrat
Retires.

At three score and ten
Being worn out then
He tires.

And honored and blest
Till his very last breath
Expires.

HEREAFTER,
In realms of bliss
He may exist—

Amendment to Address.

London, Feb. 8.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—In the Commons notice was given last night of the official Opposition amendment to the address on the fiscal question, which Austin Chamberlain moves to-day in the following terms: "This House expresses regret at the persistent refusal of His Majesty's Government to modify the fiscal system of this country, imperilling the advantages at present derived by British commerce from the preference granted by the dominions overseas, has deferred commercial union of the Empire and deprived the country of the most effective method of inducing foreign countries to grant fair terms to British manufacturers." The debate has been arranged to extend over two nights and a division will be taken on Thursday.

Did Not Talk Reciprocity.

Ottawa, Feb. 8.—Contrary to expectations, the Canadian Lumbermen's Association did not take any action with regard to reciprocity at their annual meeting, held here yesterday afternoon. The lumbermen will ask the Board of Railway Commissioners to revise their order relating to export and freight rates on lumber.

Reports of the various officers showed that the session has had a good year. It now has 81 members, divided among the provinces as follows: Ontario 47, Quebec 17, British Columbia 15, Manitoba 1, and Saskatchewan 1.

The retiring officers and board of directors were all re-elected the officers for the ensuing year.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION MEETING LAST NIGHT WAS AN IMPORTANT ONE

Report From High School Inspector Spotton Was One of the Features---High Compliments for the Collegiate Staff ---Are Children Allowed Too Much Liberty at Night?

The Board of Education met last night in the Board rooms, and the following members were present: Messrs. Crane, Hill, Adams, Miller, Eastwood, Ackerman, Fair, Thompson and Dr. Morrison. The minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted. The reoprt of the Finance committee was then read. Moved by B. F. Ackerman, seconded by Mr. Fair that the report be adopted.—Carried.

The Finance report read as follows:

Gentlemen,—Your Finance committee beg leave to report and recommend the payment of the following accounts:

B. F. ACKERMAN.
Chairman.

Supervision Committee.

Gentlemen,—Your Supervision committee beg leave to report and recommend as follows:

That after consultation with the Principal of the Collegiate Institute, the Inspector of Public schools and other teachers, this committee views with alarm the many counter attractions that detract the child's mind, and injure the body physically rendering them unfit to do their school work; we particularly refer to such indulgences as late parties on evenings of school days, excessive sports, small boys and girls attending five cent shows, and boys on the street till late selling newspapers, etc., and we therefore recommend that this Board take some action to try and lessen these evils.

Your committee has had under consideration the matter of Text Book fees paid by the Public school pupils.

During the year 1910 a large number of new text-books were authorized by the Education Department and introduced into the schools. This caused a small deficit in the fees account for the past year.

(a) Primary Grade—juniors and seniors, 50c. per pupil.

(b) Book I Grade—juniors and seniors $1.00 per pupil.

(c) Book II Grade—juniors and seniors, $1.20 per pupil.

(d) Book III Grade—juniors and seniors, $2.00 per pupil.

(e) Book IV Grade—juniors and seniors, $2.00 per pupil.

The fees paid by the pupils of these grades are 50c., $1.00, $1.50, $2.00 and $2.00 respectively per year. It will be seen that the fee for Book II pupils is slightly in advance of the cost of the supplies used by them. The others get full value for their fees.

The actual amount of supplies used by each and every pupil is carefully recorded by the teachers.

The retail prices of the supplies furnished each pupil is much in excess of the fee charged. A detailed statement of the amount and retail cost of the supplies furnished each pupil of the Jr. III grade is appended and well illustrates the advantage of the fee system.

The retail rice of the supplies furnished each pupil of this grade is $4.70, while the fee charged is but $2.00. In the other grades a less but considerable saving is effected.

In justice to the Book II pupils, your committee would recommend that beginning with March 1911 their fee be reduced from 15c. per month to 10c. per month.

W. A. MORRISON,
Chairman.

Junior III Grade.

1 arithmetic, 10c.; 1 geography 65c.; 1 dictionary, 15c.; 1 reader, 14c.; 1 physiology, 25c.; 1 composition book, 15c.; 1 ruler, 1c.; 5 unruled work books at 3 cents each, 15c.; 5 ruled work books at 5c. each, 25c.; 5 dictation books at 3 cents each 15c; 2 not books at 5c. each, 10c.; 2 copying books at 2c. each 4c.; 2 drawing pencils at 5c. each 10c.; 10 work pencils at 2 1-2 cents each 25c.; coloured crayons 2.; clucine 2c.; 1 penholder 5c; 20 pen points 10c.; 150 sheets foolscap, full size 60c.; 100 sheets foolscap half size 20c.; 3 rubber erasers at 3c., 9c.
Work paper	.10
150 sheets of drawing paper	.15
Paint box and paints	.25
1 paint brush	.05
Ink	.05
Blotting paper	.03
Cover paper	.05
Supplementary reader	.15
Music books	.30
Total	$4.70

Moved by Dr. Morrison, seconded by Mr. Miller, that the report be adopted. Dr. Morrison thought that the Board should take some action to stop the children from being out late at nights. He stated that the pupils would not get along well at school and then the parents would blame the Board of Education, whereas it was the pupils' own fault. He said that some action should be taken to lessen the evil at once.

Mr. Hill thought that the question should be discussed by each member of the Board individually. He was of the opinion that the children should be at home and in bed before midnight. He said that hockey matches and social functions tended to take the boys out in the evenings and to take their minds off their school work. Children should be at home and in bed at a reasonable time.

Col. Miller expressed himself to the effect that an item in the newspapers was not enough, but an article should be put in to call the parent's attention to the matter. He said that he was in favour of giving the children a little outdoor sport, but they should not be allowed to continually attend the moving picture shows.

He also drew their attention to the fact that numerous little boys were forced to sell papers on the streets, after the evening trains, simply to supply monies to the home, and he felt that it was unfair for them to have to do so.

Mr. Hill said the Principal had frequently referred to this on previous occasions, and he knew there were many pupils, who had failed in their examinations owing to their attention being called away from their studies in the evening. He said that the press had a large influence with the parents of the children, but that a circular issued would have the desired effect.

Mr. Eastwood said that the Board should recommend to the Council that the license on these picture shows be raised three-fold.

Mr. Morrison moved, seconded by Mr. Fair, that the thanks of the Board be tendered to Dr. Burnham for his kindness in donating several splendid volumes to the Institute Library. —Carried.

The Board referred to the cost of the text books and fees, but they found it impossible to reduce the price to the scholars. The reoprt of Mr. Spotton, High School Government Inspector on the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, was then read.

The grading of the accommodations were all No. one with the exception of class rooms and lighting. These were second class. Mr. Spotton gave his reasons for grading them as follows: "I am compelled, under the regulations, to lower the grading of the class rooms, in the absence of sufficient decoration. If, however, the Board undertake to supplement what has been done by the expenditure of, say $100 before the Easter holidays, the grading will be restored for the present year. I note that the top lights of a good many of the windows have been permanently closed up by opaque blinds. The top lights are of a very great value in lighting the opposite side of the room, and their usefulness should not be destroyed as at present. The most that should be done would be to frost them, or cover them with light blinds."

Commenting on the equipment, he said: "The Library of reference needs building up. I strongly advise the Board to appropriate steady grants from year to year till a good standard had been reached. The same remark applies to the scientific apparatus."

"More wall cases are needed for the safe keeping of the museum specimens. These specimens are valuable and are sure to deteriorate if kept exposed as at present."

Miss Alford's certificate has been made permanent.

The grading of the subjects was also found good, with the exception of Drill and Calisthenics. Mr. Spotton classed these as fair, giving his reasons as follows: "There is no gymnasium belonging to the school, and the arrangements for physical culture can notbe considered at present as entirely satisfactory.

Character of the Pupils' Work.

Writing, Forms 2 and 3 and the Commercial Forms, a satisfactory average.

Bookkeeping sets, both Commercial Forms satisfactory.

Work in Art—A good beginning.

Note books in Science—Satisfactory.

Mr. Spotton expressed his pleasure at reporting that the school had improved for the present year.

In general remarks, Mr. Spotton said: "It has given me a great deal of pleasure to revisit this school under its greatly improved conditions, as to accommodation and equipment. The new principal is administering with marked ability the affairs of the school, so long and so successfully conducted by Mr. Fessenden; the staff in general, is a very strong one and the tone of the school is distinctly high."

"It is my duty to again call the attention of the Board to the necessity of action in the gymnasium. The present arrangements for physical culture cannot be regarded as satisfactory, and they cannot be satisfactory till the school has a well equipped gymnasium of its own."

Moved by Dr. Morrison, seconded by Mr. Adams, that the reoprt be received and referred to the Supervision committee and Property committee.

Mr. H. R. H. Kenner said that a grant of $50 a year for a few years would put the Library in good shape. The Executive Literary Society asked for a couple more bulletin boards. The annual commencement exercises will take place and he was of the opinion that printed programmes should be given.

Moved and seconded that the bulletin board question be left in the hands of the Property committee.

Moved by Mr. Vincent Eastwood, seconded by Mr. Hill, that the grant of $50 to the Library be given.

Mr. Hazen Richie was re-appointed on the Public School Board for three years from February first.

Mr. Fair spoke of the defective wiring in the schools. He said it would cost about $140.00 to have the wiring fixed in the schools.

An extra class room will be required in the King Edward school, also a new boiler. The foundation under the Central school is bad. The planking around the old Collegiate is also in want of repair.

Dr. Morrison thought the Property committee should discuss the whole question. He also pointed out the necessity of improving the sanitary conditions in the East City school, which at present are in a state which is injurious to the children's health. In his opinion the Kindergarten in the King Edward should be disbanded and the room turned into a class room. He said that there were already about five kindergartens in the city, which is more than any other city of this size.

Mr. Hill thought the whole question should be referred to the Property committee. He said that the Queen Alexandra and the King Edward schools were the only Public schools in the city that were any good. A great deal of discussion took place over the idea of building both an East and West Ward school.

Mr. Fair thought that they should lay the most pressing needs before the council, and he felt sure that they would be attended to.

Moved by Mr. Hill, seconded by Dr. Morrison, that the whole affair be referred to the Property committee.—Carried.

BRONCHITIS COMPLETELY CURED.

St. Jean, P.Q., Jan. 5th, 1910.

Father Morrissey Med. Co. Ltd.,

I can gratefully testify in favor of Father Morrissey's Remedy for Bronchial trouble. I had suffered for some time from Bronchitis, and could get nothing to give me ease, until I tried Father Morrissey's Prescription (No. 10). To my great surprise, after I had taken this remedy I commenced to grow better, and soon after I was completely cured.

Mde. GEORGE DESMARAIS.

Everybody knows that many common roots, barks and herbs contain Nature's own provision for the relief of coughs and colds. It remained for Father Morrissey, with his wonderful medical skill, to combine extracts from these in such a way as to make the most effective cure for all forms of throat and lung troubles.

His prescription, known as "Father Morrissey's No. 10" or "Lung Tonic", stops a cough by curing the inflamed condition of throat or lungs which causes it. It goes a step further, too, and earns its name of "Lung Tonic" by strengthening the weakened parts.

WEDDING BELLS

SMITH—NORTHEY.

A very quiet and pretty wedding was solemnized in Christ church, Bobcaygeon on Wednesday afternoon last at 3 o'clock when Miss Mima Northey, oldest daughter of Mr. W. J. Northey, and Mr. John Smith, both of Lakehurst were united in the holy bonds of matrimony.

Rev. F. L. Barber officiated. The bride looked charming in a navy blue suit with hat to match and handsome sable furs.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

On Tuesday afternoon the junior game tournament was brought to a close, after four weeks of good, clean keen rivalry, which brought to the front K. Knapman and G. Matthews. These two boys demonstrated that as a team, on all round playing of games they are at present unbeatable. But now comes a test which will bring another champion to the front. Starting to-night, twenty-four boys will fight it out for who is the best crokinole player in the department and this promises some good sport, as there are many good players in the department now. Entries close to-night.

A special meeting of the education committee is being called for Saturday, 7.30, in connection with the boys' hobby exhibition.

Barbara Tennant

As was due the guests of King's Daughters, a royal entertainment was provided the audience at the Opera House last night by the splendid readings of Barbara Tennant. There was a large attendance, representative of the best intellectual and social elements of the citizenship; and it is safe to say that every moment of the excellent and well-balanced programme presented, was enjoyed. Barbara Tennant's conspicious successes achieved in other places excited a naturally large expectation; and that was in no way disappointed. Her charming personal presence, her grace of bearing and movement, her sweet, cultured voice, her perfect elocutionary art, her fine dramatic sense, her intuitive perception of, and faculty of giving expression to, the sentiments of pathos or humour involved in her selections, made her presentations an intellectual, as well as sensual, delight. Versatility is a weak word to express the unerring fidelity of stroke in picturing all shades of fancy and emotion, from light and subtle humour to dramatic depth of pathos and fire of passion, with which Miss Tennant invested her readings. The classic playfulness of the opening Shaksperean selection, the Oberon address to Puck, followed by the "Lesson of the Fan" in lighter vein; "The Pin" and "The Hindoos' Paradise" gave full play to a delicate and fetching interpretation. In Gunga Dinn, the real pathos underlying the crude humour of diction was effectively and skilfully developed. Equally happy was the revealed pathos of the reading of "My Ships," "The Ballad of Splendid Silence," and "Little Boy Blue." With all this the audience was, perhaps, hardly prepared for the splendid dramatic artistry and abandon of the potion speech from "Romeo and Juliet." It was perfect, in mise en scene, costuming, and tragic fidelity, expressiveness and intensity of interpretation; and created in any one who had seen the play itself a thirsty longing to see such an artist in full panoply and scope in the presentation of the greatest love tragedy of dramatic literature. If a new Juliet is wanted Barbara Tennant is capable of creating a new role. The programme concluded with "Cinders"—an episode of London life. With all the elements of a comedy, Barbara Tennant, the slavey, and Mr. Harold Wadley, the briefless barrister, made it a classic. While Barbara Tennant, with perfect skill, brought out all the quaint and characteristic Cockney humour and touching nobility of pathos of "Cinders," Mr. Wadley gave her splendid support. The quiet, restrained tone, the naturalness, the fidelity to life of the presentation transported one to Alsatia, and the whole seemed a picture, struck out of London fog by limelight. No finer piece of life-like, true-to-life acting could be asked or fancied.

During the evening Mr. Maclean Borthwick sang several selections with much acceptability, and was given a warm reception. The Opera House Orchestra gave two timely selections from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer's Night Dream."

It is a pleasure to know that the King's Daughters realize a very substantial assistance in their noble work, which they well deserve, for the public of Peterborough owe to them one of the most delightful evenings of its kind that has ever been enjoyed by a Peterborough audience.

GOLD EXTRACTION ON SASKATCHEWAN RIVER

The evolution of gold extraction from the river bed and bars of the Saskatchewan would form a volume of interesting details. On the hilly drive from Duck Lake, the famous battle ground of 1885, on the south shore of the North Saskatchewan, to Prince Albert, tourists may view an old, curiously constructed, ram-shackle, abandoned steamboat, which somewhat resembles a sternwheel passenger craft, and is yet rigged with an apparatus evidently intended for dredging. This is a dis-used gold dredge, which represents some $10,000 or $12,000 invested, mostly by Englishmen, in enabling an English engineer to develop his ideas as to what a gold dredger should be. Perhaps if he had been furnished with wheels, pulleys, chains, stanchions, and other mechanical parts of good steel, it might have worked to this day. But the parts were made in England, possibly by some one used to contracting for the war office. They gave out at all critical junctures with wondrous rapidity, and the dredger practically went to bits, as has been said, almost after the manner of Dr. Holmes' "one-hoss shay." Yet it produced in the open season of one year, gold that sold at the mint for $8,100, from 18,000 cubic yards of gravel dredged from the bars of the North Saskatchewan; this means 45 cents of gold per cubic yard. The tailings are said to have contained enough more to be worth reworking.

Now, extensive gold-dredging operations are carried on along the Feather River of California, in gravel or sand, which yields less than 20 cents per cubic yard. Boston men and money are engaged on Feather River. Many have since turned their attention to the Saskatchewan.

At present the North Saskatchewan at many points along the meandering for 300 miles below Edmonton, is being exploited by miners using a very crude apparatus locally called the "grizzly," which term is more properly applied to one part of the collection of cheap contrivances.

The grizzly, whence the evolution of the gold dredge, is a very simple device. Any ordinary man could construct one, at a cost of $5 or $10, according to his ability. Men earned and now earn from $2 to $4 per day along the Saskatchewan by this process. On some bars they run as high as $8 and $10. During the open season scores may be seen recovering fine gold; the work is remunerative and fascinating, but now that modern invention has produced a dredge and buckets operated by water power and electricity, doing the work of 1,500 or 2,000 men each day, the days of the "grizzly" and "rocker" appear to be numbered—so far as being considered distinctive machines for gold recovery.

A steam dredger is essentially a "grizzly" apparatus on a great scale. The machinery lifts gravel from the river bed or the bar, dumps it aboard the boat, washes it over successive screens, and ultimately leaves the gold adhering to blanket cloth, from which work it is washed in receptacles containing mercury, so that amalgam is formed. A steam "grizzly" and all other plant contributing to the formation of a first-class modern gold-dredging apparatus, cost from $60,000 to $125,000—or more, according to capacity.

PETERBOROUGH TO BECOME A DAIRY RECORD CENTRE

J. A. Ruddick, Dairy and Cold Storage Commissioner, States That the Work Will be Started as Soon as the Details Can be Arranged.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir.—Many farmers in the vicinity of Peterborough have expressed a desire to have the district selected for one of the "Dairy Record Centres," which it is proposed to establish this spring, as a further step in the cow testing movement. This evidence of interest in the matter, and the knowledge that the dairymen of the Peterborough district are always wide awake and enterprising, has decided us to meet this request, and the work will be started as soon as the details can be arranged. The plan of operation is as follows:

It is proposed to include an area of six to ten miles radius from the city. As many as possible of the farmers in that territory will be persuaded to keep records of the individual cows in their herds by weighing the milk and taking samples on three days each month. The samples will be sent to the local cheese factory or creamery to be tested. The Department will pay the maker 5 cents per test and furnish the acid and preservatives. The Department will also provide the blank forms for recording weights of milk. The farmers will be required to provide only the spring scale, a small dipper for sampling, and a sample bottle for each cow to be tested. These may be procured from local dealers in dairy supplies.

An expert, who will be provided with a horse, will spend his whole time in connection with the Peterborough Centre. He will supervise the testing ofthe samples, and investigate abnormal cases. It will be his business during the season to procure a full description of every herd, so as to have a complete record at the end of the season. In cases where farmers do not take samples or weigh the milk, the average record may be obtained from the factory books. All herd records will be published under numbers instead of names, so that no one will be able to identify the figures published as representing a particular herd.

Of course, if any one objects to giving information about his herd for the purpose of comparison, his wishes will be respected, but we do not expect to meet many people of that kind.

It is proposed to continue this work for several years, and, with a complete record of the herds year by year, a mass of valuable information will soon be obtained.

Those who desire to take part in this plan for general improvement of their herds should prepare at once by securing the necessary outfit and sending their names to the Dairy Commissioner, Ottawa, until a local office is opened.

This plan will not involve any change for those already belonging to the Cow Testing Associations. The aim is to extend that work and make the records more complete.

Meetings will be held in the various localities in the near future, and it is expected that a general meeting will be held in Peterborough on March 1st, particulars of which will be announced in a few days.

If the farmers of the district will join us heartily in this movement, and will agree to act promptly on the information which the records give them concerning their individual cows, we will undertake to increase the general average yield of milk by 25 per cent. in 3 or 4 years. Is this not worth while?

J. A. RUDDICK,
Dairy and Cold Storage Commissioner.

CRIPPLE FROM RHEUMATISM

NOW IN PERFECT HEALTH THANKS TO "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

VANCOUVER, B.C., Feb. 1st. 1910.

"I am well acquainted with a man, known to thousands in Vancouver, Victoria and New Westminster, who for nearly a year was practically a cripple from Rheumatism. He was so troubled with the disease that he found it difficult to even turn over in bed. His heart appeared so weak that he could hardly walk up stairs.

Last June, he received a sample of "Fruit-a-tives". He used them and dates his recovery from that time. To-day, there is no man in Vancouver enjoying better health.

He was building a house this fall and shingled a good part of the roof in a driving rain, without suffering any bad effects". JOHN B. LACY.

CLAUSES OPPOSED

United States Paper Men Say the Treaty is Not Fair—Claim that the Agreement is One-Sided

THEIR ARGUMENTS

Washington, Feb. 8.—As a result of the growing belief that the paper and woodpulp provisions of the new Canadian reciprocity agreement will operate one-sidedly to the benefit of the Dominion without a corresponding benefit to the U. S., an important change is likely to be made by Congress in the measure before it is ratified.

Paper manufacturers and other who have studied the agreement closely, believe that the language of the arrangement is so drawn that the United States may be compelled to admit paper free, before Canada complies with her part of the agreement. The situation has been presented to the way and means committee of the House in such a strong light that many members of that committee are satisfied the agreement between the two countries on the paper and pulp is open to a construction which will be distinctly to the disadvantage of United States manufacturers.

Secretary Knox sent a letter to the committee yesterday stating that the commissioners who framed the reciprocal agreement had arrived at only a tentative agreement upon the paper schedule. It can be changed, he said, without defeating the rest of the treaty, and its adjustment can be left to future negotiations or future action of Congress. The ways and means committee also procured yesterday a draft of the measure introduced in the Canadian Parliament to put the agreement in force in the Dominion. This shows that Canada had taken the stand that American paper and pulp shall not be admitted free into that country until all provinces have removed the restrictions against the exportation of the pulp logs.

The trouble arises over the distinction in Canada between "crown lands" and "private lands," and the rulings that the Treasury Department at Washington has made on this subject. Where Canadian provinces restrict the exportation of pulp logs, it is from "crown lands." The provinces have no power to restrict the exportation of logs cut from private lands.

Effect on Immigration.

Ottawa, Feb. 8.—W. J. White, chief Canadian immigration agent to the United States, says that the reciprocal trade agreement with the United States will result in a large increase in the American immigration into the Canadian west. At the beginning of the year it was estimated that during the immigration season 130,000 settlers would cross the international boundary line into Canada. Mr. White thinks that the estimate can now safely be increased to 150,000.

The Power Was Off.

Hamilton, Feb. 8.—A fire broke out in the power-house of the Dominion Power and Transmission Co.—the Cataract Co.—at Decow Falls yesterday morning, and for several hours the plant of every factory in this district was at a standstill.

The power came on again about 10 a.m., but as the manufacturers thought it would not be available until noon at least, they had sent home their hands for the day. The street cars were stalled around the system, and at intervals all morning, while the suburban traffic was tied up for hours, and badly congested.

The advocates of the Hydro-Electric are using the breakdown of the Cataract power this morning as a forcible argument of having an alternative system in the city.

Provinces May Appeal.

Toronto, Feb. 8.—Hon. J. J. Foy received word yesterday that the Privy Council had granted the provinces leave to appeal in the litigation respecting the rights of provinces to grant charters to companies to operate outside of their own boundaries.

The Dominion Government had made a reference of the issue to the Supreme Court, but the Premier declined to have that body adjudicate upon the case, and asked to be heard by the judicial committee of the Privy Council. The application of the provinces having been granted, the case will likely be argued in London next June.

The revenue of Ontario will be affected to the extent of $300,000 a year by the final decision.

Imposing Lincoln Memorial.

Washington, Feb. 8.—The House enacted into law yesterday the Senate bill providing for a commission to secure plans and designs for a suitable monument or memorial to Abraham Lincoln in this city. It is estimated that this memorial will cost in the neighborhood of $2,000,000, and be the most imposing of all the monuments in Washington, save only the towering shaft erected in memory of Washington.

YESTERDAY IN SENATE

Sir Richard Cartwright Introduces a New Elevator Bill Providing for a Commission of Three

HEAVY PENALTIES

Ottawa, Feb. 8.—Sir Richard Cartwright, in the Senate yesterday, introduced the bill in respect to terminal elevators and the inspection of grain in general, which is based upon an agreement arrived at between the executives of the Western Farmers' Associations and the Government. The chief provision of the bill is one for the appointment of an independent commission of three, a chairman and two associate commissioners, who will have the same extensive jurisdiction over the transportation inspection and storage of grain that the Railway Board has over the railways of the country. The measure is a bulky affair, as it includes all the provisions of the Manitoba Act, and the Inspection Act, which it is proposed to continue in force. It was given a first reading.

In the course of his explanation, Sir Richard Cartwright said that the grain commission would have power to investigate and control all questions relating to the transportation, inspection and storage of grain, and will have authority to weigh and examine grain whenever they desire to do so. They will also have power to declare which are terminal elevators, and, in fact, may so designate any elevator. With the assent of the Government, and an appropriation being made for the purpose by Parliament, the commissioners will have authority to acquire by lease, purchase or expropriation, any elevator, or they may construct new elevators. They are given authority to engage experts and the necessary staff, and are directed by the bill to create inspection divisions as they see fit. The board is given authority to make rules and regulations respecting grain without the counsel of the Government being required.

The commissioners will hold office for ten years, and will be required to live at Port Arthur or Fort William.

Drastic penalties are provided for offences against the act, such as mixing grain in terminal elevators, the minimum penalty in such cases being a fine of $5,000. When corporations are found guilty their officers are made subject to penalties. Elevators where offences are committed are liable to have their licenses revoked for a year, in addition to their penalties.

A Poor Weak Woman

As she is termed, will endure bravely and patiently agonies which a strong man would give way under. The fact is women are more patient than they ought to be under such troubles.

Every woman ought to know that she may obtain the most experienced medical advice free of charge and in absolute confidence and privacy by writing to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, R. V. Pierce, M. D., President, Buffalo, N. Y. Dr. Pierce has been chief consulting physician of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. FORESEES A DEFICIT

Criticisms Are Made of the Provincial Budget—Proposal to Do Away With Exemptions

STREET RAILWAY BILL

Toronto, Feb. 8.—Attracted by the announcement that S. Clarke, the redoubtable debater of West Northumberland, would resume the budget debate, with, it was expected, old-time humor, the galleries contained many listeners yesterday afternoon. Mr. Clarke, however, took the tone of a serious, financial critic of the Government.

It would be impossible, said the member for West Northumberland, for any member of the House to master the contents of the big book of public accounts covering over eight millions expenditures.

He noticed that whenever the name of the Minister of Mines was mentioned it seemed to act like electricity on Government members. (Ministerial applause.) He did not know the reason why; perhaps they did? (Renewed Ministerial applause.) But there was one little item, or rather, one big item about which he did not do his whole duty. That was in respect to the sale of the Gillies' limits. It was one of the greatest errors of judgment imaginable. The Department, after a few small pettifogging advertisements, sold the Gillies' limit to A. J. Young for $10,500, and the purchaser resold the limit in October of the same year to a firm of Montreal contractors for $330,000.

Mr. Ferguson—"What could you buy it for now?"

Mr. Clarke—"That has nothing to do with it."

Recurring to the financial statement, Mr. Clarke opined that a $3,400 balance was a very small margin on an expenditure of $9,000,000, and it must have required, as the Provincial Treasurer had said, some very careful bookkeeping.

Seven years ago the total expenditure did not exceed $5,000,000. He considered that $4,000,000 was a large increase for the last six years, especially as Col. Matheson had got up in the House six years ago and declared an expenditure of $5,000,000 at the end of ten and a half years of Liberal rule.

"The way he used to depict the Liberal extravagance," announced the talker, "I could almost see the price of coffins raising."

When Mr. Clarke suggested that the Government might get some added revenue by taxing the automobiles—not extremely, but tax them for running up and down the Ontario roads. People in the rural sections had no right to keep up the roads for the auto owners "to go and do as they pleased."

Then the $40,000 revenue from liquor licenses was touched up. If the Government had left the old act and the square equal vote alone, they wouldn't have an increased revenue without increasing the licenses.

J. W. Johnson, West Hastings, Conservative, said that the feeling of the public of Ontario towards the Government was one of satisfaction, confidence and gratitude.

The province was prospering as never before, and it was regretable that this condition was threatened by the reciprocity proposals, which also would tend to the disintegration of the Empire.

J. McEwing (West Wellington), in a speech which was not concluded when the House adjourned, declared that there would be a deficit of three and a half millions, and he contended that his predictions were realized in the present budget. It would so appear, too, but for a beautiful system of bookkeeping.

Mr. McEwing attributed to Hon. Senator George W. Ross and Senator McMullen "the weakness of old age," because they had spoken against reciprocity.

C. R. McKeown (Dufferin) will shortly introduce a bill to abolish the exemption on land covered by and immediately surrounding church buildings.

Hon. J. S. Duff has been applied to by the Ontario Plowman's Association for a grant of $1,000.

Hon. J. S. Hendrie is expected to introduce a bill to control the powers of street railway companies with respect to the enforcement of the company's bylaws and the establishment of P.A.Y.E. systems.

Died From Exposure.

Bolton, Feb. 8.—Thomas McGuire of Bolton, a single man, 60 years of age, was found on the highway yesterday morning apparently frozen, by a farmer coming into town. Upon examination McGuire was found to be alive. A doctor was summoned, but he expired shortly afterwards without regaining consciousness. It appeared he had been walking home from Lockton, a place about ten miles from Bolton, where he had been acting as bailiff, and must have become exhausted with the snow and extreme cold.

Paid $25 For Hug and Kiss.

Brantford, Feb. 8.—For offering his company to a young lady while walking along Brant avenue Monday night, and finally hugging and kissing her against her wish, Orval Saunders, a local young man, was fined $25 or 60 days by Magistrate Howell at the Police Court yesterday. The magistrate held the performance to be no joke and set a high premium on indiscriminate kissing in Brantford. The fine was paid.

No Race News by Telegraph.

New York, Feb. 8.—A special despatch from Washington printed here yesterday afternoon, says:—

The Mann bill, to prohibit the transmission by telegraph companies of horse racing intelligence, will be reported favorably from the House Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The effect of the bill, if passed, will be to strike at racing in seven states where it is now allowed—Montana, Maryland, Florida, Nevada, Oklahoma, Virginia, and Kentucky.

PROVE PSYCHINE

(PRONOUNCED SI-KEEN)

With a 50c. bottle free from your Druggist

It's not so long ago that the doctors bled a man to make him strong.

"Staff a cold and starve a fever" is miles behind our to-day's knowledge of curative science, yet our fathers had it preached to them time and again.

You may not know it, but to-day there are just as ineffective methods of cure being preached and practised.

All because most people do not know the real cause of disease.

There are two kinds of corpuscles in the blood—red and white.

The red corpuscles contain nutrition, the white destroy disease germs.

If for any cause the white corpuscles become depleted and are not sufficiently strong to destroy the germs of disease, then disease controls the body.

That's the cause of disease.

* * *

They didn't know how or why in those days, they do to-day.

These herbs are contained in Psychine—they're responsible for the great results obtained from Psychine a third of a century ago.

They're responsible for the hundreds of thousands that Psychine has cured since that time.

It's because of these herbs that we have received hundreds of thousands of testimonials attesting to wonderful cures that Psychine has made.

And it's because of these very same herbs that we will buy within the next twelve months hundreds of thousands of 50-cent bottles of Psychine and give them away free to whomsoever sends us the coupon in this announcement.

Now if you wish to relieve or prevent any of the disorders in this list send in that coupon:

THE JUNIOR CANADIAN CHAMPIONS WERE TOO SPEEDY FOR PETERBORO' GRILLERS

A GREAT JUNIOR TEAM

Jim Sutherland's husky bunch of speed merchants from Kingston, the famous Frontenacs, proved too hard a proposition for the Peterborough Junior O. H. A. team in the game at Brock street rink last night and the Grillers fighting hard every inch of the way went down to defeat before a superior team by a score of 11 to 4. Half way through the junior champions of Canada were in front 5 to 1. From the middle of the first half on the game was never in doubt. The Petes held their opponents scoreless for fifteen minutes of up-and-down-the-rink play, having as much of the going as had the visitors, but after it was a stern chase for the Grillers. The Frontenacs tallied five in a row before Peterborough finally scored just before half time. For the first twenty minutes of the second half the play was again very even, each team finding the nets three times but the Frontenacs wound up the game with three counters in succession. The better team won; that is an indisputable fact, and from here it looks as if the man that would bet the Penitentiary seven would not cop the John Ross Robertson plate again this season, should be a fit subject for an alienists' convention.

The Frontenacs had everything that goes to make up a splendid team. They had the speed, the science, the stick handling, combination, etc., when they broke away together and the ability to go in alone when necessary. Above all they have been thoroughly coached and know each other's style to a nicety. They combine a heavy, fast defence with a lightning forward line, every one of which is a tireless back checker and the result is a team that will take a whole lot of beating. Their play last night was pretty to watch, and the visitors earned the admiration of every man in the rink who although they regretted the downfall of the Grillers, did not in the least begrudge the victory to a better team. The Frontenacs will have the best wishes of the Peterborough team in their fight for the junior O.H.A. honours.

It was a good exhibition of junior hockey and the 1,200 fans in attendance enjoyed the battle, which was far more even than the score of 11 to 4 would indicate. Neither team let up for a moment, and it was a rapid-fire struggle with the youngsters travelling at top speed from gong to gong. As a result there was every feature that goes to make up good hockey. Nice individual efforts and clever passing and shooting made the contest one that was a treat to watch even though the tide of battle turned against the home team.

Jim Sutherland's machine was too finished for the Grillers; that was all there was to the game. The Peterborough youngsters played splendid hockey, but they lacked the speed and the finish of the Frontenacs, the fast back-checking of the Kingston line breaking up the Petes combination effectually and they could not get working together as they have in their other games this season. They tried faithfully to start their combination going, but so fast did the Frontenac forwards come back that the passing game of the Grillers was broken up consistently all through and only on a few occasions were they allowed to break away together without interference from behind. At that the Petes had hard luck when in close; Hall, on one occasion, when he got clean through on a neat piece of combination, hit the post, and several other times the shot was wide when there was nobody to beat but the goal-keeper. The Grillers worked their heads off to hold the flying visitors and although they were unequal to the task, they did not lose any friends by the manner inwhich they lost. The Frontenacs came here with a record of such scores as 32 to 2, 24 to 3, etc., hanging from their belts, with the well-earned title of junior champions of Canada and few people in Peterborough expected the Grillers to beat the visitors. The local youngsters fought every second of the game, and the score does not indicate the play by any means, even though the visitors earned their decisive victory.

Kingston were strong in every point of the game. Their big defence men check beautifully and it was impossible to draw them out. Both rushed well, Davidson, the sturdy point man and Captain of the team proving himself especially proficient in this branch of the game. He has a great burst of speed to call upon, and is a very hard man to stop when he gets going. McCammon, the big cover, is not as neat or as fast, but he is a splendid check, and when he gets under way in his rushes, takes some stopping. All four forwards are lightning fast and clever stick-handlers, but Milan, the little left wing player looks like the class of the four. The midget is like a flash of lightning and his rushes last night were dazzling to watch. His stick-handling was superb all through and he was always coming in with the rubber, stopping for nothing. Next to Milan, Brouse was, perhaps the best. The bow-legged rover takes the nearest route to the nets and tears through in grand style, doing some grand stick-handling. ... yer, at right wing, is very speedy ... does a lot of effective work.

Marchand, the goal-keeper, made a number of pretty stops.

For Peterborough, the stars undoubtedly were Patterson, Coughlin and Heffernan. The Grillers' goal-keeper played a remarkable game, getting scores of shots, most of them from close in, and he was called upon much more frequently than was Marchand. On half a dozen occasions when his defence was beaten, he came out and got the sot or the man and saved whatlooked like sure goals. Jerry Coughlin played a star game all through, and nobody on the ice had very much on the Petes rover His stick-handling was beautiful and it kept the Frontenacs busy heading off his rushes. Three times he sifted through the Kingston defence for scores, on one occasion side-stepping five men to go right in for a counter. He received a bad jolt early in the game that caused him to leave the ice for ten minutes for repairs, but he came back stronger than ever, and tore through the second half at top speed, doing an immense amount of useful work in checking back as well as in carrying the puck. Heffernan used his body to advantage in checking and stopped innumerable rushes, while his counter-dashes kept the Kingston defence on the jump. Reynolds worked hard all through, and made some pretty rushes. The only fault with the work of the Peterborough defence was that they made the mistake of both going after the man with the rubber, leaving his team-mates uncovered and several goals were scored on passes to a Kingston forward who was free from interference. All the forwards worked hard, plugging away throughout, although the going was pretty fast. Anderson made his debut in O. H. A. hockey and was handed a difficult task, that of looking after Milan, the fastest man on the Kingston line-up. In spite of that Handicap the youngster showed up well and in the last half was especially prominent. Matthews and Hall worked without a let-up, the former, especially, doing a lot of effective back-checking which was of great assistance to his defence.

Harvey Sproule of Toronto, handled the game satisfactorily. It was clean in spite of the fast pace and the penalties were for minor offences. The teams were as follows:

KINGSTON.

	Marchand
	Davidson
	McCammon
	Brouse
Boyer	Hunt	Milan
Matthews	Hall	Anderson
	Coughlin
	Heffernan
	Reynolds
	Patterson

PETERBOROUGH

The Grillers held their own with the famous visitors for the first few minutes of play and the way the locals started out caused Jim Sutherland a few moments anxiety. The Petes went at the visitors at top speed and the play was very even at the go-in. Both teams had chances to score right off the reel, but Patterson and Marchand each pulled off startling stops. Anderson was benched for tripping and had hardly got back on the ice before Hall was sent to the fence for dumping Brouse. The odd-man advantage, however, did not allow Kingston to score and the Grillers were having about as much of the play as the Frontenacs. Heffernan nearly got through on a pretty rush and Coughlin tore through with another that looked like a score. The rover was going at a great clip and a moment later when he was knocked out with a heavy check and had to retire, his absence was severely felt. Boyer was dropped to even up and the game went on. Matthews lost a beautiful chance to score when he shot wide after taking a pass in the mouth of the nets. Davidson was penalized for bodying a moment later Patterson made a splendid save of a shot from close in by Brouse. Hall missed a chance from close in and was almost immediately ruled off for hooking. The play was still even with both teams going at a furious clip. Coughlin and Boyer came back at this stage and Hall, who had returned to the ice was banished for the same offence. Patterson and Marchand distinguished themselves by two magnificent stops of shots after their defences had been beaten. Anderson was hurt and there was delay. When play was resumed Milan scored for Kingston on a nice shot from the side after fifteen minutes' playing. Frontenacs 1, Peterborough 0. Peterborough came back at the visitors undismayed. Coughlin rushed nicely and shot and the goal umpire, Jimmy McMartin, raised the flag to signify that the shot had scored. Referee Sproule over-ruled the decision, but the Petes stopped up when they saw the flag and the Frontenacs went down and scored their second goal, Hunt doing the scoring. The Petes forwards thought they had scored and did not check back on the play at all. Frontenacs 2, Peterborough 0.

Jerry Coughlin carried the rubber from behind his own goal, through the whole Frontenac team, but his shot was blocked. The Kingston forwards were coming in fast and the visitors were having the better of the play. Their next goal was a fluky one, however, a long shot by Brouse from a scrimmage, near the boards, rolling into the nets through a tangle of skates and sticks. Frontenacs 3, Peterborough 0.

Boyer was penalized and still the visitors pressed. Patterson went out and saved one goal, when the Frontenacs were right through, but the relief was only temporary, as Hunt

Half time was called a moment afterwards on a neat pass from the wing. Frontenacs 4, Peterborough 0.

A grand piece of combination. Brouse to Hunt to Milan, was responsible for a speedy counter for the visitors, who carried the rubber right in for a score. Frontenacs 5, Peterborough 0.

Peterborough rallied again and Hall hit the post from a yard out after a neat combination rush. Finally Matthews secured at centre, and made a nice individual rush, beating Marchand with a scoop shot as Davidson bodied him. Frontenacs 5, Peterborough 1.

Halft-time was called a moment later.

The first few moments of the second half were featured by a pretty rush by Reynolds, who carried the rubber the length of the rink, only to have Marchand pick off his shot from the side. Davidson retaliated with a beautiful rush, which culminated in a goal following a neat pass to Hunt. Frontenacs 6, Peterborough 1.

Brouse received a bad cut over the nose and had to retire, Matthews who broke his skate at the same time going off with him. Heffernan stopped Davidson in one of his rushes with a body check, but got the worst of the collision. Boyer was penalized for tripping. Matthews came back and Anderson was sent off until Brouse was able to resume, the two getting into the game again in a few moments. Coughlin got the rubber at centre and carried it through the visitors' defence on a dazzling rush, going right in on top of Marchand and scoring easily. Frontenacs 6, Peterborough 2.

The visitors were not long in getting this back. Hunt and Milan broke away from the face-off and the little left wing caged the rubber behind Patterson in 30 seconds. Frontenacs 7, Peterborough 2.

McCammon, the lanky cover-point of the Frontenacs, secured the next goal on an end-to-end rush, working his way up all alone and scoring with a pretty shot. Frontenacs 8, Peterborough 2.

Coughlin went down the side alone and beat Marchand with a beautiful drive into the top of the nets, which the Kingston goaler never had a chance to stop. Frontenacs 8, Peterborough 3.

Coughlin was hurt again and there was a short delay until he recovered. Milan was penalized for slashing and Hall followed for hooking Brouse. Peterborough scored the next counter Coughlin being once more responsible. The Grillers rover secured at centre and fooled the Kingston team with a beautiful exhibition of stick-handling, winding up by passing one into the corner of the nets. Frontenacs 8, Peterborough 4.

Hall was benched again and Davidson was penalized for bodying Reynolds, but while he was off Milan made it 9 to 4 on a pretty individual rush. Boyer added another on a combination jaunt and Brouse ended up the scoring. Patterson went out and fell in making a beautiful stop of a shot from Hunt and the rubber rolled over to Brouse who slammed it into the empty net. Frontenacs 11, Peterborough 4.

The visitors thus have a lead of 7 goals on the round. The return game will be played in Kingston on Friday night.

The summary follows:

1—Kingston, Milan.
2—Kingston, Hunt.
3—Kingston, Brouse.
4—Kingston, Hunt.
5—Kingston, Milan.
6—Peterborough, Matthews.

Could Not Rest at Night.

Back Was So Weak.

Weak, lame and aching backs are the primary cause of kidney trouble. When the back aches or becomes weak it is a warning from the kidneys that everything is not right with them.

Heed the warning: cure the weak, lame, aching back and dispose of any chances of further trouble.

If you don't do this, serious complications are very apt to arise and the first thing you know you will be troubled with Dropsy, Diabetes or Bright's Disease, the three most deadly forms of Kidney Trouble.

On the first sign of anything wrong Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken. They go to the seat of the trouble and strengthen the kidneys, thereby strengthening the back.

Mrs. John Puigh, Parkdale, Man., writes:—"I have used Doan's Kidney Pills and find nothing to beat them. I could not rest at night my back was so weak. I tried everything, but could not get anything to do me any good until I was told by a friend to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I tried them, and I am not the same weak woman I was before. I am very thankful to have found so speedy a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

WHY DAN McGEE GIVES ADVICE

Dodd's Kidney Pills Quickly Cured His Backache and Lumbago

James River, Antigonish Co., N.S., Feb. 7.—(Special.) — Suffering from Backache, with eyes puffed and swollen, and occasional attacks of Lumbago helping to make his life miserable, Dan McGee, a well known resident of this place, turned to Dodd's Kidney Pills and is to-day a strong, healthy man once more. It is hardly to be wondered at that he says:

"I advise all persons suffering with Backache or Lumbago to use Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Mr. McGee realized from his symptoms that Kidney Disease was claiming him for his own. For two months he waited, like many another, for it to go away of its own accord. It didn't go. It simply got worse. Then he turned to the natural cure, Dodd's Kidney Pills, and the disease, vanished because it had to. No case of Kidney Disease can stand before Dodd's Kidney Pills. They always cure.

Rheumatism, Lumbago, Dropsy, Diabetes and Bright's Disease are some of the deadly results of diseased Kidneys. You can safeguard your self against any or all of them by using Dodd's Kidney Pills.

ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY MEETING

The regular meeting of the Peterborough centre of the Royal Astronomical Society held last evening in the chemical room of the Collegiate Institute was not largely attended, but was a most interesting and profitable session. In the absence of the president, Mr. H. B. Collier, Mr. T. A. S. Hay took the chair After the reading of the minutes Mr. R. A. Logan, 14 Murray street was added to the membership on motion of Mr. H. O. Fiske seconded by Rev. Dr. Marsh.

Mr. Fiske reoprted observations made with the Stratton telescope. The members are realizing more fully as time goes on the value of the new instrument.

Mr. J. R. Collins, of Toronto, general secretary of the Royal Astronomical Society, gave a most interesting lecture on "Our World in Space," making references to its physical features and the laws which govern it, showing that while our earth is a small body in comparison to the mighty orbs that sweep through stellar space, yet it plays an important part as one of the Sun's family. The lecture was made lucid by a number of slides thrown on the screen by a lantern ably manipulated by Mr. Fiske.

At the close Rev. Dr. Marsh moved a vote of thanks to the lecturer, speaking of the high qualifications of Mr. Collins as a scientist. He referred to some new discoveries in astronomical optics by Mr. Collins taking the form of a telescope 4 ft. long with an objective of eight inches and a focus of 35 feet. The lenses are refracting but are so arranged as to give the same result as a reflecting telescope. Mr. Collins had also succeeded in employing the same device in microscopes, greatly increasing the power, and also increasing the depth of focus. The motion was seconded by Mr. Thos. Elliott. Mr. Collins made a neat reply.

Mr. MacIntosh says:—"At the hospital I was kept masked night and day for five days. At the end of that time the burns were still very bad and the doctors would not hear of my returning to work. I knew if I could only get some Zam-Buk for the burns I would be back at work in quick time, because I had previously used the balm and knew what it would do.

At last I left the hospital and went straight to a local store and bought some Zam-Buk. At the hotel I applied a Zam-Buk dressing and this cooled the burning pains and gave me quick relief. I kept on with the Zam-Buk treatment and returned to work. Within just one week after first commencing with the Zam-Buk treatment I might have defied anybody to detect where the burns had been, so splendidly did Zam-Buk heal the injury."

ADMITS HIS ERROR

Engineer Takes the Blame for the Drumbo Wreck—Says He Had Trouble With Engine

INQUEST HELD

Stratford, Feb. 9.—After a three hours' session at Princeton yesterday, the coroner's jury, empaneled to enquire into the cause of the Grand Trunk wreck near Richwood on Saturday night last, returned a verdict fixing the responsibility for the wreck on Conductor William Meecham and Engineer Robert Earith. The verdict was returned at six o'clock. It said: "The jury is unanimous that Conductor William Meecham and Engineer Robert Earith, in charge of engine 629, were responsible for the wreck, in colliding with the regular train, No. 39, which caused the death of Peter McFarlane and others."

The jury heard the story of a terrible omission from Robert Earith, the engineer who was carried into Princeton from a farm house near the scene of the wreck, in order to give his testimony. Earith admitted to Coroner Staples that he had forgotten all about the passenger train when he passed through Drumbo, and evidently his conductor had also forgotten, as they did not exchange a word from Tavistock down.

The inquest was held in the Stroud Hotel, where the famous Benwell inquest was held, and a big throng of people gathered. Representing the Grand Trunk Railway Co. were two solicitors, Messrs. Foster and Platt of Montreal, Assistant Supt. Bowker and Trainmaster Forrester. The solicitors merely watched the proceedings. There was no one present representing the crown interests. R. N. Ball, crown attorney for Oxford, was to have been present, but failed, it is said owing to the county not meeting his expenses, outside of the usual fee. Coroner Staples conducted the examination of the witnesses.

Earith said he knew the timetable of the train in question. When he left Stratford he thought he had time enough to reach Paris Junction five minutes clear of the passenger, as provided by the rules.

Earith said he was thoroughly familiar with the rules, as they had been read by Trainmaster Forrester to the jury. These rules provided for the priority of trains of first, second and third class, the trains of superior class having the right of way. The rules provided that in case of single track, the inferior train should take to a siding. This was an absolute duty, not dependent on any despatcher's orders. The rules also held conductors and enginemen equally responsible for the safety of their trains.

The order received by Meecham and Earith from the despatcher at Stratford was as follows: "Run as extra from Stratford to Paris Junction," the rules providing as to how an extra should be run.

Engineer Earith said that his engine, which was a new one, gave him a lot of trouble coming down, the cylinders blowing open and requiring him to stop. The engine lost time, and as the troubles bothered the engineer, he forgot all about the passenger train and the human life on board. Had his engine been in perfect order, he would have made Paris Junction before there was the possibility of an accident.

When, however, he saw the approach of the opposing engine, he first applied the emergency brakes and reversed the engine, giving one sharp, one long and six short whistles, all as different danger signals. By that time the crash was imminent, and he believed his engine was backing up from the passenger train. He yelled to his fireman to jump, and jumped himself, just in time.

When the verdict was returned Coroner Staples stated that he would immediately report the same to the crown authorities at Woodstock. Warrants for the arrest of Earith and Meecham will likely be made out. Earith is unable to be removed at present.

As to the report of Conductor Meecham being overworked, Trainmaster Forrester submitted a statement of hours on and off duty by Meecham from Jan. 28 to Feb. 4. It showed an average of nearly 14 hours off duty. Engineer Earith denied the report that he was overworked. The company had made every effort to locate Meecham for the inquest, but had failed to do so.

ENDS INDIGESTION IN A FEW MOMENTS

Gas, Heartburn, Headache and All Misery in Stomach Vanishes

Nothing will remain undigested or sour on your stomach if you will take a little Diapepsin occasionally. This powerful digestive and antacid, though as harmless and pleasant as candy, will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all the food you can eat.

Eat what your stomach craves, without the slightest fear of Indigestion or that you will be bothered with sour risings, Belching, Gas on Stomach, Heartburn, Headaches from stomach, Nausea, Bad Breath, Water Brash or a feeling like you had swallowed a lump of lead, or other disagreeable miseries. Should you be suffering now from any stomach disorder you can get relief within five minutes.

If you will get from your pharmacist a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin you could always go to the table with a hearty appetite, and your meals would taste good, because you would know there would be no Indigestion or Sleepless nights or Headache or Stomach misery all the next day; and, besides, you would not need laxatives or liver pills to keep your stomach and bowels clean and fresh.

Pape's Diapepsin can be obtained from your druggist, and contains more than sufficient to thoroughly cure the worst case of Indigestion or Dyspepsia. There is nothing better for Gas on the Stomach or sour odours from the stomach or to cure a Stomach Headache.

You couldn't keep a handier or more useful article in the house.

Family In Suicide Pact.

New York, Feb. 9.—Rather than let their children starve to death because their father was penniless and out of employment, Frank Barnard, formerly a trainer for the 23rd Regiment in Brooklyn, entered into a suicide pact with his wife, Mamie, by which they killed their two little ones by gas and at the same time ended their own lives.

The four bodies were found yesterday lying on a bed in the scantily furnished apartment which they had occupied on the third floor of 750 Fulton street, Brooklyn. The bodies of the children were between those of the parents. The husband left a brief note stating that poverty prompted him and his wife to enter into the pact.

Persons living in the Fulton street building smelled gas yesterday. At the same time it was noted that nothing had been seen of the Barnards. The children, George four years old, and Daniel two, usually were heard playing about in the apartment. Getting no response to knocks, the neighbors summoned a policeman and he discovered the tragedy.

To Consider Graft Charges.

Toronto, Feb. 9.—Sir James Whitney stated yesterday afternoon that the Ontario Government expected to take up and consider the report received on Monday from Judge Snider, upon the investigation into the charges of graft in North Oxford.

The Prime Minister stated that owing to the pressure of public business he had personally not had time to read the judge's review of the investigation himself.

The question whether the report will be made public before the formal presentation to the House will be decided to-day if the report is, as expected by the Premier, at the forenoon Cabinet Council.

German Spies In Bermuda.

New York, Feb. 9.—A cable from Hamilton, Bermuda, says: The German scare has extended to Bermuda. It synchronized this week with the arrival from the West Indies of the German cruiser Hansa. There was much firing of cannon and official visits were paid and returned.

An unfortunate termination to the festivities was brought about by the fact that certain of the crew were detected in an endeavor to obtain photographic views of the fortifications and approaches of the navy yard, and the situation of lights and bearings.

Wet and Dry Hotelmen.

Brockville, Feb. 9.—T. E. Connor, proprietor of the Nevens' House, Jasper, has purchased the Fitzgerald Hotel there, and will conduct them both. The Nevens' House is in Wolford Township, which carried local option, and in consequence, after May 1 the hostelry will be deprived of a license. The Fitzgerald House, which is directly across the street, is in Kitley, which is not a "dry" township, and Connor will hold the unique position of being proprietor of two hotels in the one place, one of which will be a local option house, and the other will not.

A Fatal Stairway.

Guelph, Feb. 9.—At the inquest held Monday evening to enquire into the cause of the death of Richard Porter, who was found lying in a dying condition at the foot of the stairs leading to the lavatory of the Victoria Hotel, the jury found that death was caused by a hemorrhage, but were unable to state whether this was caused by the fall or superinduced by it. As this was not the first fall down this stairway the jury called the attention of the proprietor to its dangerous condition.

Feet and Hands Frozen.

Shelburne, Feb. 9.—A boy from Dr. Barnardo's Home, Peter street, Toronto, had a trying experience from Thursday until Sunday last, during which time he lay buried in the straw mow in Thomas Murphey's barn, a Melancthian farmer, just west of here. His feet and hands were terribly frozen.

NEW LABOUR MEASURES

Yesterday in the Legislature—Donovan's Bill for the Alteration of Municipal Elections Comes Up

OTHER MEASURES

Toronto, Feb. 9.—Sir James Whitney introduced three bills at the Ontario Legislature yesterday afternoon, two of especial interest to labor organizations. The Prime Minister has given the question of accidents caused by defective scaffolding personal attention, and while in England last summer was a close observer of the methods for the protection of workmen.

One of his bills yesterday related to the protection of scaffolding. Sir James stated that after its second reading it would go to a special committee, before which employes and labor bodies will have an opportunity to discuss its provisions.

The other bill, which will be welcomed by labor organizations, moved by the Premier, provides that in future all laundries, including those run by Chinese, shall be open to inspection by the regular Factory Act inspectors.

W. H. Hoyle's bill to amend the Voters' Lists Act, gave rise to animated discussion. It contains two clauses. The first clause appeared to meet with approval. It provides that "the clerk shall forthwith, after posting up the list of appeals, deliver or transmit by post by registered letter, one copy of the list to each of the persons described in section 2," i.e., the official persons to whom ten copies of the voters' lists have to be sent.

The second clause was designed to change the word "may" to "shall" in the present law with respect to the reception of affidavits respecting appeals to be placed on the voters' list.

Hon. A. G. MacKay, Opposition leader, spoke favorably, stating that at present some judges accepted such affidavits as evidence, while others refused.

Sir James Whitney pronounced himself firmly opposed to the proposal as one which would compel a judge to accept as evidence affidavits made up by possibly unknown persons, and which, as evidence were utterly worthless.

Hon. W. J. Hanna said that in his constituency, in consequence of arrangement between the political parties, the judge accepted affidavits, while personally opposed to doing so. There was possibly a middle course which could be worked with in committee.

On that understanding the Government assented to the second reading, and a reference of the bill to the municipal committee.

A. Studholme, East Hamilton, moved the second reading of his bill to amend the Municipal Act. He stated that the bill expressed the views of the City Council of Hamilton, but its clause to have controllers hold office for two years, two retiring annually did not meet with his approval.

The bill also provides for elections of city councils and boards of education on New Year's Day in cities of 50,000 and over.

Mr. Studholme said that when outlying districts were added to a city, it was often found that the streets were mapped out in an irregular manner. "For this reason the bill provides that no plan of any survey or sub-division of any land, situated within two miles of the limits of any city having a population of 50,000 or over, shall be registered until such plan shall have been approved by the council of such city.

In the event of the said council not approving within 15 days after a copy thereof has been served on the clerk of said city, the judge of the county court, in the county in which said lands are situated, may, after notice to the council of the said city, make an order allowing the said plan to be filed.

The proposal of A. E. Donovan of Brockville to amend the Municipal Act to change the date of municipal elections from New Year's Day to the third Monday in January, was given its second reading and went to the municipal committee.

Mr. Donovan said he had written to 75 mayors and 67 reeves, and 98 per cent. were favorable. Also he had received letters from nine premiers of other Canadian provinces and all had replied that the proposal was a sound one.

Premier Whitney said the idea was good, but Mr. Donovan was wrong as to the time. If a change were to be made, December would be better than January. There was no time of the year as undesirable as the time proposed. However, the Government was not going to take sides as a Government at all.

C. A. Browser, East Elgin, introduced a bill to amend the Public Schools Act. The bill has but one clause, which reads:

"The school year should consist of two terms, the first of which shall begin on the first day of September and shall end on the 22nd of December, and the second of which shall begin on the 3rd of January and end on the 29th of June."

Hon. Dr. Pyne introduced the private bill of the Chartered Stenographers Association.

R. T. Shillington, Temiskaming, introduced the private bill for the Town of Cobalt, and G. W. Neely, East Middlesex, that for the Town of Petrolea.

CAN DO NOTHING.

Canada Getting Free From Bounties. Says Hon. Mr. Fielding.

Ottawa, Feb. 9.—Hon. W. S. Fielding, in replying to the demands of a deputation from Morrisburg, asking for a bounty on sheet steel, did not hold out very much encouragement that steel bounties will be renewed in any form. He said that, while the request would receive the serious consideration of himself and his colleagues he could not give any definite reply at the present time.

"You come to us," he said, "at a time when we are not anxious to extend our bounties, but are rather engaged in a noble effort to get rid of them." He went on to say that some of the iron and steel bounties had already expired, and that the majority of the members of the House were disposed to be hostile to the idea of the Government giving bounties of any kind. He added that the Government would not grant a bounty on goods for export. Should Canada do so the United States would immediately place a counterveiling duty on such products going into that country. The Government in the past had been obliged to decline to grant increased protection to the sheet steel industry because its product was the raw material of other manufacturers.

What the deputation asked was for a bounty of not less than five dollars a ton on sheet steel made in Canada, in view of the fact that the duty of five per cent. will be removed by the reciprocal agreement recently arrived at between Canada and the United States. It was pointed out by the members of the deputation who were introduced by Andrew Broder, M.P. for Dundas, that it was the aim of the town to establish a group of industries whose raw material is sheet steel. If a bounty were granted for five years the desired result would be attained.

Girl's Strange Disappearance.

Berlin, Feb. 9.—One of the strangest disappearance cases with which the German police have had to deal in many years has them completely baffled to-day. It is that involving the disappearance of Miss Margaret Damm, a young musical student from Omaha, Neb., who has been mysteriously missing since Jan. 24. Some of her friends believe that she has committed suicide, but as her body has not been found, the authorities are inclined to doubt this.

When Miss Damm left her lodgings on Jan. 24, she informed her landlady that she was going to Westphalia to visit her father, who was staying there then. However, she told different stories to various persons as to destination. Her last words to her landlady upon leaving her lodgings were: "I will write to you and the letter that you receive will astonish you."

Miss Damm was 26 years old, tall, pretty and of striking stature. While her father spent most of his time in Western Germany the rest of the family reside in Omaha.

Australia Alarmed.

Victoria, B.C., Feb. 9.—Advices were brought by the steamer Zealandia that much excitement was occasioned in Australia and New Zealand by the report that arrangements had been made by the French Nickle Mining Companies in New Caledonia, to bring 5,000 Japanese to the South Pacific Islands.

Mr. Fisher, Premier of Australia, in an interview, said the arrival of thousands of Japanese at Noumea was a matter of grave importance to Australia, owing to the danger of New Caledonia being made an intermediate settling ground for hordes of Japanese with Australia as the final destination.

Noumea correspondents state that the arrival of the first ship load of Japanese is causing disturbances. The bringing of the Japanese was arranged in France.

Think Government Should Pay.

Kingston, Feb. 9.—Portsmouth Village Council has had to pay for registration of deaths at Rockwood Asylum and the penitentiary. Council believes this expense should be met by the Government, and will petition the Government to do so. Last year there were seven deaths at the penitentiary and 49 at Rockwood.

THE LONG SAULT

Opposition Tries to Revive Discussion of the Dam as There is a Rompus in Committee

"LIAR" WAS USED

Ottawa, Feb. 9.—When the House of Commons is in need of a subject the Long Sault power development scheme is revived. The Opposition held a post-mortem discussion on the matter yesterday, and the House did not reach the orders of the day until seven minutes before adjournment. The intention was to give the Verville eight-hour bill its third reading, but as it was only referred to for a moment, the psychological moment has probably passed, and it is unlikely that the bill will be reached again this session.

Mr. Borden precipitated the discussion by moving for a copy of all correspondence and documents dealing with the proposed damming of the St. Lawrence at the Long Sault Rapids. He referred to the proceedings at Washington Tuesday, and was grateful that the United States Congress had "saved Canada from itself," but he did not think that the interests promoting the measure would be satisfied with this reverse.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier expressed himself as happy to comply with the request, promising to bring down full information from the time of the Ashburton treaty until the present.

The Opposition speakers would not let the matter rest there, and Dr. Sproule claimed that the defeat of the bill in Washington was the result of the "stand we took here."

Mr. Foster thought the Minister of Justice had given Canada's case away.

Dr. Reid (Grenville) was fearful because the corporation had threatened to spend $2,000,000 to put the legislation through.

Mr. Borden argued that it was better to have all the papers in the case brought before Parliament in the event of the proposal being renewed in the United States or in the Canadian Parliament. He said that he would not care to associate himself with the view expressed by Sir Alan Aylesworth in the House last Thursday, that if the works on the United States side of the international boundary did not raise the level of the water in Canadian territory, the Dominion would have no grounds for a protest. Under the provisions of the Ashburton treaty the position of Canada was well defined. The channels in question were to remain open to navigation of both countries forever. He took this occasion to protest against the view of Sir Alan Aylesworth.

Sir Alan Aylesworth said, from the standpoint of international rights, supposing there were no treaties, Canada would have no right to object to the damming of the southern channels. This was what was meant by his statement last Thursday. According to the treaties, navigation reigned supreme, and everything that interfered with navigation could not go. If navigation were not interfered with, under the existing treaty, Canada had no cause for complaint.

Mr. Doherty (St. Anne's) said that the channel could not be free and open if it was to be obstructed. It was an extraordinary position on the part of the Government charged with the protection of the interests of the country. The Congress of the United States appeared to be more careful of Canadian interests than the Canadian Government.

A sensational episode, which came on the verge of turning the proceedings of the public accounts committee into an unseemly riot, took place yesterday, and a scene of disorder followed of an unparalleled nature. Mr. Crocket of York, who has been camping on Mr. Pugsley's trail all the session, had concluded his examination of Geoffrey Stead, the resident engineer of the department at Chatham, N.B., over the unauthorized dredging at Dalhousie, and the committee was on the point of breaking up when F. B. Carvell got into a heated wordy argument with Mr. Crocket and wound up by deliberately calling his fellow member a liar.

At once there was an appeal to the chair, but in the excited hubbub nothing could be distinguished for a moment except the violent gesticulations of a number of angry men shouting at the tops of their voices.

During the melee A. B. Crosby of Halifax and Mr. MacKenzie, the former North Sydney judge, got into such a serious argument that Mr. Crosby threatened to thrash the former member of the judiciary for an alleged offensive expression. A personal encounter was imminent, when some of the cooler heads stepped in between the would-be belligerents and prevented the exchange of anything more serious than verbal blows.

When comparative quiet was restored, ex-Judge Warburton, the chairman, ordered Mr. Carvell to withdraw the offensive word "liar," which Mr. Carvell did, declaring he did so with mental reservation, and the excited crowd thronged out of the room after one of the most tempestuous scenes in the history of this committee.

A Rough Passage.

Halifax, Feb. 9.—"The worst experience I ever had in crossing the North Atlantic." This was the remark of the veteran Captain Rennie of the Allan Liner Corinthian, which got into port yesterday afternoon from Glasgow via Liverpool. The steamer lost one of the boats and a steward had his knee dislocated when thrown down by a sudden lurch of the ship

The Care Of The E-Y--E--S

A person in good health, at the age of 45 years, will ordinarily notice a change in the sight, requiring more effort to read fine print, or to see small objects.

It would then be advisable to have the eyes examined by a Competent Eyesight Specialist and fitted with "Preserving or Rest Glasses".

This would give great comfort and prevent eye-strain, which is the cause of much trouble in after years.

Glasses should be changed usually once in two years.

Headaches are often warnings that the eyes need help and they should not be neglected.

The Eyes are the most important organs of the five senses, and generally the most abused.

Many Eyes Are Ruined by wearing cheap and imperfect glasses.

OPERATIONS AVOIDED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Belleriver, Que. — "Without Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I would not be alive. For five months I had painful and irregular periods and inflammation of the uterus. I suffered like a martyr and thought often of death. I consulted two doctors who could do nothing for me. I went to a hospital, and the best doctors said I must submit to an operation, because I had a tumor. I went back home much discouraged. One of my cousins advised me to take your Compound, as it had cured her. I did so and soon commenced to feel better, and my appetite came back with the first bottle. Now I feel no pain and am cured. Your remedy is deserving of praise." — Mrs. EMMA CHATEL, Valleyfield, Belleriver, Quebec.

Another Operation Avoided.

Poughkeepsie, N.Y.—I run a sewing machine in a large factory and got all run down. I had to give up work for I could not stand the pains in my back. The doctor said I needed an operation for womb trouble but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did more for me than the doctors did. I have gained five pounds. I hope that everyone who is suffering from female trouble, nervousness and backache will take the Compound. I owe my thanks to Mrs. Pinkham. She is the working girl's friend for health, and all women who suffer should write to her and take her advice.—Miss TILLIE PLENZIG, 3 Jay St., Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

Thirty years of unparalleled success confirms the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to cure female diseases.

RECORD RAINFALLS

The Past Year in Great Britain Goes Down to Posterity as One of the Wettest of Seasons

The autumn and winter of 1910 seem to have gone down to posterity as record wet seasons. Not since the days when Noah gathered them in two by two has there been so much wrath directed against the Clerk of the Weather. And not without reason. The average rainfall for the last twenty-five years, for the last three months of the year has been 8.44 inches. The average had been exceeded in 1910 when December was a fortnight old. During the thirteen weeks ending December 13th, 1909, there were 301 hours of sunshine and but 3½ inches of rain. Last year for a similiar period there were 8¼ inches of rain and but 227 hours of sunshine; and for three weeks of that period "King Sol" shone for four an a half hours only.

The significance of an inch of rain may be gathered from the fact that it is equal to 100 tons of water for every acre, or 64,000 tons for every square mile. From the beginning of October to the middle of December about 8 inches of rain had fallen in the Thames Valley, which meant that the Thames in just over two months had to negotiate a downfall of water equal to 1,951,744,000 tons, which would fill a channel 8,000 miles long, 10 feet deep, and 250 feet wide. The Thames Valley covers an area of 3,812 square miles, so that a fall of one inch over the whole valley is equal to 243,968,000 tons of water, which has been calculated to equal a river 10 feet deep, 250 feet wide, and 1,000 miles long. It is computed that the weight of rain that falls in the Old Country in the course of a year averages 3,000 tons to every acre, and, as there are 77,143,938 acres in the United Kingdom, this computation shows us that 231,431,814,000 tons of rain fall on its surface in the course of twelve months.

One of the heaviest rainfalls yet recorded in the British Isles was 2.24 inches in 40 minutes in Forfarshire, during a severe thunderstorm on June 18th, 1887. On August 1st, 1846, 3.12 inches fell in 3 hours, 17 minutes at Camberwell, London. Of heavy falls during one day the following might be mentioned: Ben Nevis Observatory, 7.29 inches, on October 3rd, 1890; Newport, Wales, 5.38 inches, July 14th, 1875; and Camusinas, Argyllshire, 5.60 inches, January 24th, 1868.

AN IRON ISLE

Discovery of Ore on Sassay, an Island Near Skye

A new mining centre may be opened up as a result of the discovery of iron ore in the little island of Rassay, which lies between Skye and the mainland of Scotland. The island covers an area of about twenty-eight square miles. The investigations, it is said, have been so satisfactory that a Scotch steel firm has secured an option for the purchase of the entire island. It is believed that recent developments have been considered sufficiently important to justify the erection of blast furnaces for the smelting of ore. The discovery may mean extensive employment for the inhabitants of Rassay, the adjoining isle of Skye, and the mainland of Ross-shire. Skilled labor will be in demand, but a certain proportion of unskilled labor will also be required.

SOLDIER AND SCULPTOR

Adrian Jones Understands a Horse From Tail Tip to Nostril

It is said of Captain Adrian Jones, who has designed the four-horse war chariot, weighing upwards of thirty tons, which is to be erected in London as a memorial to "Peace," that he is probably the only living sculptor who understands a horse from tail-tip to nostril. As a boy he loved and studied horses, and would have liked to become an artist, but his father had other plans, and he entered the Army. He saw much active service, and was then advised to become a sculptor, having devoted most of his spare time when in the Army to painting and sculpture.

ONE MAN, SEVENTEEN VOTES

What a champion pluralist was the Rev. Washbourne West, a late Senior Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, who in 1892, at the age of eighty, recorded seventeen votes in different parts of the country and still left half-a-dozen unused. A hundred and twenty votes in four years was Mr. West's achievement; and very proud he was of it, as he more than once told his friends. His only regret was that he could not live to make it two centuries. He recorded eight of his 1892 votes in two consecutive days at places as far apart as Sevenoaks and Mid-Oxford. But this feat was beaten by the seventy-year-old Mr. W. J. Haywood, of Herne Hill, who, at a recent election actually voted in six county constituencies in one day, covering something like 250 miles in his motor-car.

A TRAGIC SIGHT

Mr. Asquith in speaking recently in Edinburgh said. "One of the most tragic sights in our town life is that of a boy sitting in the tail-end of a van reading some trashy story, rapidly graduating, as soon as his present precarious and short-lived occupation comes to an end, for a place in the unemployable. For years past this has been the darkest blot and the most fatal gap in our educational system."

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

A "LETTER to the Editor" which appeared the other day in a New York paper, interested me immensely because of a certain very common feminine foible which it shows up most excellently.

"During the last ten months," writes the sufferer, "I have been through a regular domestic 'hell' with no less than fourteen women house-workers. To my several advertisements I had over 700 replies. Of those selected, two proved to be drunkards, three were utterly incompetent as workers, two discharged themselves by remaining out overnight, one admitted strange men to the house at 2 o'clock in the morning, and three left before their first week was out without giving either reason, notice or explanation; one proved to be subject to intermittent insanity; one was a runaway wife whose husband came to seek her, accompanied by a lawyer and a little child; one simply flatly refused to get up in the morning until half an hour after the breakfast hour, and still another was an incorrigible liar and thief."

The "common feminine foible" which you may be looking for is in the next paragraph of the sufferer's plaint.

"The most exasperating part of it is that one and all of these failures came with seemingly first-class references from former employers and personal sponsors."

Isn't it a queer quirk of mind which permits otherwise conscientious and self-respecting women to do this sort of thing.

I wonder just how they can bring themselves to do it?

Perhaps, because they find it's the only peaceable way to get rid of the discharged employe.

Perhaps they feel like Agnes Repplier, the well-known essayist and traveler, who, in her delightful fashion, tells of strewing recommendations of undesirable guides 'broadcast over the earth to be a delusion and a snare to my fellow men," and naively explains her conduct by saying, "It never occurred to me that anyone would regard them seriously, until an acquaintance informed me with some asperity that he had employed a guide on my recommendation and had been cheated by him."

Most likely of all, they do it because they are sorry for the girl and just don't think far enough ahead to be sorry for the mistress they are foisting her upon.

To needlessly tattle to a prospective employer about a maid's small faults, such as inability to iron very well, or imperfection at cooking, is rather unkind.

To condemn a girl and give her a poor reference merely on suspicion is unfair.

To refuse to give a desirable girl a reference merely from irritation with her comes very near being criminal.

But to go to the other extreme and deliberately send out a girl whom you know to be a liar, a thief or a drunkard or in some way untrustworthy, with a character that glosses over any of these charming little habits, seems to me to be just as unkind and unfair and near-criminal on the other side of the fence.

By Wm. Johnston and Paul West

CHAPTER TWELVE

The Ice-Pond Excitement

It is against the rules of the Telegraph Company for its agents to divulge the contents of any telegram that comes over the lines. Detective Sullivan, however, had an ingratiating way with him, and the operator at Graydon was soon convinced that it would be best for him to show him the message that had come to Professor Gordon and caused his hasty departure from town.

On reading the telegram Sullivan was astonished. Here was a complication that he had not expected. A girl, running away from her affianced husband with another man, telegraphing to the deserted man for him to come to her assistance! It was a staggering situation.

"But," said the detective to himself, "what sort of trouble do you suppose she's got into? Is it possible that old Hopkins has become panic stricken and deserted her? Hardly so soon as this? What can it be? And who is 'H' that she doesn't want Gordon to tell about it? I'll swear this case is getting too complicated to suit me!"

Immediately he telegraphed to his Boston office:

"Watch South Terminal for handsome blonde young woman and man looking like college professor. Follow them if spotted. Am taking next train to Boston. Hopkins case most difficult."

There would not be another train until late in the afternoon, but Sullivan applied the knowledge of trolley connection which he had gleaned that morning, and hurried to the livery stable, where he engaged a rig and a driver to take him over to the nearest town, a matter of only two miles, where he could get a trolley that would bring him within reach of a railroad. He gave the driver a story to the effect that he must get back to Boston to see about some important book business, and promised the young man that on his return he would bring him something to read.

Before departing he took the precaution of coaching the now completely perplexed Dean in the way to handle this latest phase of the situation.

"Tell 'em Gordon has gone to Boston with your permission," said Sullivan. "Don't let 'em think he's vanished, too. It would be bound to get around and the papers would have it. Keep it mum; let them think all they please, but don't let on that you know all about it. And watch Snyder and his crowd! I'll be back to-morrow, perhaps to-night. Maybe I'll have Hopkins with me."

The Dean followed these instructions, but, as his pretended acquiescence in Professor Gordon's departure did not seem to entirely satisfy the curiosity of the college, he addressed the students in a body, cautioning them against talking of the distressful affairs of the last two days and assuring them that it would all come out right.

"There is an unfortunate mistake somewhere," he said. "A series of peculiar and apparently inexplicable coincidences, which will, however, be all explained satisfactorily before long. In the meantime, I pray you, stem the tide of gossip, stifle curiosity and hope for the best. It is for the good of Graydon!"

The Dean's little speech did much to better the situation, and the loyal students made an earnest effort to believe and make others believe that the disappearance of Professor Hopkins, Ernesta Frost and Professor Gordon, all within a few hours of each other, was a matter of no great mystery.

It was a frightened, trembling trio however, that met in Rice's classroom at the lunch hour. Rice evinced the manner of a mathematician who had met an unsolvable problem. Snyder, in manner and thinking capacity, had reached the consistency of a jelly fish. Fischer was palsied.

"Gordon gone!" was the burden of their thoughts. "Gone! Fled! Why?"

He received a telephone call. I am told," said Rice, "and instantly put on his hat and vanished. He must have taken the train. Who could have called him? What did they say?"

"I heard he was fearfully frightened," said Snyder.

"Over what?" asked Fischer. "Dere is only one ting for any of us to get frightened over, and dot is der finding of Hopkins' body. Has anybody been out to der ice-house ti see if it is safe?"

"I'm sure I haven't," said Rice, "and I don't think that Professor Snyder has," he sneered as he looked at the boneless Snyder, cowering in a chair.

"I saw you coming out of der Dean's study," said Fischer to Snyder. "Vot vas it?"

"The Dean has discovered that I wrote the note pinned to the laboratory door," said Snyder, in a hoarse whisper. "He knew it before he sent for me. I admitted it and he asked me how I knew Hopkins was going out of town. I told him Hopkins had told me, and that I put the note on the door yesterday afternoon."

"You fools!" growled Fischer. "Why didn't you tell the truth?"

"Why didn't you?" demanded Snyder, in a cringing manner. "When the Dean asked you if you knew anything about Hopkins you said no."

"Dot vas our agreement," said Fischer.

"But the Dean suspected. He said Gordon suggested that one of us might know—"

"What!" cried Rice. "So that is it? That's why Gordon, the coward, the traitor, has fled! Gentlemen, we are in a bad predicament!"

"Ve are," asserted Fischer. "Vorse and vorse!"

"What is to be done?" asked Rice.

Snyder made a suggestion. "Oh," he cried in despair, "let's make a clean breast of it all. Let's say that Hopkins committed suicide. Tell the incident of the illumination of his body; say that we took it to the ice-house—"

"Yes and be arrested for murder!" said Fischer, sarcastically. "Snyder, you thing like an ass!"

"We might allow them to find the body where it is," said Rice, "and believe that he went there to commit suicide."

"Suicides do not pile boards and sawdust over demselves," said Fischer. "Besides, dere is somethings else." He then narrated the incident of the spade and the wheelbarrow, and the stranger examining them under his classroom window. "Vat do you make of dat?" he asked.

Snyder and Rice were speechless. They felt like criminals around whom the net was tightening momentarily. The cold sweat stood out like beads on Rice's forehead. Snyder was more limp than before.

"Gentlemen," said Rice, after a long pause, "this is a moment requiring the deepest thought of our lives. A single false step and we are ruined. More than that, our lives are in danger. Our mistaken interest in Professor Hopkins' private affairs"—he cast a withering look at Snyder—"has placed us in the shadow of the gallows! We must move carefully!"

At that moment the sound of many voices broke on their ears. They started. Any unusual noise now was sufficient to set their nerves on edge. The voices were those of small boys, arguing with the gardener, who also acted as janitor of the college building.

"But we want to see Professor Hopkins," a small boy's voice was insisting. "We got something for him!" This statement, reinforced by the corroboration of many other treble voices, brought the gardener's assurance that Professor Hopkins was out of town.

"What can they want of Hopkins?" said Rice to his companions. "Had we better see?"

Ordinarily they would not have presumed to meddle in an affair concerning the absent professor, but under the circumstances anything applying to him interested them. Their hesitation, even now, to interfere, was soon set aside by what they next heard.

"What do you want of Professor Hopkins, anyhow?" the gardener was demanding of the boys. "And what's that in the jugs you have?"

"Water," said one of the boys. "They told us to bring it to Professor Hopkins and he'd tell us what was the matter wit it."

"What is the matter with it" asked the gardener.

"We don't know," said the boy. "It's funny—like—full of needles, or something."

"Get out," said the gardener. "Where'd you get it?"

"Over to Bradley's ice-pond," came the answer. Snyder, Rice and Fischer came to their feet with a single bound. They threw open the door of the room and faced the boys. Rice became spokesman.

"What's that?" he demanded. The gardener explained what they had already heard.

"Wh—what did you say was the matter with the water?" he asked one of the boys. The little fellow held out a glass jar full of water, to Rice.

"Feel it, Professor," se said. Rice removed the cover of the jar and inserted his hand in the water. "Why" he said, "it seems to be charged with some mineral. It has a strange, invigorating feeling!"

"Hasn't it!" exclaimed the boys. "And say, you'd oughter try to go in swimmin in it. Me and Jimmy here found it out this morning. We went over to the ice-pond to take a swim, and when we put our feet in they began to tingle. What makes it?"

"I—I am at a loss to know," said Rice. "If you'll leave some of the water here I'll analyse it. Perhaps I can tell you to-morrow. Where did you get the water?"

"Over to Bradley's ice-pond," came the chorus.

"But vat part of der pond?" asked Fischer.

"All-around," said a boy. "But it's most tingly right near the old ice-house." A moan from Snyder, which the boys interpreted as an exclamation of incredulity. They turned on him.

"Don't you believe it?" they demanded. "Well, you just come over there and see. Everybody's over there and they'll all show you. Come on, fellows!"

"Did you hear what he said?" asked Rice, when the boys had gone. "Everybody's over at the ice-pond. The body will be found!"

"Gott!" cried Fischer.

"And we covered it up with boards and sawdust," said Snyder, as one in a dream.

"Do you suppose," said Rice, "that there is any connection between the presence of the body near the water and the condition of the water itself?"

"It iss quite likely," said Fischer. "Hopkins' researches haf recently been in the field of radium and such tings!"

"Perhaps the fatal solution which he drank, and which has made his body luminous, has affected the water," added Snyder.

"Interesting speculations, but of no importance," snapped Rice. "What we have to guard against is the discovery of the body in the ice-house."

"How?" sneered Fischer. "Vould you suggest that ve put up a sign, saying 'Keep Away! Dangerous'?"

"Joking with death?" said Rice reprovingly. "We can suggest nothing until we visit the spot and see what the circumstances are."

Snyder and Fischer would both be engaged with classes directly after luncheon, so it was decided that Rice should go, as a committee of one, to look the situation over and make a report. He found that the boys had not exaggerated. The greater part of Graydon which could leave its daily duties — and some portions that should not have done so—was collected about the shores of the ice-pond. Rice, as a disciple of science, was hailed by those who knew him, made to feel the water, forced to taste it—which he did with a wry face and a stomach that almost refused to do its functions, and plied with questions. He could give no definite answer to any of the queries as to what caused the strange action of the water. To the village druggist, who declared that the pond had suddenly turned into a vast soda fountain, Rice said that it seemed quite likely.

"SLEEPLESSNESS."

Thousands of people all over this land toss night after night on a sleepless pillow. The eyes do not close in the refreshing slumber that comes to those whose heart and nerves are right.

Some are troubled with weak and smothering spells; others palpitation of the heart; others have their nerves unhinged, but whatever the cause—it comes entirely from a derangement of either the heart or nerves, or both. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills offer the blessing of sound, refreshing slumber. They do this by their invigorating effect on the heart and nerves and will tone up the whole system to perfect condition.

Mr. H. Jewel, Keswick, Ont., writes: "I am glad to have the pleasure of telling you what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. I would have weak spells, seemed to lose my breath, and would have to get up in the night as I could not sleep. I tried many medicines but found nothing good until I used Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I took three boxes and it is three years ago since I did so, and I haven't been troubled since."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

No Drinking Man Need Despair

The Neal Cure—Greatest of all Modern Discoveries—Offers a Means of Escape from the Curse of Drink. A Cure of the Drink Habit is Guaranteed in Three Days, no matter whether the Patient is a Hard and Constant Drinker, Social Tippler or goes on Occasional Sprees

MANY SUCCESSFUL CURES IN TORONTO

There was wandering in the streets of Toronto lately, a homeless man, who at one time held a splendid position, but drink was his downfall. To-day his wife, a cultured woman, works out by the day endeavoring to support herself and little family. Think of it, you wives and mothers, who have homes of comfort and all that makes life worth living, what it would be to you to be deprived of these and forced to face the wash tub for an existence, as this poor wife has to do to-day?

But this home which was made a hell on earth through strong drink—as every drunkard's is—may be made into a heaven upon earth, as many have been made, as a result of the Neal Treatment. Three days only—the wonder of it—to effect a cure and make the victim of strong drink a new man physically, morally and mentally.

We undertake to guarantee to effect a cure of the Drink Habit in Three Days, no matter whether the patient is a hard and constant drinker, social tippler or goes on occasional sprees. Are you interested in a poor fellow going down, down, through the curse of drink; then bring your influence to bear on him and bring him to the Neal Institute for treatment, drunk or sober, and we will undertake to remove the awful appetite for strong drink and deliver him to you a new man.

Here is an opportunity for REFORMATION SOCIETIES for INEBRIATES or any institution for the reformation of the drunkard, to test our ability to change the hard drinker into a new man physically and mentally in THREE DAYS' treatment.

We invite these Societies or any institution interested in the poor drunkard and the problem of dealing with him to send us for treatment any victim of the drink habit, it makes no difference how much enslaved, and we guarantee to effect a cure in each and every case. Can you spend your money to better advantage or in a way that will bring in greater returns than in redeeming these victims of strong drink and giving back to their families kind fathers, brothers, husbands and to the country most desirable citizens?

MYSTERY OF THE KENSINGTON RUNE

DID Norsemen in 1362 Leave the Boulder in Minnesota That Now Sets Archaeologists at Loggerheads?

WAS there recently found in a spot thickly settled with Swedes and Norwegians the most important historical document bearing upon America's history? Or is this inscribed stone a fake to be classed with the Cardiff Giant and other frauds?

A stone bearing strange runes has been found in Minnesota. The main question is whether or not it is a genuine rune stone, chiselled some five and a half centuries ago? If a "really truly" rune stone it is a valuable and remarkable record, for it furnishes the basis for the assertion that long before the discovery of America by Columbus this part of the country was visited by Norsemen and it will be a remarkable coincidence that this century sees their hardy descendants in a territory explored by these pathfinders hundreds of years ago.

Few persons outside of Minnesota realize the number and influence of the Swedes and Norwegians in that State. The people born in Sweden now residing in Minnesota constitute more than six per cent of the total population and Norway contributes more than five per cent. In at least twenty nine counties the Norwegian born citizens are the largest element of foreign population and the Swedes predominate in twenty-five counties. This makes a tremendous showing when political elections are held and men of these nationalities have gained prominence in the State's affairs.

The late Governor Johnson, to whom a monument will soon be erected in St. Paul, was a Swede. Senator Knute Nelson, L. S. Swenson, Minister to Switzerland; Governor Lind, Governor Eberhart and other officials are Swedes or Norwegians. One could enumerate many who have attained distinction in political, educational or professional life. In Loring Park, Minneapolis, is a large statue to Ole Bull, erected by his countrymen, who every year honor his memory by conducting exercises at its base.

What led to the large present day immigration of Swedes and Norwegians was probably the similarity of climate in this part to that of their native land. If their ancestors came to Minnesota nearly six centuries ago it was probably on an exploring expedition. Much controversy for and against has been created by the finding of this inscribed bowlder, and the Minnesota Historical Society has recently issued a pamphlet setting forth the finding of the stone, the testimony of the owner and translators, and the conclusions reached as to its authenticity in so far as a committee appointed by them has gone. The stone's detractors have been equally vigorous, and the Illinois Historical Society has printed a booklet alleging the inscription is modern and the stone should be rated as a fake. In the meanwhile the interesting engraved rock is safely housed in the rooms of the Minnesota Historical Society in the new dreproof Capitol at St. Paul, and it is visited by hundreds who wish to see the strange writing.

The story of this remarkable exhibit is an interesting one. In August, 1898, a Swedish farmer, Olof Ohman, while clearing his farm of stumps unearthed a stone bearing strange hieroglyphics. As the farm is about three miles from the village of Kensington, in Douglas county, Minn., the bowlder has since been called the "Kensington Rune Stone." The rock is of graywacke, dark in color, apparently a relic of the glacial drift, and is about thirty inches long, sixteen inches wide and six inches thick. It weighs two hundred and thirty odd pounds, and with the exception of a few scratches, which may have been caused by hitting other bowlders, the surface is free from any mark save the peculiar inscription which several professors and archaeologists assert are runes. These letters form nine lines on the face of the stone and three lines on the edge. If they have been correctly translated they convey the astounding information that the runes are a record of an exploring party of Norsemen who came to the Western continent and to the part now called Minnesota in 1362.

New Capitol Building, St. Paul. In This Are Rooms of State Historical Society Where Stone Is Kept.

"Eight Goths (Swedes) and twenty-two Norwegians upon a journey of discovery from Vinland westward. We had a camp by two skerries one day's journey north from this stone. We were out fishing one day. When we returned home we found ten men red with blood and dead. AV. M. (Ave Virgo Maria), save us from evil."

On its edge is inscribed:—

"(We) have ten men by the sea to look after our vessel 14 (or 41) days' journey from this island. Year 1362."

Since Mr. Holand's translation and championship of the stone he has taken it to Chicago and other places and lectured upon it. There are those who are confident it is genuine and others who proclaim it a modern inscription. Professor N. H. Winchell, State geologist of Minnesota for thirty years, is one of its advocates, and he and Mr. Holand intend to take it to Christiania that runologists from leading nearby universities may pass the final word upon it. In one other way can the stone's genuineness be proved. In old histories of Canada there are accounts of Verendrye, a French explorer, who formed an expedition to the south of Canada. His records show that in two or three places between the Red and Missouri rivers there were pillars of stone. Some of these were isolated and others in groups, but they were evidently placed by some party who had reached this country before Verendrye. In one instance they found a stone inscribed with strange characters. This was sent to France by the exploring party, and it is thought the markings were runes. If the markings on this stone agree with those on the Kensington rune stone it would go far to prove the genuineness of the Kensington find. With this idea in view a letter has been sent from Governor Eberhart, of Minnesota, to our Minister in France asking if this stone can be found, as probably at the time of the French Revolution it became misplaced.

Ohman is a plain Swedish farmer, of little education and with an honest bearing. He states that he found the stone on an elevation of ground and that a poplar tree had entwined its roots about it. The record states that the stone was on an island and this moraine hill on which Ohman found the stone is now surrounded by a marsh. The gradual drying up of the country in Western Minnesota is well known. There is also no doubt about the locality being once infested with redmen or Indians. There is no evidence that he is an impostor or that he carved the stone himself, though, of course, this has been suggested. His farm and the surrounding country have been thoroughly canvassed by the adherents and detractors of the stone, and it has been thought possible that one Fogelblad, a poor, illiterate Swedish Lutheran pastor, who made his home in Kensington, might have written the inscription. This the adherents of the rune stone after investigation say is not worthy of consideration. In fact they feel that both Ohman and Fogelblad ought to be exonerated from trying to perpetuate any fraud. Those who do not believe in the stone, and there are several learned men who do not, among them Professor R. B. Anderson, of Wisconsin, and Professor T. Flom, of Illinois, are inclined to be sceptical regarding the whole inscription and its age.

There are several remarkable coincidents regarding the inscription. The camp about a day's travel north of the stone has caused several to search for such a place. The believers think they have found such a spot on Pelican Lake, a small body of water with two large bowlders or skerries at one end. This fills the requirements and is about a day's journey away. The natural question arises:—Could a party of Norsemen reach the interior of what is now Minnesota in fourteen or forty-one days? The believers assert that this could be accomplished. According to old books telling of the discovery of America by the Norsemen, Vinland was somewhere on the Atlantic coast, possibly Nova Scotia, Massachusetts or Hudson Bay, probably the latter. There is some doubt about the figures 14 and 41. The most plausible theory to the stone's advocates is that these men came from Vinland through Hudson Bay, thence to Lake Winnepeg, over the Nelson River and up the Red River of the North. They point out that the Hudson Bay route had long been known to the Hudson Bay Company and the nearby rivers had been used to carry their furs.

In this connection it is interesting to note that on the shores of the Bay of Fundy, opposite the town of Yarmouth, is a large stone weighing more than four hundred pounds. For hundreds of years the people accepted its Ancient origin, but only recently has it been deciphered. The sentence on it reads:—"Harko's Son Addressed the Men," and in an account of the expedition of Karlsefnne in 1007 the name of Harki is mentioned. The letters "A V M" on the Kensington stone have naturally caused much discussion. It is generally accepted that they stand for Ave Maria, and it is pointed out that at the time of the "black death" in the fourteenth century the Virgin was often called upon, and in a poem of the period every verse ends with this supplication.

Masonic Secret Advanced.

But the most ingenious theory of all has recently been advanced by a Mason who in a long article suggests the letters are "AUM" and not "AVM," on the theory that "U" and "V" are interchangeable in Latin and "W" would be difficult to carve on stone. He contends that by "AUM" they mean the mystic word of great antiquity known to Masonry and brought from India, and that the Norsemen knew the potency of this word and used it in their danger, with all its hidden meaning. The non-believers assert that no party could in fourteen days reach so far into the interior, and that this solves the matter.

At any rate, it is generally agreed that the inscription, false or genuine, was made by a Swede, or an unlettered man, probably from the south part of Sweden. It looks like the work of an explorer of the fourteenth century or the fabrication of a philologist familiar with the dialect of certain parts of Sweden at that time. The advocates think that mistakes could easily be made by unlettered people and that obsolete words which were in use in the fourteenth century as well as numerical characters could not have been carved by a modern faker.

Mr. Holand avers he finds added confirmation to his theory of the genuineness of the runes by the fact that the Mandan Indians have been a puzzle to scientists. Many of these Indians have the light hair of the Swedes and their ideas of heaven and hell are identical with those current among the Norsemen in early days, heaven being a warm place and hell furnishing plenty of cold. They also use a decimal system similar to the numbers on the Kensington stone. This theory, however, must not in any way confound the rune stone with the pictographs used by the Indians of our Southwest, where rocks and walls of caves are carved with signs and pictures. There are many of these showing remarkable skill in drawing in Arizona, Colorado and New Mexico, but they are entirely different from the inscription on this Kensington stone, which is for the most part runes.

These letterings, called runes, are usually on stone, though some have been found on tombs, swords, arrows and cooking utensils. Such ancient inscriptions have been seen in England, Scotland, Ireland, Greece and Italy, and more than two thousand mediaeval runic inscriptions have been discovered in Scandinavian countries. Many of these are preserved in royal museums and libraries. Some, in England, are on crosses evidently erected over the dead. Ole Worm, the Danish antiquarian, dragged these curious markings from obscurity and scholars now think there were at least three distinct alphabets. The oldest had twenty four letters, and this was succeeded by one of sixteen letters, which in turn gave place to a new one of twenty-four.

Whether the runes on the Kensington stone were carved there five and a half centuries ago, as the inscription indicates, or chiselled on the bowlder by some modern workman is a great big question mark. It is hoped that when runologists abroad see this stone they will be able to decide the matter definitely. In the meantime it furnishes an interesting field for speculative pros and cons in a community largely settled by Norwegians and Swedes and theories as to its genuineness or fraudulency are about evenly balanced. Will the learned professors who take the stone to Christiania and who will sit in solemn conclave with the distinguished runologists of Europe come home with flying colors and flourishing documents to prove its genuineness, or will they return with sad and chastened spirits and feel like quietly slipping the mystic stone overboard from the deck of an Atlantic liner on a stormy night in the dark of the moon?

No one at present can tell whether the Kensington rune stone will or will not eventually take its place in history and be entitled to a place in that tale of aristocratic finds yet to be written, and entitled, "Who's Who, When's When and Where's Where."

THE TOWER ON THE CLIFF

A Short Story

By Sir William Magnay, Bart

If it be that our slightest actions are directed by the impalpable guides that surround us, it must have been an arch-demon who led my steps seaward on a day now long past, but for ever calendared in my mind by the shudder-compelling memory of what that stormy ramble brought me to witness.

My host's directions as to my inland route had been so lucidly given that I had followed them as though the winding roads and retired bridle-paths had been long familiar. Never once was I at fault. Setting off to return, a balance of time in my favor determined me to strike out a bolder course, and, instead of retracing my steps ,let sagacity be my guide in finding another way back. Uncertainty would give a zest to my homeward tramp, keeping the senses alert and fresh; so, with something of the gambler's spirit I forsook the tortuous road that had brought me, and plunged into an inviting, picturesque lane. High hedges and an occasional turn kept me in a state of expectancy until abruptly the end was reached—a gate, a stretch of heath, and beyond—nothing. Yes, of course—the sea. Laughing at my stupidity which forgot it was so close at hand, I pushed through the gate, and made my way towards the edge.

A change of scene desolate enough. A great expanse of heathland, undulating and clothed with gorse; on a hillock a sturdy mast with footrests for ascending to spy the whereabouts of straying cattle, which, with scores of rabbits scampering at my footsteps, were the only living objects in the grey light, every moment growing darker. My view of the sea showed me something more—a filling-up, from that quarter of the horizon, of threatening thunder-clouds; and as I drew nearer the shore I met the first scud of wind and heard the irritated lash of the waves. Three minutes more brought me to the cliff's edge, with a resolve, now that I had come so far, to work back homewards by the shore, and the first splash of rain on my face warned me to hurry over the bare, shelterless ground as fast as possible. My way was obvious; following the coast was bound to bring me home sooner or later, although, owing to the regular outline, the particular spot from which my host's place lay but half a mile inland was completely hidden. But there was no time for taking observations; the dense blackness advancing over the sea was suddenly cleft as with a red-hot knife, and a dull rumble gave out that the clouds were in earnest. My situation was awkward enough; no shelter in sight and the rocky cliffs at every step becoming higher and more precipitous. When, in a few minutes, the storm broke over me I should be absolutely at its mercy. Fool that I had been to leave the sheltered road without paying heed to the sky! I dashed on in a disgusted frame of mind, trusting to light upon some object large enough to afford crouching room under its lee, or at least to get as far as possible on my journey before the storm attacked me. Having reached the top of a sharp rise, an abrupt turn in the cliff line brought me in sight of a small headland, on the point of which, and, as it seemed, at the extreme edge of the rock, stood a curious looking building, which I took to be a coastguard shelter. It was about a quarter of a mile off, and, with the rain already coming down heavily, I quickened my pace and ran with all speed for the building ahead of me. This, as I approached, turned out to be a tower of curious form probably put up as abelvidere. It was one storey high, and round, except that on the side towards the sea there ran a smaller V shaped turret in which were set large shuttered windows, commanding the sweep of coast on either side. This excrescent tower was, from its shape, also designed to split and break the force of the wind which there, on the very summit of the cliff, was met in all its fury. Inland, extending to a couple of hundred yards of the building, ran a low plantation, protected on the weather side by a high earthen rampart. This of itself would have been a welcome shelter, had the more complete one offered by the tower not been so near. In the distance, beyond where the plantation thickened, I could just see the chimneys of a great house. "A hospitable fellow," I muttered, to shut off the best bit of the cliffs for his own selfish longing." I had now reached the belvidere. It's wooden door stood half open; in a moment I was inside, panting for breath, but experiencing a delightful sense of relief from the buffetting wind and whipping rain. Then I looked around. The lower space was used as a lumber room; a tent, a collapsible canoe, some garden chairs, an old table, coils of rope, paddles, oars, and such like implements were stowed there. I climbed forward into the small angular turret. Through a large chink in the weather-beaten shutter I could look down upon the sea, eddying and splashing viciously at the foot of the rock. So sheer was the descent from the almost overhanging tower that I could only account for its position by supposing that it had at one time served a more practical purpose.

Drawing back, I resumed my inspection of the place. A staircase led from the door to the upper room. I mounted and was about to turn the handle of the door, when I started and stopped. I was not alone. Voices which wind and wave had hitherto drowned, were now distinctly audible. Little did I guess the drama that was playing when curiosity prompted me to linger a moment and hear what manner of talkers were found in such a place and in such weather. The effect of that pause was most untoward for me. Without warning, the latch of the door, which opened outwards, came unfastened, and the current of wind drove the door back upon me. I stood hidden, so long as the door should remain wide open, and imprisoned, owing to the impossibility of escaping without being seen by those in the room. The nature of the conversation which reached my ears told me that the making known of my presence would be highly embarrassing, so I waited for a chance of escaping undetected. The chink of the door showed me a room plainly furnished with a table and a few chairs, while a large map of th ecoast hung on the wall. The small outer turret in which the windows were set, was shut off by heavy green curtains now partly drawn back, showing a mounted telescope standing in the recess. Part of the shutters behind the curtain must have been open, judging from the light that entered. In the room were two persons—a man, little more than a boy, in the uniform of a lieutenant in the Navy, and a lady.

Her face was turned from me, but a certain grace and distinction of figure and attitude made me certain of her beauty. The face of her companion, working with passion and despair, is as vividly before me now as at that moment—as it will be to the last ebb of memory.

"And this is the end?" were the first words I caught.

"Yes; it must be," the lady answered. "I only met you now because—I feared you might do something foolish if I refused."

"Foolish? What? Disgrace you? Compromise you?"

"No, Geoffrey, no. Not that."

"No? What then?"

"Ithought I owed it to you to say good-bye."

"You owed me anything but that," he retorted bitterly. "Nothing but death should have forced that word between us."

"You blame me, Geoffrey? You hate me?"

A great wave of passion seemed to catch him up.

"Hate you? My darling—my darling! God only knows how I love you!"

He would have seized her arm, but she drew back.

"It is madness!"

"Madness? Why? Only because you are married. Does that kill my love for you? The love that has been my bright star through all these weary months over ten thousand miles of sea. I always had you with me. Madness! Yes ! Heaven knows how I kept from it when the paper came with your marriage in it."

"It was cruel," she said softly; "I am, oh, so sorry. But it had to be. Circumstances were too strong for me."

"Then it was not for love?" he demanded eagerly. "Not for love?"

"There were other considerations," she answered hesitatingly. "My father's property—but you will not believe or understand—"

"I can understand you would not wait for a poor sailor. You love this man?" he added suddenly.

"My husband?"

"Your husband."

She rose.

"I shall not tell you, Geoffrey, if I don't."

"Anyhow, you have killed your love for me—if you ever had any."

"You know I had."

"Then you do not love him, Constance? By all we have been to each other in the old days, tell me that."

"Never!"

"Ah, you love him! You love him!"

"And I have met you here."

"He has confidence in you!"

She looked at him, then away, and spoke in a low tone.

"I think he would kill me if he knew."

"What?" he almost shouted.

"I mean—he is jealous."

"Ah- He loves you, and you fear him. The coward!"

"Would he not have cause? Let me go now."

"No; not yet. He frightens you—"

"No; but he would. Geoffrey, do you want to disgrace me?"

"You? I would die first."

"Then let me go. Say good-bye."

"For ever?"

"Yes, dear; it is best: and you will think so soon."

"Constance," he said more calmly, taking her proffered hand, "whether or not these are the last words you will ever hear from me I tell you I shall never think this for the best—no, not selfishly—I leave out myself—but for you . If only—here, I won't worry you any more; I'll take my misery away. Don't think I shall get you into trouble with—with him. My love for you is true love; I would die to save you from harm."

"Don't talk of it," she replied. "I know you would never bring me to harm. I was not worth your love. Ah! if things had only fallen out differently. I might—but it is madness to think of that. Let me go now—I shall be missed—"

Up to this point I confess the strangeness of the rapid scene, enacted literally at my elbow, and a curiosity stronger than I could master, had held me breathless and fascinated. Now I realized that my eavesdropping was as unwarrantable as my situation, if discovered, would be awkward. I began to feel seriously uneasy, and to cast about for a means of escape. My only chance of retreat was to get the door closed and to keep it so. This was rendered feasible by the discovery at my feet of a small wedge, probably used at times for keeping the door open. I quietly stooped and picked it up, then commenced to work the door from me slowly and as naturally as I could. That the storm had now somewhat abated and was blowing in fore fitful gusts may have accounted for the closing of the door, if, indeed, they noticed it; anyhow, I got it nearly shut, slipped the wedge beneath it, and made my way on tip-toe down the staircase. The last few steps brought my face opposite to a small window at the back of the tower, through which in the dusk which was now coming on, I caught sight of an object which made my blood start within me. A man was coming down towards the tower swiftly and stealthily; keeping under cover where he could, but not from the rain, for of that he seemed heedless. A man in the youth of middle age, bearded, not particularly good-looking, but with the certain distinction of figure and carriage possessed by most Englishmen of good birth. Nevertheless, his look and demeanour—or was it my conscience?—gave the idea of a determined and sinister purpose.

I knew intuitively it was the Husband.

For a few moments I stood irresolute; then, with the unreasoning impulse of panic, went down hastily and stood hidden in a corner of the lower room. Hardly was I ensconced when I heard the door above shaken violently, and then the thought flashed upon me—I had fastened them in; they were trapped! I checked a half formed plan of going to their assistance and have since been glad I did so. It was too late to be ofservice, and at least the lady is spared the thought that the knowledge of what followed was shared by a stranger.

But now they must have got the door open, for I heard a foot on the stairs under which I stooped.

"Geoffrey! He is coming! He is here! I am ruined!"

The terrified undertone was followed by a quick movement, a pause, and then the lady came creeping down the stairs. When she reached the ground she stopped, and there was a terrible silence—the silence that precedes an awaited explosion. Then a footstep was heard outside, the doo ropened wider, and husband and wife were face to face.

"What are you doing here, Constance?"

"I too kabelter from the rain. Is it over? Let us go."

"Not yet. Let us stay."

Passion in the one, and fear in the other attuned their voices strangely.

"Come upstairs," he said.

"No, Clement," she answered, with the tremor of suspense; "no, let us get home."

"I tell you it still pours—"

"Yes ;but I am cold."

"You are trembling."

"Shivering. Let us run to the house."

"In a moment. But I must look upstairs."

"Why must you?"

"I want to find something."

"There is nothing—" she remonstrated.

"Come and see."

They went up in silence.

All power of sober thought or resource seemed lost to me in the excitement of the moment. An intense blind desire to see the end of this strange drama seized me; otherwise I must have taken the opportunity of escaping from my equivocal situation in the tower. Looking about me I noticed that across the entrance of my hiding place ran a ladder leading up into a dark recess undtr the top of the stairs. Thinking this a safer place of concealment, I climbed the ladder and found myself in a small chamber or loft constructed in a corner cut off the upper room, and used as a storehouse for sail and tackle. Here I wa spractically in the room, only shut off from its other occupants by a thin partition. It was darker; I could see between the warped boards that the curtains were drawn.

Was he there?

"You were alone?" I heard the husband demand.

"Of course. Why, what should make you think—?"

"Nothing. But your conduct is, to say the least, peculiar."

"How?"

"Coming out in such weather."

"I came out before the storm."

"Not before it threatened."

"My dear Clement," she rejoined, "I have not your eye for weather. But I am very cold. Let us go."

"I will close the window," he said. "How came it open?"

"I opened it a little," she replied hastily. "It was so dark."

"And drew the curtains?"

"Against the wind. Clement," she went on quickly, "I shall be ill if we stay here. Let us make a run forit and get home."

I could see she was holding his arm with a half caress.

"Let me look for what I want," he answered, "and we will go."

"Where is it?"

"Behind that curtain."

"Nothing is there, dearest; don't stay now," she pleaded."

"You are deceiving me, Constance," he said.

"Deceiving you? How?"

"We are not alone here."

"Clement, you frighten me. What do you mean?"

"Someone is behind that curtain."

"No."

"Let me look."

"Nonsense! Who can there be?"

"How do I know?" he retorted savagely. "A man—a lover, perhaps."

"Clement, how dare you say that to me!"

"Do you deny it?"

"That a lover of mine is there? I do."

"On your honour?"

"On my honour. Now, come!"

There was a pause. Then he spoke.

"Why did you object to my looking there?"

"I did not."

He made a movement.

"I do now," she added.

"Ah! Why?"

"Because it would imply you doubted my word of honour."

Again there was a silence. Then—

"There are footmarks here," he said stooping.

"No doubt," she answered; "yours and mine. What of them?"

"They besmirch the honour by which you have just sworn, Constance. They are neither yours nor mine."

"You coward!" she cried; "to insult me like this. You bully!"

"I will see behind that curtain," he insisted doggedly.

"Clement, why will you do this? Why will you make me hate you?"

"Because," he snarled, "you have lied to me."

"You say that?"

"I do."

"Then look!"

They stood with eyes fixed on each other; she with the calmness of desperation, he irresolute. Suddenly he took a step towards the recess.

I held my breath.

By a quick movement she arrested him.

"One word, Clement," she said, "before you draw that curtain. So far the risk is all mine. Play the game fairly; put down your stake, too."

"What do you mean?" he demanded.

"I mean," she replied—and the lulling of the storm brought her low quivering tones clearly to me—"I mean that if I have, as you say, a lover hidden there, I am unworthy to be your wife; if the place is empty you will have cruelly wronged and insulted me by this foul suspicion, and are unworthy to be my husband; so the moment you lay a hand on that curtain, all is over between us—we ar strangers. Now, look—if you dare!"

Poor girl, she was desperate; and the extremity of her danger gave her a quick witted courage to fight to the last. An intense pity for her came into my heart, and in a moment I had resolved that, upon the unmasking of "Geoffrey," I would make a bold effort to save her by discovering my presence, claiming him as my companion, and letting the storm serve a san excuse for our having taken sbelter there.

Following her last defiance came another pause; I strained my gase in the dusky light to see the denouement. The duel of their eyes lasted some moments, and then the husband spoke through his teeth—so low that I could barely catch the words.

"You dare me? I accept the challenge."

She made a quick impulsive movement towards him, but checked herself and walked away.

He looked after her; wavered in his purpose; and for a moment seemed to abandon it; then, with a sudden access of jealousy, made a step forward, and violently flung back the curtain. I only half repressed the cry that came to my lips. Were brain and sight playing me false?

The recess was empty!

Next moment I grasped the reason—the awful expedient by which discovery and disgrace had been averted; and, as I realized that I had been the secret witness of a ghastly tragedy, a great trembling came over me: I felt sick and faint. I heard the husband speaking, but the words to my whirling brain were were sound. For a time all was blank. I have an indistinct memory of a muffled shriek and incoherent exclamation from the lady; but when my mind recovered its poise sufficiently to allow me to survey the scene, the room was empty—and all silent. I descended the ladder in haste, and went tremblingly to the room—yes, empty. I entered the window recess; one shutter was open and swinging idly. The storm had passed away, and the moon was beginning to streak the sea. I looked down, hardly daring, yet fascinated. A sheer descent of, perhaps, one hundred and fifty feet; no refuge, not a tiny ledge—nothing—till the lashing water and the cruel rocks were reached. I feared to look, lest Geoffrey should meet my eyes, but the current, which there set outwards like a mill-race, told me that Death, into whose arms he had leaped, had enfolded and borne him far away. The poor boy had made good his boast that his was true love, and that he would die before bringing disgrace on the girl who had jilted him, and to save whose honour he had given his young life.

Sick and unstrung with the horror of the hour, I turned and got quickly out of the place. Ere my flight from th eaccursed tower had well begun, it was arrested by the sight of a prostrate form on the wet ground, shaken by sobs—piteous, heart-breaking sobs. What could I do? The time when interference might have been of service my clumsy indecision had let go by. There was nothing left now, but to respect this grief. So I passed by unseen and in silence.

When, a few days later, the local paper told us that a body had been washed ashore some miles away, and identified as that of Lieutenant Geoffrey, of H.M.S. ——, I wondered, amid the careless "Poor fellows!" of my sister guests, what effect the news would have on one whom our host described as "a capital shot and a thorough good fellow, lately married to a charming girl who, with all her good looks, has had more than her share of luck."

The Quickest, Simplest Cough Cure

Easily and Cheaply Made at Home. Saves You $2.

This recipe makes 16 ounces of cough syrup—enough to last a family a long time. You couldn't buy as much or as good cough syrup for $2.50.

Simple as it is, it gives almost instant relief and usually stops the most obstinate cough in 24 hours. This is partly due to the fact that it is slightly laxative, stimulates the appetite and has an excellent tonic effect. It is pleasant to take—children like it. An excellent remedy, too, for whooping cough, sore lungs, asthma, throat troubles, etc.

Mix 2 cups of granulated sugar with with one cup of warm water and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle and add the Sugar Syrup. It keeps perfectly. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

Pine is one of the oldest and best known remedial agents for the throat membranes. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guiaicol and all the other natural healing elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this recipe have endeared it to thousands of housewives in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co, Toronto, Ont.

"Consumption"

Three Doctors Attended Her. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup Cured Her.

It has long been known that the balsamic odor of the newly cut pine tree heals and invigorates the lungs and consumptives improve and revive amid the perfume of the pines. Since but few can command the luxury of a visit to the pineries, it will be good news to many to know that the essential healing principle of the pine has been separated, and refined, and combined with other absorbent, expectorant and soothing medicines of recognized worth in the manufacture of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup.

Mrs. Charles McDermott, Bathurst, N.B., writes: "I thought I would write and let you know the benefit I have received through the use of your Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Three years ago I had Consumption and had three doctors attending me, and they were very much alarmed about my condition. I was so weak and miserable I could not do my housework. While looking through your B.B.B. almanac I saw that Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup was good for weak lungs so I got a bottle and after taking ten bottles I was completely cured. At that time I weighed 135 pounds and now weigh 172, a gain of 37 pounds in three years. I now keep it in the house all the time and would not be without it for anything as I owe my life to it."

THE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, Feb. 8.—A lower level than at any time within the last three months was reached by wheat to-day. Bid pieces and no demand weighed on the market. Buying to cover short sales caused a rally, however, and the close was a shade lower to a shade higher, compared with last night's figures. In the end corn showed a loss of ⅛c to ¼c, oats were off ⅛c to ¼c, and hog products down 5c to 7½c to 20c.

Liverpool wheat futures closed to-day ½d to ¾d lower than yesterday; corn futures, ½d lower. Wheat futures closed ¾c lower at Antwerp, ⅛c lower at Buda Pest; unchanged at Berlin.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Toronto Live Stock.

TORONTO, Feb. 8.—The railways reported 44 carloads of live stock at the City Market, consisting of 721 cattle, 994 hogs, 393 sheep and lambs and 68 calves.

Butchers.

Geo. Rowntree, who bought 28 cattle, quoted prices as follows: Good to prime steers and heifers, $6.35 to $6.50; cows, $4 to $5.30; bulls, $3 to $5.50.

Milkers and Springers.

Milkers and springers sold at $40 to $65 for the bulk, $70 being reported for a very few.

Veal Calves.

Prices firm, at $3.50 to $8.50 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Wesley Dunn reported prices as follows: Sheep, ewes, $4.25 to $4.75; rams, $3.50 to $4 per cwt.; lambs, $6 to $6.50 per cwt.

Hogs.

Hog prices were unchanged, at $7.40 for selects, fed and watered at the market, and $7.15 to drovers for hogs f.o.b. cars at country points. This means that the farmer would get $7 per cwt. for his hogs.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Feb. 8.—At the Montreal stock yards, West End Market, the offerings of live stock this morning were 250 cattle, 50 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs and 100 calves.

Owing to the heavy snowstorm which prevailed thruout the country yesterday the returns of live stock were delayed in arriving, and in consequence supplies of cattle on the market were small, which created a much firmer feeling, but there was no actual advance in prices. The demand was good and a fairly active trade was done. Choice steers sold at 6¼c; good, at 6¼c to 6½c; fairly good, at 5¾c to 6c; fair, at 5½c to 5¾c, and the lower grades at 4½c to 5c per lb.

The trade in sheep and lambs was very quiet on account of the limited supplies offered and prices ruled firm. Sheep sold at 4½c to 4¾c and lambs, at 6¼c to 6¾c per pound. The market for hogs opened stronger, $8 per cwt. for selected lots, weighed off cars, but as supplies turned out to be much larger than was generally expected the impression was that the above figures would not be maintained, as packers showed little disposition to operate freely, having sufficient on hand for their requirements for the balance of this week. The demand for calves was good and sales were made at prices ranging from $3 to $15 each, as to size and quality.

Chicago Live Stock.

CHICAGO, Feb. 8.—Cattle—Receipts, 17,000; market steady; beaves, $5 to $8.45; Texas steers, $4.10 to $5.50; western steers, $4.40 to $6.70; stockers and feeders, $3.85 to $6.90; cows and heifers, $2.65 to $6.60; calves, $6.75 to $9.

Hogs—Receipts, 36,000; market slow, weak, 5c lower; light, $7.50 to $7.75; mixed, $7.35 to $7.70; heavy, $7.15 to $7.60; rough, $7.15 to $7.30; good to choice hogs, $7.30 to $7.60; pigs, $7.40 to $7.65; bulk of sales, $7.55 to $7.65.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 23,000; market weak; native, $3.40 to $4.25; western, $3.50 to $4.35; yearlings, $4.50 to $5.40.

Winnipeg Teachers' Salaries Raised.

Winnipeg, Feb. 9.—The salaries of all the teachers, with the exception of the principals in the public schools, have been voluntarily raised. The new schedule places the schools of this city on a basis as high as that in any other city in America. The minimum for inexperienced teachers has been raised from $450 to $500. Regular teachers will be paid $650 to $800 for the first year, instead of $600 to $725. The maximum is to be reached at the end of the eighth year, instead of the ninth as before, and it will run from $900 to $1,000, instead of from $800 to $950.

Blaze in a Hospital.

Brockville, Feb. 9.—The matron and nurses of the General Hospital proved fire-fighters yesterday. An over-heated smoke pipe of a hot water furnace caused a blaze to get deep-seated in the window casing beneath the sun parlors. After ripping away the casing with improvised tools, the the ladies applied the chemical extinguishers recently installed by the governors. The whole thing was so neatly and quietly done that no alarm was caused among the patients of the institution.

Shot His Neighbor.

Vancouver, Feb. 9.—For a reason yet unexplained, J. Follett, a city laborer, living in a cabin in Fairview, yesterday morning shot and killed M. Norris, a well digger, who lives in a cabin next to his own. Follett then shot himself and was rushed to the hospital, where he lingered until yesterday afternoon, when he also died. When asked if he had done the shooting, Follett, although unable to articulate, nodded his head in the affirmative.

Ferry Crew Arrested.

Windsor, Feb. 9.—Practically the entire crew of the C. P. ferry Ontario, six in all, with the exception of the captain and mate, were placed under arrest yesterday, for robbing bonded freight cars in transit eastward.

Left Suddenly.

Montreal, Feb. 9.—Fred. Krausberger, foreman of a branch store of Davies, Ltd., pork packers and butchers, left Montreal very suddenly on Sunday morning, Jan. 29. On Sunday evening Mr. Charles H. Binnels, the local manager, had the safe in the shop examined. It had been cleaned out. A warrant has been issued for the arrest of Krutsberger, who, it is believed, is in the western States or the Canadian west. The amount that is missing is said to be $565.

Lloyd George Ill?

London, Feb. 8.—David Lloyd George, the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, said his friends, refuse to discuss the condition of his health, merely saying that he is taking a much-needed rest. Reports are in circulation, however, to the effect that the Chancellor is suffering from nervous prostration, and that his condition is not improving, which might eventually force him to resign his portfolio.

Allowed to See Dying Mother.

Cobourg, Feb. 9.—Matthews, the man who is in the county jail awaiting trial on the charge of murdering a woman in a Colborne hotel, was allowed his liberty for a short time yesterday to visit his mother, who is dying.

Frisco Gets the Exposition.

Washington, Feb. 9.—San Francisco yesterday won the unanimous vote of the Senate committee on industrial expositions for the Panama Canal exposition.

LIFE NOT WORTH LIVING

is the way Miss Alta Abel, of West Baden, Ind., summed up her existence after having sought in vain for health. She writes, "I was a complete wreck—always tired, worn out and nervous. I had to spend about one-third of my time in bed, and my life was not worth living.

Vinol, your delicious cod liver and iron tonic, was recommended, and I can truly say it has done me more good than all the medicine I ever took in my life. That nervous and tired feeling is all gone. I have gained in health, flesh and strength, until I feel like another person." (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

What Vinol did for Miss Abel, we know it will do for every nervous, run-down, overworked, tired, thin and discouraged woman in this vicinity.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte street; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

A very interesting lecture on "Life in a London Slum" was given by the Rev. John Gilt, of Picton, in the Baptist church on Wednesday evening last.

The attendance was not so good as it might have been, owing to the night being stormy, preventing many from turning out who would otherwise have been present.

An oyster supper, under the auspices of the ladies of the Baptist church will be given in the school room of the church on Friday evening, Feb. 10th.

TEACHER'S NERVES

Teachers often have the reputation of being cross when the trouble is with the nerves rather than the disposition. Mr. A. Sutherland, Principal South Bar School, Sydney, N.S., writes: "I was nervous and worried, had indigestion and headache and other ills. Doctors failed me. You can depend on me to recommend Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food for I believe it has entirely cured me." Tired brains and feeble nerves are soon restored by this celebrated food cure.

FOR CONSTIPATION

A Medicine That Does Not Cost Anything Unless It Cures

The active medicinal ingredients of Rexall Orderlies, which is odourless, tasteless and colourless, is an entirely new discovery. Combined with other extremely valuable ingredients, it forms a perfect bowel regulator, intestinal invigorator and strengthener. Rexall Orderlies are eaten like candy and are notable for their agreeableness to the palate and gentleness of action. They do not cause griping or any disagreeable effect or inconvenience.

Unlike other preparations for a like purpose, they do not create a habit, but instead they overcome the cause of habit acquired through the use of ordinary laxatives, cathartics and harsh physic, and permanently remove the cause of constipation or irregular bowel action.

We will refund your money without argument if they do not do as we say they will. Two sizes, 25c. and 10c. Sold only at our store,—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

IN A BIG MERGER

Kawartha Lake Navigation Lines are Included in Gigantic Amalgamation of Lake Steamship Companies

$12,000,000 CONCERN

Special Wire to the Examiner.

TORONTO, FEB. 9.—Local confirmation was given to-day to the rumour that the gigantic lake transportation merger in process of formation will include not only the inland and Northern navigation lines, but the smaller connections of the Muskoka and Kawartha Lakes, together with the smaller lines on the great lakes, making a twelve million dollar concern with Rudolphe Forget of Montreal, as president. A prominent steamship man here to-day declared that the defeat of the Long Sault project in Congress was instrumental in bringing the matter to a head. Forget is expected here shortly to look into the Toronto end.

THE PETERBORO' CURLERS GET A GREAT RECEPTION

Victorious District Cup Rinks Are Met at the Station on Their Arrival From Toronto With the Band, and Are Escorted in Triumph to Charlotte Street Rink.

A royal reception and a fitting recognition of the laurels they had won was given the members of the Peterough rinks who won the District Cup on their return from Toronto last night after having beaten Palmerston in the finals. The curlers arrived on the local C.P.R. train and were met at the station by a big turnout of their brother curlers armed with brooms which were ignited to serve as torches, while the 57th band blared out a triumphant strain as the train drew into th the station. When the victorious knights of the broom climbed out of the coaches they were seized by their joyous comrades and placed in the waiting sleighs after which a procession was formed, headed by the band and the curlers were escorted to the rink, where a reception was given them in the club rooms. An enjoyable repast was served and around the festive board the story of the game was told and retold, while the members of the winning rinks were showered with congratulations. This is the second year in succession that Peterborough has won this honour, and the feat is one to be proud of. Speeches of congratulation were made by the officers of the club and the winners were made to feel that every member of the Peterborough Club was proud of what they had accomplished.

The Peterborough rinks were as follows:

W. Reid, R. Cameron, A. Moore, W. M. Lang, skip.

W. P. Adamson, W. Campbell, E. T. M. Bowes, T. E. B. Yeates, skip.

FARMERS' MEETINGS TO BE HELD NEXT WEEK

Examiner Special.

Arrangements have been completed for the series of farmers' meetings that will be held in Peterborough County next week. The principal speakers will be Mr. E. C. Drury, of Crown Hill, Ont.; Mr. W. L. Smith, the Editor of the Weekly Sun, Toronto, Ont.; and Mr. H. B. Cowan, Editor-in-Chief of Farm and Dairy, Peterborough.

Mr. Drury is the leader of the farmers' movement that is attracting so much attention. He has been the main spokesman for the farmers in answering the arguments of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and, in the course of his address will describe how the farmers of the West are organized. Mr. W. L. Smith has been for many years an out-spoken champion of the farmers.

The meetings will be held as follows:

Warsaw, Wednesday, Feb. 15, 2.30 p.m.

Lakefield, Wednesday, Feb. 15, 8 p.m.

Stewart's (Otonabee) Thursday, Feb. 16, 2 p.m.

Central Smith, Thursday, Feb. 16, 8 p.m.

Monaghan Town Hall, Friday, Feb. 17, 2 p.m.

Norwood, Friday, Feb. 17, 8 p.m.

Peterborough (Court House) Saturday, Feb. 18, 2 p.m.

Central Smith and Norwood will be under the direction of the officers of the Farmers' Clubs at those points. By holdig a Saturday afternoon meeting in Peterborough, an opportunity will be given many farmers to hear these speakers, who could not otherwise do so.

CO-OPERATIVE UNION WAS UNDER DISCUSSION

At the regular meeting of the Trades and Labour Council held last night, the matter of co-operative union was brought up and discussed. The shareholders would be members of the various unions of the city and only union goods would be handled. Other cities larger and smaller than Peterborough, have these stores which command a large custom. The proposition is only in its infancy, but it is understood the scheme will be proceeded with.

It was decided that a deputation wait upon the city council to advocate the repainting and repairing of all signs on the street corners, bearing the name of the street.

The meeting discussed this matter at some length. It was pointed out that the present system of having the name of the street on the pavement was not satisfactory during the winter months, the letters being hidden from view under the snow, and as a consequence visitors to the city in many cases complained of the difficulty met by them in endeavouring to find their way about.

It was also decided to ask the council to take up the matter of milk and meat inspection for the city.

Plans for the big celebration to be held by the Trades and Labour Council on Labour Day were also discussed.

This city may have a large co-operative store, if the plans of the Trades and Labour Council mature.

NOW OPEN FOR HOMESTEAD ENTRY

The Grand Trunk Pacific General Passenger Department has been advised by the Department of the Interior at Ottawa that there are approximately 10,800 quarter sections surveyed in the Grande Prairie—Peace River District, which are now open for homestead entry. In addition to this, it is the intention to subdivide 27 more townships, nearly 4,000 quarter sections during the present season, making in all about 15,000 quarter sections for free homestead entry in 1911 in the far-famed Peace River country.

A new waggon road has been constructed, partly by the Government and partly by the merchants of Edson, Alta., through to the Grande Prairie country, a distance of 165 miles from Edson, which is all practically completed and is reported to be remarkably level, with no heavy hills, and over which heavy loads may be drawn with ease. Road houses have also been established along this waggon road, and the settler will be able to travel in comparative ease and at slight expense from Edson on the Grand Trunk Pacific this year, in the course of a week, where the former routes via Edmonton and Lesser Slave Lake, occupied several months, and very great cost. The whole distance to be traversed being over four times as long as the new route.

It is reported that there are thousands of prospective homesteaders especially in the northwestern United States, who have been waiting eagerly for the opening of the Peace River country to homesteading, and when the announcement reaches them there will be the greatest land rush into the Peace River and Grande Prairie country that has ever taken place to any section of Canada. The Grand Trunk Pacific is accordingly taking means to have an adequate transportation facilities between Winnipeg, Edmonton and Edson to provide for the very large traffic expected.

THE MANAGEMENT OF THE ISOLATION HOSPITAL

Property Committee Went Into the Matter Last Night Boards Were Appointed---The Supplies Needed for the New Building Are Dealt With.

The regular meeting of the Property committee, was held in the committee rooms last evening, with Ald. Duncan in the chair.

Ald. Duncan said that it had been referred to the Property committee to purchase the furniture and equipment for the new Hospital, and he wished them to deal with this question first. It was suggested that the goods be purchased from different stores, dividing it equally among them. This was decided upon.

Ald. Morgan moved, seconded by Ald. Bradburn, that Ald. Brown, Ald. Duncan, Miss Mowry, Matron, and Dr. McPherson be appointed as the committee to purchase the equipment for the Isolation Hospital.—Carried.

Ald. Duncan thought that it would be better to have a Board appointed to look after the Hospital Staff, and that a Doctor be appointed to the Board.

Ald. Bradburn moved, seconded by Ald. Brown, that Mayor Morrow, Ald. Duncan and a Physician, appointed by the medical men of the city, be the Board to look after the management of the Hospital.—Carried.

It was suggested that the Board have the authority to dismiss nurses, etc. It was decided to discuss this at a later date.

Dr. McPerson then read a list of the necessary supplies and furniture for the equipment of the Hospital. He said that there would be eight beds and twelve cots, but that supplies would be put in for twenty patients. He said that there would not be a very large supply of anything purchased, which could be purchased at a moment's notice. The total amount required for the equipment for the Hospital as given by Dr. McPherson was $2177, but only about $1400 will be spent now. It was decided by the committee, that the supplies could be purchased for less than the amount stated, it being the outside figure.

Moved by Ald. Brown, seconded by Ald. Morgan, that the Mayor and Dr. McPherson wait on the Nicholls Hospital Board.—Carried.

The weather strip question came up, but was allowed to drop until a later date.

Ald. Brown spoke of the garbage by-law. He said that the question should be gone into at once; he also thought that the police might do a little at looking after it. He was of the opinion that if a general plan was hit upon to dispose of the garbage, that it would not be nearly so expensive as it looked. He suggested that the expense be put in the taxes. It was suggested that the garbage question should be referred to a committee of the Whole Council.

Applications had been received by the committee from a man and woman for caretaker and cook, respectively, of the new hospital. These will be considered and discussed later.

THE BIBLE TERCENTENARY TO BE CELEBRATED MONDAY

Some Facts and Figures About the Circulation of the Scriptures---Interesting Facts That Are Not as Well Known as They Should Be.

The British and Foreign Bible Society is concerting plans to commemorate the tercentenary of the publication in 1611 of the authorised version of the English Bible.

To an Evening News representative the secretary, the Rev. J. H. Ritson, supplied the other day a mass of interesting facts and figures eloquent of the society's work in carrying the Scriptures to the uttermost corners of the earth.

"Up to last March," he said, "we had circulated 222,174,884 Bibles or parts thereof in 424 different and distinct languages. Last year established a record by the publication of 6,620,000 volumes and parts.

"Every working day we are sending out 20,000 volumes. Actually the gospel has been published up to date in no fewer than 530 different forms of human speech. The cost of carrying on this work is £250,000 a year."

Six new languages, it further appeared, have been added during the past few months, all reduced to written form expressly for the purpose of disseminating a knowledge of the gospel among little known and strange tribes.

Ongom is one of these languages, spoken by a Bantu tribe inhabiting the basin of the Gabun River in French Congo.

Another of the new languages is Namau, which is current in a part of British New Guinea and is employed by 40,000 cannibals.

Cannibalistic also are the habits of the Housilon and Ponerihouen tribes of New Caledonia, for whose enlightenment certain of the gospels have been recently translated.

Fiu, in which St. Matthew's gospel is also now being printed, is a dialect obtainable in Mwala, one of the Solomon Islands, while St. Luke is being issued in Raga, the language of the natives of Pentecost Island, in the South Pacific.

"We are now publishing the Scriptures," Mr Ritson pursued, "in the native tongues of seven-tenths of the human race.

"But there yet remains much work before us. How many languages are actually spoken in the world it is impossible to say with definiteness. I have seen the number estimated at two thousand. This leaves us substantial scope for further endeavor.

"In fact, we calculate that there are 450,000,000 people to whom the Bible remains to this day a sealed book, because it has not yet been published in the language they understand.

"For Canada one of our newest departures is to issue the Scriptures in English and foreign languages in parallel columns. These volumes are intended for immigrants. It may surprise the majority of Londoners to learn that the newcomers to Canada speak no fewer than eighty different languages.

"Therefore, from the new publication these people not only gain a knowledge of Holy Writ, but also some acquaintance with English, while, incidentally, the result must tend towards the unification of the Empire."

STRANGE AND UNCOUTH LANGUAGES

The difficulties surmounted by the translators of the Scriptures into as many strange and uncouth languages—difficulties which were conquered, in some cases, only after thirty or forty years of hard work under conditions threatening to health and life—were abundantly demonstrated to our representative.

St. Mark's gospel may now be read by the natives of Lengua, in Paraguay. Many of the words are of amazing length, and would even puzzle the compatriots of Lloyd-George.

Eighteen, for example, is "Sohogemek-waktlila - mok - eminik - ikpithmuk," and the simple word "butter" becomes "Waitkyanamaukukiskminik-ikpithmuk," which means literally "the grease of the juice of the udder of the cow." Obviously the learning of German is child's play compared with acquiring an acquaintance with Lengua.

No other book ever published has approached the present circulation of the Bible. The first modern work of which half a million copies were sold was "Queen Victoria's "Leaves from the Journal of our Life in the Highlands."

Authorities estimate that 24,000,000 volumes of the works of Charles Dickens have passed into circulation. Of the novels written by Mrs. Henry Wood her publishers state that over 5,000,000 copies have been sold.

Impressive though these figures are, they look almost insignificant by the side of the 15,000,000 new copies of the Scriptures which, as Mr. Ritson pointed out, are issued every year by the British and Foreign Bible Society and kindred organisations. The Scriptures now lie open to seven persons out of every ten who are alive to-day.

In the society's library at the headquarters in Queen Victoria Street—a remarkable library consisting solely of 14,000 copies of the Scriptures in 530 different languages—our representative was shown many treasures ,some curious and many of them priceless.

There one may see a blood-stained gospel which belonged to a teacher in Urea, one of the Loyalty Islands, who was reading it when the natives stabbed him to death.

There also is the first book ever published by the society—St. John's Gospel in Mohawk, printed in 1804.

Then there is a New Testament issued for the Indians of Massachusetts in 1661—a book which no living person is able to read, because the tribe which spoke the language has entirely disappeared.

And amidst all these unpurchasable possessions reposes a scrap of cheese in an air-tight box, which odd "coin" was exchanged by a poor native of Mongolia for a copy of the Scriptures.

Already a sub-committee of the society has been appointed to devise a great scheme for the commemoration of the tercentenary.

FINE WAS HEAVY

George Lipsett Convicted of Unlawfully Allowing Liquor to be Consumed on His Premises —Fined $50 and Costs

POLICE COURT TO-DAY

Judgment was given in the police court this morning in the case of George Lipsett, who appeared in the court of Feb. 2nd, charged with having unlawfully allowed liquor to be consumed on his premises, which were not duly licensed for that purpose. Mr. Lipsett was fined $50.00 for the said offence, with $3.75 costs, making a total of $53.75. The alternative of this fine was one month in gaol. He argued that as it was the first offence, that a minimum fine should be imposed, but His Worship, Magistrate Dumble would not change his judgment, as he wanted this to be a lesson to the accused.

The fine of $20.00 and costs which was imposed on Mr. Patrick Hogan, in the police court on Jan. 31st, was changed to $100.00, owing to a mistake. Mr. Hogan was charged with selling liquor in illegal quantities. He was charged with having sold two quarts, and the largest quantity for a hotel man is less than one quart. The new act which was passed recently in Parliament, places the lowest fine for this offence at $100.00.

DEBATE ON THE TREATY

Examiner Special.

OTTAWA, FEB. 9.—It is expected that the debate on the reciprocity negotiations this afternoon will develop something definite as to the tactics of both parties in reference to the important subject. It is probable that the Opposition will permit the bill to go on to the committee stage without serious opposition. This would give more opportunity for debate in committee. Henri Bourassa has arrived and will likely make things interesting.

GETS DIVORCE

OTTAWA, DEC. 9.—In the Senate committee on Wednesday, the 8th of February, the application of Mrs. Dolly Stapleton for a divorce from her husband, Mr. Harry Stapleton, of Peterborough, came up. After hearing the evidence the committee decided to reoprt favourably upon the application and granted the relief applied for.

Mr. Godfrey, Toronto, appeared for Mrs. Stapleton, and Mr. McGee, of Ottawa, was present on behalf of Mr. Stapleton.

THURSDAY, FEB. 9, 1911

SIR JOHN, TOO.

The present proposed trade agreement between Canada and the United States is something that cannot be judged off-hand on its merits. It demands and merits careful study for an intelligent understanding. But it does not need much reflection to decide upon some things it would not do. Some newspapers grow hysterical and break out in a red rash of flags over the utter and absolute disloyalty, empire-wrecking, and desolation that attend of even the thinking of exchanging farm products by two contiguous countries. Even some parsons with more partizanship than gospel zeal, desecrate their pulpits with diatribes against the trade agreement. It is denounced as radical, un-Tory, anti-National policy, and something that must make the revered bones of Sir John Macdonald rattle in the grave. Sir John, it is declared, would never have dreamed of even discussing it. Yet, in 1891, Sir John went to the country on a reciprocity proposal as broad as the present agreement, and that it was not effectuated was not because he did not favour it. He did not consider such an agreement would be hostile to British connection, or even harmful to his political pet, the "National Policy." On this page is reprinted an article from that staunch, but fair-minded Conservative journal, the Ottawa Citizen, giving the history of Sir John Macdonald's attempt to secure a reciprocity treaty with the United Statese on the same general conditions as the present pending trade agreement.

RECIPROCITY.

The Examiner has received from the publishers, Biggar-Wilson, Limited, Toronto, a copy of an interesting brochure of forty pages, on the subject of "Reciprocity." It is written by Mr. E. G. Biggar, and is a timely contribution to the literature, tending to give intelligent conceptions of the underlying and influencing principles that apply to the pending trade agreement between Canada and the United States. The writer is clear and simple language, sketches the history of reciprocity as affecting the international trade relations of Great Britain, Canada and the United States. The book goes on to deal with the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854-66, between this country and the United States; how its negotiation was brought about, its effects, and how it came ot be abrogated, and cease to exist, as it did, on St. Patrick's Day, 1866. A few lucid pages are devoted to the economic aspects of trade treaties in protectionist countries. The writer deals with his subject in a moderate and dispassionate way, giving more attention to underlying principles than consideration of concrete political and economic results. The pamphlet was written before the result of the recent negotiations had been announced; so that it is, in no sense, a criticism of the proposed agreement. But a careful perusal of Mr. Biggars' "Reciprocity' is due from those who would have a clear understanding of the conditions and circumstances, which will assist in forming a judgment on broad lines of the agreement now under advisement by he legislative bodies of this country and the United States.

A SANE MOMENT.

It is a rare discovery to find a Conservative journal, or politician dealing with the trade agreement on its merits and expressing opinions; as a rule there is nothing but invective, denunciation, flag-waving and hysterical outbreak entirely foreign to the subject. The Kincardine Review, Conservative, published by Col. Clarke, M.P.P., with the Ottawa Citizen are exceptions who do not see in the proposed trade agreement, annexation empire-splitting and the flag trailing in the dust. In discussing the agreement, instead of denouncing it without discussion, Col Clarke's paper says:

"There is much in the new tariff arrangement between Canada and the United States to commend it, and we do not believe the interests which are said to be 'hard hit' will suffer much. Large business concerns are sometimes very timid and prone to cry before they are hurt. The installation of the new schedule will, of course, make many changes, and may temporarily disarrange business, but conditions will adjust themselves, and then commerce will readily adjust itself to the new conditoins. Some business men who are now most alarmed may find themselves greatly benefitted."

That is, of course, only the opinion of the Kincardine Review. Whether one agrees with it or not, it shows a disposition to treat on its merits a trade proposal, which stands to mean so much to Canada and Canadians. It shows that there are one or two Conservative journals that have a same moment.

MISPLACED RELIGION.

It is reported that Archbishop Bruchesi, of Montreal, and other bishops are taking or have taken, steps to interdict priests under their jurisdiction from interfering in politics. They must be right, for they can well be supposed to know what is best for their people in the matter of religion. In this country, as in any others, under democratic institutions, the separation of religious considerations and the state is the better thing. Religion, with its tremendous unlifting and reforming force, may well operate upon the state, through its influence on individual citizens, the component elements of the state. But to cast religion into the muddy stream of politics, especially party politics, is to degrade it from its sublime function as a moulding influence in human lives, in inspiring high ideals, and harmony and union of citizenship in common aims on grounds upon which all can stand. We need the essentials to this spirit in Quebec; we need them in Ontario; we need them in Peterborough. We need them when religion is degraded by being used as a tool to advance party interests; when things are done in its name and in the pretended interest of religion, that tend to undo all that legitimate religious influence is capable of accomplishing—to destroy the harmony of citizenship and ignore the principles of fair play and equal rights in the eye of the law, which is the proud boast of British subjects, and founded upon the religion that inspires the principle which has made Britain the greatest instrument of true freedom, true civilization and live progress in the world. We have in civic circles, influences at work, subversive of every principle of British fair play, and destructive of every good, that these principles, honestly applied, would be effective in achieving. Whatever motive is asserted, whatever interests of religion are put forward as the plea for actions hostile to the first principles of religion, behind all, as the real influencing and suggesting force, is the aim to promote the interests of a political party. Even the pulpit is prostitated, perhaps unconsciously, but as a matter of fact, effectively, to the same end. Whether knowingly or otherwise, it is made a catspaw in the game of political partizanship. These conditions are dangerous and destructive of the peace and harmony, that are necessary to the realization of the ideals of citizenship; destructive of the conditions that promote material prosperity, facilitate business operations and harmonize relations of citizenship which with mutual tolerance can be maintained to mutual benefit. Tolerance is as much the fruit of true religion as intolerance is the child of—evil. The religion—or rather its acolytes—is warped and perverted, whose name is used to do the works of darkness. Protestantism, regarded as the synonyom of freedom of conscience, and liberty of belief and equality of all men before the law, ceases to be Protestantism, when it penalizes what its professes to preserve, and denies the rights it is its boast and glory to give.

Reciprocity And The National Policy Not Held Incompatible By Sir John

(Ottawa Citizen (Conservative.)

The last definite stand of the Conservative party on the reciprocity issue, it is worth nothing at this juncture, was occasioned by the negotiations entered into by this country, through the medium of the British government, with the United States in 1891. These proposals, looking to the extension of Canada's commerce with the republic, emanated from the administration of the day, that of Sir John Macdonald, and were considered of sumcient importance to justify an appeal to the country before further steps were taken in the settlement of the dinerent questions inseparable from such an understanding.

The sixth parliament was dissolved in February, 1891, and in an official announcement the administration made public the correspondence between the Governor-General, Lord Stanley, and the Secretary of State for the Colonies bearing on the proposed negotiations. Mr. Blaine, for the United States, had previously requested a general summary of the points upon which the agreement might be based. Lord Stanley wrote the Secretary for the Colonies as follows:

Government House,
Ottawa, 13th December, 1890.

My Lord,—I have the honour to send to Your Lordship to-day a telegraphic message in cipher, of which the following is the substance.

With reference to my telegram of the 10th instant this Government is desirous to propose a Joint Commission such as that of 1871, with authority to deal without limitation and to prepare a treaty respecting the following subjects.

1. Renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, with the modifications required by altered circumstances of both countries, and with the extensions deemed by the Commission to be in the interests of Canada and the United States.

2. Reconsideration of Treaty of 1888, with respect to the Atlantic fisheries with the aim of securing the free admission into United States markets of Canadian fishery products in return for facilities to be granted to United tSates fishermen, to buy bait and supplies and to tranship cargoes in Canada. All such privileges to be be mutual.

3. Protection of mackerel and other fisheries on the Atlantic Ocean and in inland waters also.

4. Relaxation of the seaboard coasting laws of the two countries.

5. Relaxation of the coasting laws of the two countries on the inland waters dividing Canada from the United States.

6. Mutual salvage and saving of wrecked vessels.

7. Arrangements for settling boundary between Canada and Alaska.

The scope of the proposed negotiations, it will be seen, was rather comprehensive, but the administration of the day was freely prepared to discuss the issue in its entirety. It was maintained that such a discussion was in no way inconsistent with the time honoured platform of the party, the so-called National Policy; and in this case the proposed reciprocity was mutual and not unrestricted, and that trade of this nature on a fair and equitable basis would be to the mutual advantage of the two countries.

The important clause in the proposed agreement was undoubtedly the resumption of the relations between Canada and the United States created by the treaty of 1854. It is interesting to recall that in the treaty of 1854 the reciprocal free list section read as follows:

It is agreed that the articles enumerated in the schedule hereunto annexed, being the growth and produce of the aforesaid British colonies, or of the United tSates, shall be admitted into each country respectively free of duty:

SCHEDULE.

Grain, flour and bread stuffs of all kinds; animals of all kinds; fresh, smoked and salted meats; cottonwool, seeds and vegetables; undried fruits; dried fruits; fish of all kinds; products of fish and all other creatures living in the water; poultry, eggs, hides ,furs, skins, or tails undressed; stone or marble in its crude or unwrought state; slate, butter, cheese, tallow, lard, horns, manures, ores of metals of all kinds; coal, pitch, tar, turpentine, ashes; timber and lumber of all kinds, round, hewed and sawed unmanufactured in whole or in part; firewood, plants, shrubs and trees, pelts, wool, fish oil, rice, broomcorn and bark, gypsum, ground or unground, hewn or wrought or unwrought burr or grindstones, unmanufactured; unmanufactured tobacco rags,

The free list of 1854 and that proposed to-day show distinctive differences and modifications occasioned by the altered circumstances of both countries, yet a comparison of the schedules is instructive. Among the items on which the tariff duties are now to be abolished are cattle, horses and mules, swine, sheep and lambs, poultry dead and alive, wheat, rice, oats, barley, buckwheat, beans, dried peas, potatoes, butter, cheese, milk, cream, eggs, honey, fresh and several varieties of dried fruits. Among the miscellaneous articles of importance other than foodstuffs on which duties are entirely removed by both countries are hay, lumber, coke, certain classes of steel rods, typecasting and typecasting machines, cottonseed oil, railroad ties, telegraph poles, wooden staves, pickets and palings. In meats of various sorts although the duties are not entirely removed, there are very material reductions, while flour will bear a duty of 40 cents per barrel on both sides of the line, and oatmeal 50 cents per 100 pounds.

The treaty of 1854 and the agreement now suggested are practically along similar lines. And even in 1891 there was not an entire absence of the British preference question, for the argument advanced by the Conservative party in advocating the reciprocity here outlined, as against that supposed to be contemplated by the Liberals, was that the latter meant the adoption of the McKinley bill against Great Britain and the rest of the world. Speaking at the Albany club in Toronto a few days after the dissolution of the house, Sir John Macdonald emphatically declared that the policy introduced in 1878 would be adhered to in every detail.

The framers of the National Policy and the successful advocates of the protective principle in this country from 1878 to 1896 evidently did not consider the reciprocity treaty of 1854 a violation of that principle They did not consider their own proposal of 1891 a violation of the principle nor did they consider such a proposition a menace to the imperial connection, notwithstanding the McKinley bill.

Yet the Montreal Star in an appeal that cannot be construed as anything but hysterical, in calling upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier to "save Canada," closes with the following words:

"This is not a business matter he is considering; but the political fate of Canada. In the seat of Sir John A. Macdonald, with the eyes of the empire-builders of history on him with all the future waiting to award its judgment, he is deciding for or against the annexation of Canada to the American Union."

Bad Case of Eczema Cured by Zam-Buk

Another case of the healing power of Zam-Buk, in cases of eczema, is to hand from Winnipeg, Mrs. H. Cross, of 176 McIntosh Ave., Elmwood, is the subject, and gives the following facts, with a view to leading other sufferers to a means of cure:

"For five years," she says, "I was terribly afflicted with eczema on my legs, and despite all the doctoring and numerous remedies I tried, I seemed unable to get relief. The disease first started with watery blisters, which burned and smarted very much. The pustules then spread and formed sores These were irritable and very painful. One blister was no sooner rubbed—or I might say touched—than another started.

"They soon spread over both limbs and I suffered much inconvenience. I tried various remedies, as they were recommended, but could find no relief. Ordinary salves and ointments seemed unequal to my case.

"At last a friend suggested my using Zam-Buk. I acted on this advice and began the Zam-Buk treatment. A few applications gave me considerable ease, and the burning, smarting pains were reduced. I persevered with the balm, and in the course of a week the disease was under control and the sores healing. From that time forward I continued to improve, and the sores, too, became less and less troublesome, until in a wonderfully short time, considering the seriousness of my case and the long time I had been suffering, Zam-Buk worked a complete cure."

Such is the nature of the great cures which Zam-Buk is daily effecting. Purely herbal in composition, this great balm is a sure cure for all skin diseases, cold sores, chapped hands, frost bite, ulcers, blood poisoning, varicose sores, piles, scalp sores, ringworm, inflamed patches, babies' eruptions and chapped places, cuts, burns and bruises. All druggists and stores sell at 50c. box or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price. Refuse harmful imitations and substitutes.

A GREAT RAILWAY SYSTEM

Hardly a town, village or city in Ontario that does not receive daily benefit from the operation of the Grand Trunk Railway System, and, considering the net work of Branch line connections, it is wonderful with what regularity trains are run. Not only is a good service provided between points in Ontario, but this line also reaches nearly all the important cities of Michigan, viz: Detroit, Flint, Saginaw, Bay City, Lansing, Battle Creek, Jackson, Grand Rapids and Muskegon, South Bend, Ind., and the second City in America, viz., Chicago, Ill., the gateway to the North West, West and South, bringing Ontario in close connection. On the East, the Grand Trunk connects Ontario with Montreal, Quebec, the Maritime Provinces and Boston, Mass.

With a double-track line all the way from Chicago to Montreal, and also to Niagara Falls, connecting with Lehigh Valley for New York, the Grand Trunk reaches out in all directions for your patronage, and well deserves it, for its vestibule coaches, Parlour and Dining cars and modern Pullmans, give the service desired.

SCORE ON TUESDAY DID NOT INDICATE THE PLAY

Kingston Papers Say That the Grillers Were the Hardest Problem the Frontenacs Have Had to Solve in Their Sporting Career---Their Impressions of the Match.

The Kingston Standard says of Tuesday's game:

The speedy little Frontenacs, junior champions of the Dominion of Canada, and pride of all Kingston, added another septette of scalps to their belts last night, when, at Peterborough they took the husky Grillers of that city into camp by a score of 11 to 4, the half-time score being 5 to 1. The contest was the first really stiff one that Jim Sutherland's speed boys have had this year, and they certainly came out of it with flags flying. Stacked up as they were against a speedy and heavy aggregation, who were urged and encouraged by several hundred rabid rooters, the plucky little locals held their heads like veterans and kept going all the time with the result that the inevitable happened and they won out by a splendid margin of seven goals on an ice surface much smaller than that on which they are accustomed to perform.

At that, however, the score can scarcely be taken as an indication of the play. The Grillers certainly proved a surprise to local dopesters, who had figured on a much more easily earned victory. In fact, for the first ten minutes of the game, honours were about even, with no goals scored. During that period, the several hundred spectators were treated to as perfect an exhibition of combined and individual hockey as one could wish to see. Both teams were determined to break in first on the scoring list, and their efforts to succeed were productive of a stellar and scintillating brand of hockey. When at last Frontenacs did open the ball, Millan doing the trick, the champions were not slow in following up their advantage, and for the remainder of the half, in fact for the remainder of the game, the final result was never in doubt, although to the Grillers' credit it must be said that they stayed gamely to the finish and kept the Kingston youths right up on their toes until the closing gong.

How Grillers Shaped.

Outside of all that, the Peterborough youths showed class all through, and are just about as hard a proposition as the champions have solved in their sporting history. They are fast individually and pull off some beautiful combination stunts which give hostile rooters symptoms of heart palpitations. Frontenacs kept down the scoring, which is bound to result from such rushes by the safe expedient of checking back fast and continuously, while the rushing Frontenac defence, when they intercepted the puss, got away at a clip which took their opponents off their feet. Heffernan was probably the most spectacular man on the Grillers, in fact, he and Reynolds were a hard defence to bore through. And their goal tender, Patterson, must not be overlooked. As one ardent Frontenac fan remarked, "He is either a phenom, or has horseshoes hanging all over him." He surely handled some beautiful shots a la Raymo. Those who saw last night's game will surely be present when the rivals meet again next Friday, and "some" game may well be expected.

Local bettors who accompanied the team with about $1,000 "in their jeans," were much disappointed. Grillers' financial supporters were distinguished by their absence. Only about $160 was placed and that at two or three to one on the Frontenacs. Other ardent locals wagered even money the champions would win by four goals. Several two to one bets were made that Frontenacs would score the first goal. All local bettors won.

"Bouncer" Brouse was the only one to suffer any disfigurement and that occurred quite accidentally. He was rushing up behind Hunt when the latter swung his stick, striking his side-partner between the eyes, inflicting a bad bruise and discolouring his eyes. 'Bouncer' was rendered unconscious, but as soon as he came to, pluckily resumed the game. Dr. Gallivan, a former Kingstonian, attended his injury. On his arrival home, the injured player was examined by a local specialist, who expressed some fears that the sight of one eye might be affected. Nothing definite will be known, however, until to-morrow.

A regrettable incident of the game occurred near the close of the second half. Al. Davidson was skating along the ice near the bnak when one of the "overhead" spectators made a swing at "Scottie's" head. Not relishing this form of appreciation the Frontenac's doughty captain reached for his would-be assailant with his stick, connecting with the latter's scalp and inflicting a neat gash before he could dodge out of reach. The sequel came a few minutes later when another Peterborough hoodlum aimed an empty whiskey flask at Scottie's head. He missed the mark but the game was stopped to remove the fragments of glass.

The Kingston Whig says:

At Peterborough, on Tuesday night, the plucky young Kingston Frontenacs, junior hockey champions of Canada, added another laurel wreath to their present large collection, by defeating the husky team of that city in the first O.H.A. semi-finals, by a score of 11 to 4. The game was a cracker-jack from whistle to whistle. Both sides started off at so fast a clip that the spectators were amazed. Such rushes, checking and snappy stick handling has rarely been seen on any ice. Peterborough's team had it all over Frontenacs in weight, and had a bunch of speed also, but the little Kingston champions were there with the "hockey head" and tricky plays which off-set their opponents' weight.

For the first fifteen minutes of play it was about an even break, with each team straining every nerve to get the first goal and having many a straight shot turned to one side, by the goal tenders.

In the second half it was expected that Peterborough would make a whirlwind finish. This was certainly their intention, but unfortunately for them the second half is usually where the Frontenacs do a little tearing off of garrison finishes themselves, so it happened that before the second half had finished, Frontenacs had notched six goals more, while the Grillers added just one half of that number. The score does not by any means indicate the play. The teams are very evenly matched, Peterborough having the weight and speed also. The return game on Friday night, should be the hockey treat of the season.

For Peterborough, their big, heavy defence men, Reynolds and Heffernan, were very much in the limelight and play a dandy game. Heffernan being in the "Al" Davidson class, and that's going some. Patterson, in goal, had a busy time and stopped dozens of sure shots. This player's work was exceptionally clever. Coughlin, at rover, was the pick of the forwards, but he had close competitors in his other companions on the line of attack. Referee Harvey Sproule, of Toronto, officiated in a fair and unbiased manner, that was received with approval by both teams.

BELLEVILLE'S VIEWS OF THE SUDDEN DEATH GAME

One of the Most Exciting and Hardest Fought Games in the History of the O.H.A. is What the Intelligencer Man Thought of the Struggle.

The Belleville Intelligencer has the following to say of Monday's game:

Belleville was fortunate in being selected as the place for the sudden death game between the Trenton and Peterborough intermediate hockey teams for the championship of the district, as the game was one which will go down in history. It was the hardest fought and most evenly contested game, with possibly one exception, in the annals of the O.H.A., and will never be forgotten by those who witnessed it, as the well-trained athletes struggled for almost three hours, with, of course, the necessary intermissions, before a decision could be reached. There have been many more artistic games of hockey played in Belleville than that of last night, but never one in which the teams were so evenly matched, and in which the players had to strive so long for victory.

THE PRELIMINARIES

It was like old times in the rotunda of Hotel Quinte—the times when Belleville's famous Intermediates were besting everything in sight. There was a big crowd, to which Peterborough and Trenton had contributed about equal numbers, a buzz of conversation and quiet offers of bets at odds of 10 to 8 on Peterborough, which found ready takers. It was argued on the one hand that the Peterboroughs, having beaten Trenton 13-4, they could not lose, but on the other hand, the Peterboroughs, having lost the services of Denison and Trenton having gained those of A. Armstrong, the balance had been thereby turned in favor of our nearest neighbors. By and by a numerous contingent from Peterborough, who had arrived by special train, thronged in and soon all adjourned to the Arena, in which the contest was to take place.

The rink was crowded—the attendance being about the largest of the season, and sympathy seemed to be about equally divided. Peterborough had sent down, as stated above, a big crowd, but so had Trenton, every available vehicle in that town having been brought into requisition and packed to capacity. Many were provided with buzzers and other noise-makers, and used them industriously, while cheers and counter-cheers rang through the vast building.

The Trentons were the firstto show up and exhibited some fast and skilful work, which boomed their stock in the opinion of the betting men, but a long interval was passed in waiting for the Petes, during which there was much animated discussion as to the probable outcome of the encounter.

THE GAME

At last, shortly before 9 o'clock, they appeared for their preliminary, and were vociferously greeted. They found the ice in perfect condition, and showed a lot of speed. Finally, after Referee Whitehead had lined them up, the puck was dropped between the sticks at 9.07 and the game was on. It was do-or-die with both teams, and swift work, hard checking and fairly skilful stick handling characterized the play, which was very equally divided and remarkably clean under the exciting circumstances. As to speed, there was little or no choice, while combination cut virtually no figure, the checking being too close for that, but it was observable that Trenton had by far the most shots on goal. For twenty minutes there was nothing doing in the way of scoring; then Armstrong netted a nice shot, and the Trentonians sent up a great shout of triumph. But their delight was not of long duration. The play had become rougher and several players were sent to the fence, among them two Trenton men, in whose absence Peterborough scored. Two minutes later Trenton tallied once more, but after an equal interval Peterborough evened up, and the score was:

Trenton 2
Peterborough 2

The second period was barren of result, although Peterborough claimed a goal which was not allowed, and Trenton's goal was several times in danger.

EXTRA TIME

As the tie had to be played off, the yearied puck-chasers now had to play five minutes each way, which they did without result. Then they played another similar period, but without scoring, both goal men making many sensational stops. They then retired for a rub-down and a rest, and again they faced each other for another ten minutes' play. There was again nothing doing in the first five minutes, but about two minutes before time was up, and as the clock struck midnight, Palmer made a fine rush and a swift shot, and Trenton secured another goal. No further scoring was done, and Trenton, amid the loud cheers from the great throng, were hailed the victors by the following score:

Trenton 3
Peterborough 2

The great interest taken by the crowd in the game was manifested by the fact that of all the big crowd not more than twenty-five left before the finish, which was about 12.05.

HARD LUCK HAUNTED PETERBORO' INTERMEDIATES

District Competition Has Been a Series of Misfortunes, Winding Up With a Stolen Game at Belleville---Jinx Has Been Working Overtime.

If any hockey team has travelled in harder luck than the Peterborough Club this year, nothing has been heard of them down in this section. Now, don't take us up wrong on this, gentle reader; this is not a yap from a team sore at being beaten but is a mere statement of facts. From the start of the season to the robbery at Belleville the other night, the evil genius of the club has been bobbing up at every opportunity. The list of misfortunes dates from New Year's night. An exhibition game was arranged with the senior Argonauts of Toronto, and the Petes were so unlucky as to have to meet the big fellows in the slush when they are at their best, and as a result sustained a beating. It was only a practise game and the loss did not matter, but during the game Charlie Ray, the Petes' captain, got a skate jabbed into his foot and went on the hospital list for two weeks. One score for the jinx. Two nights later in practise Percy Bond stopped a shot with his hand and the hodoo got in his work again, Bond sustaining a broken thumb. Thus for the opening game at Cobourg Ray was out of the game altogether and Bond had to play wit hhis thumb bound in splints. The Petes won a hard-fought victory by a score of 9 to 7, but the jinx was working just the same. During the fray Kelly received a slash over the knee that laid him up all week, the injured member being swollen to twice the size of the other. This with the Trenton game right at hand. Then it was found impossible to secure Denison for the game and the Petes went down to Trenton with a crippled team and were beaten a mile by 18 to 4. For a wonder, everything went along smoothly for a while after this. A certificate was obtained for Park; Glover got into the game, and the locals everlastingly walloped Trenton when they came up for the return engagement. Mr. Bad Luck did not seem to have been at the game but he turned up next day in the shape of a protest from Trenton against Park. The O.H.A. sustained the protest, Park's certificate was cancelled, and the game ordered to be replayed. When the night for the game came Glover was on the sick list but the team went out and trimmed Trenton worse than before. Here is where the fine Italian hand of the Hard Luck promoter was once more in evidence. Early in the struggle Kelly badly sprained his hand to such an extent that he had to practically play with one hand. Bad enough to start with but the hodoo had a field day on Monday. His crowning exploit was when the faculty of Trinity College School refused to give Fred Denison, the Petes star cover-point, permission to play. With the district depending upon the result of the sudden death game, the Petes were forced to go into the game without Denison or Glover, and with Kelly so badly hurt that it was almost cruelty to ask him to play. Even then the jinx was not satisfied. The Petes discouraged by the non-appearance of Denison, did not lose their heart and went out with the determination to win anyway. Then, when they had the game won they were robbed off the laurels by a dishonest goal umpire There's no possible doubt about the fact that Peterborough scored what should have been the winning goal in the second half. Scores of independent people, Belleville residents, travellers, even Trenton supporters, and men who had bet on the Easterners, stated that the puck was in the nets behind McGiffin. The Trenton team know that that goal scored and that when they finally scored a goal after thirty minutes over time, they were getting credit for a victory that was not theirs. There was no use protesting the game on that account as the O.H.A. would not consider the case but it seems that the rules should be amended in order that a club might have some redress in a case of this kind. If a partizan goal umpire can offset the work of the opposing team, and there is no remedy under the rules, it is time for some kind of a change. But nix on the glow-worm, Lena, they got away with it, and here's hoping they get robbed the same way themselves before the season is far advanced.

BELLEVILLE PRO TEAM MAY PLAY GAME HERE

Arrangements are being made by which the Belleville professional team of the Eastern Ontario Professional League may finish out its schedule at Brock street rink. The Belleville management has made the proposition and it will likely be carried out. It is merely an arrangement by which the Belleville Club engages the rink here for their games. Nobody in Peterborough is interested in the scheme at all, as far as investing any money or having anything to do with the team. The men behind the Belleville team felt their team might draw better here and are making arrangements accordingly.

GRILLERS TO PLAY IN KINGSTON TO-MORROW

The Grillers will leave for Kingston to-morrow morning on the 8.20 G.T.R. train to play the return game with the Kingston Frontenacs. The local juniors are going down determined to give the junior champions a better game on their own ice than they did here. The youngsters practised last night and have made up their minds that Kingston will have to work all the way for to-morrow's game. The players who will make the trip will be Patterson, Reynolds, Heffernan, Coughlin, Hall, Anderson, Matthews and McMartin. Fred Kelly Alvin Sorel and Billy Breen are going down with the boys. All the juniors are asked to meet at 8 o'clock to-night in the hockey room at the rink for the purpose of making arrangements for the trip. Every member must be on hand.

Some Hockey Games That Were Hard To Lose

Naturally Monday night's herat-breaking struggle at Belleville has been the sole topic of conversation among the Peterborough players ever since and there have been some great fanning bees in the hockey room at the Brock street rink. It sure was a hard luck game to lose.

Fred Kelly said he only remembered one other occasion when defeat was so bitter. The Ingersoll team, of which he was a member, were in the finals for the district with London some years ago and towards the end of the game were one ahead. Two Ingersoll men were penalized and the orders were to kill time and hold the puck. With only five seconds left to play, however, the Ingersoll point man forgot his instructions and started a rush. He was checked ,lost the rubber, and London scored, tying up the game in the last few seconds, and winning out in the over-time.

Shot went through Nets

Percy Bond contributed another instance of hard luck. In 1906, Cobourg, Port Hope and Belleville juniors tied up the district. Cobourg disposed off Belleville in home and home games, and had a most thrilling series with Port Hope, their down fall coming as the result of a most peculiar circumstance. "Slick" Mulhall, the well-known Cobourg ball magnate, was the umpire. One of the Cobourg forwards broke away and going in on the defence, let drive a wicked shot. It looked to be going high and Mulhall instinctively turned away his head, and shielded his face with his arm. The puck struck the nets a couple of inches below the top bar and tore clean through but Mulhall did not see it, and Cobourg lost a well earned goal which would have tied up the game by reason of the action of their own goal umpire.

The same thing happened in Cobourg three years ago when the Strathconas were playing the lakeshore team. The game was about even up with both teams working hard, when Len Dobson got clean through on a combination rush and drove a beauty into the nets behing Patton the goal keeper. Herb McMillan was goal umpire and turned his head away when the shot came. As a result when he turned around again the Cobourg players had raked the rubber out of the nets. There was a dispute for a few moments but neither McMillan nor the referee, McCord, of Toronto, had seen the goal, and it was of course not counted.

Happened Last Year

Fans who saw the Collegiate-Markham game last year were present at the Grillers-Frontenacs battle Tuesday night and were struck with the coincidence about the disputed goal Last year when Markham and the Collegiate team met here in the second round of the junior O.H.A., the Markham team made a combined rush and shot, the rubber sliding across the mouth of the goal into the corner of the rink. The local players secured the puck and carried it to the other end and scored. As they were working up the rink with the rubber the Markham goal umpire hoisted his flag to signify that the Markham team had scored. The referee to the amazement of the crowd allowed the Markham score and refused to count the Peterborough goal. The reverse of this happened on Tuesday night. The Grillers shot at the Kingston nets and the umpire raised his flag. Referee Sproule over-ruled the decision without stopping the play and the Frontenacs went down practically unopposed and scored. The incident was a peculiar one but looks from here as if Sproule should have rang the bell and stopped the play. Naturally the Grillers seeing the flag waved thought they had scored and stopped playing.

"The Lottery Man"

BY RIDA JOHNSON-YOUNG

CHAPTER I.

The Man With An Idea.

Go westward from Fifth Avenue, along West Twelfth Street and you will find a row of pretty houses — some vine covered—all of them set far back from the sidewalk. They stand in mute, picturesque protest against an age of hustling against an era of fifty-family apartment buildings and grimy steel-ribbed skyscrapers. They are the least of their sort—a quaint reminder of the day when New York was not too busy to be a city of homes.

And one of these porched, front lawned dwellings—never mind which one—was Jack Wright's house. Jack Wright's name was not on the doorplate. And his name did not stand opposite the property's description on the city rolls. In fact, the only part of the four story building he actually rented and occupied was a four-room suite in the basement. Nevertheless, to dozens of newspapermen, artists, writers and good fellows in general, the whole edifice was known as "Jack Wright's" house.

Here dwelt Jack—traveler, dreamer, journalist, hack-writer. Here, with ready pen and readier wit, he first managed to shoo the wolf from the door.

Here, too, lived his mother — a dainty little wisp of a woman, who "kept house" in tabloid fashion for the big son she adored, entertained his host of friends and delighted them by her constant if unconscious use of slang she had picked up from Jack. As fragile and pretty as a bit of Dresden china was little Mrs. Wright, and the chosen chum and confidential adviser of her son's chums

It was one of these chums who stood ankle deep in the dooryard snow, about 11 o'clock one January evening, hammering at the frosted basement window. A passing policeman halted, leaned over the yard railing and peered curiously at the tall, fur-coated figure in the snow yard. A beam from a street lamp fell athwart the face of the man in the fur coat. The policeman looked again, then slouched on, muttering:

"Foxhall Peyton, the man that owns the Examiner! A millionaire and a clubman—and knocking at a basement window this time of night! Gee, but some folks has queer tastes!"

Meantime a light had been turned up in the front room of the basement. A woman's slim figure was silhouetted against the shade, and the window opened a few inches.

"Is that you, Jack?" asked a light little voice. "Have you lost your key again? You'll find—"

"No, Mrs. Wright," answered the man in the snow, "It's Foxey. May I come in?"

"Of course. You'll find the key under the mat. No, on the left-hand side. Unless Jack—"

He unlocked the door and passed from the darkness and keen chill of the outer night into a cosy living room. The apartment was furnished with an almost meager simplicity. Yet a warmth and brightness and general air of homelike comfort seemed to radiate from every corner toward the graceful little black-eyed woman who stood with outstretched hands to welcome the guest.

"This is a barbarous hour to call," apoligised Peyton out of his heavy coat. "But Jack told me to come at eleven. He isn't in yet, of course? He's never on time at an appointment. He says he makes it a rule not to be. He has figured out that he saves hours and hours every year by letting the other man do the waiting. But don't let me keep you up, Mrs. Wright, I can—"

"I never go to sleep till Jack comes home. Is it very cold, Foxey?"

"Glorious weather—for the Iceberg Trust. What a lucky chap Jack is? You've got his smoking jacket and slipers warming in front of the fire for him. And a hot supper, too? What wouldn't I give if I had a mother like you?"

"Well, I like that? What's the matter with your own mother?"

"'What's the matter' with her?" echoes Foxhall.

"A new ailment each week, and then a new cure. And, to fill up the spare time, a weird course of beauty cultures. That leaves her mighty little chance to get acquainted with her son. I just left her and the rest of them at a dance around the corner on Fifth Avenue and slipped over here to see Jack. He told me to meet him here at eleven and get a crackerjack story for our Sunday edition."

"At 11 o'clock Saturday night? Isn't that a bit late?"

"Not if the story's worth it. Maguire, my managing editor, would turn the office upside down for the right sort of beat."

"But if Jack has a story of that sort," protested Mrs. Wright, "I can't see why he should give it to the Examiner after the way Mr. Maguire's treated him. To think of his firing my boy and—"

"He had to. Jack got the paper into one glorious libel suit after another. And the climax came when he was left in charge and ran a scare head across the first page — 'Inhuman Case of Kidnapping in the Bronx'—over a story of a baby goat that went to sleep on the railroad tracks."

"Just the same," insisted Mrs. Wright, "if I were Jack I wouldn't be so easy as to give the Examiner a big story after—"

"He isn't giving it to us. I've bought it. I lent him $1,000 this morning to play some mysterious stock market tip he had. He said if the top won he'd pay me to-night. If it lost, he promised not only to drop speculating forever, but to give me a three-time winner story for the Sunday paper."

"It was white of you to lend Jack the money, Foxey. You've always been the best sort of friend to him. Even when he was working his way through college and you — with all your money—"

"Nonsense! That obligation's all been on the other side, I—"

"Hello, people!" broke in a voice from the doorway.

Like an amateur whirlwind Jack Wright dashed into the room, bodily picking up his laughingly protesting little mother, kissing her, turning to hail Peyton cordially, then hurrying over to the grate to war mhis numbed hands.

"The night that Washington crossed the Deleware," he observed, 'would feel like a prairie fire compared to this weather. How far—"

"How about that story, Jack?" interrupted Peyton. "Come across. It's late."

"Oh, yes," assented Jack. "The story. Of course.'

"Yes,' chimed in Mrs. Wright, seating herself in a rocker by the fire, "I want to hear it, too. Let me in on it."

"It isn't fit for your young ears, mother," laughed Jack. "Any more than your awful slang is fit for mine."

"That means it is something I wouldn't approve," retorted Mrs. Wright. "I shall stay and hear it."

Tenderly picking up his mother and her chair together in one swoop. Jack carried both to another room, deposited them on the floor, came back and shut the door.

"Well," asked Foxhall, anxiously, "what luck?"

"On that Wall Street tip? Rotten. They cleaned me out? And now I've got to keep my promise never to speculate again."

"You've got to keep still another promise," reminded Peyton. "The story."

"Oh, yes; the story," agreed Jack. "Well, I'm going to be married."

"Married? Who's the — the other lunatic?"

"I haven't an idea—yet. That's the story."

"The story!" snorted Peyton. "Do you suppose the Examiner's readers are interested in—"

"They will be," asserted Jack. "Listen to my idea; I've worked all my life for other people. I've turned in stories and schemes and suggestions that have coined money. But for other people. Not for me. I've travelled from the Arctic Circle to the Equator, but never could I pick up one dollar above my salary. My bank account is a circle with the rim rubbed off. If I should drop out to-morrow the little mother would have nothing to live on but a measly paid-up life insurance policy I bought with a stock market "killing two years ago. It's time I changed. And I'm going to make a barrel of money. That's where the story comes in. Want to hear it?"

"Fire away."

"To begin with, I believe that there are fully 50,000 unmarried women—young and old and neither—in this country who would gladly take a dollar chance on a fairly good looking, well-bred, well-educated young man, in other words, a dollar chance for a husband."

"Well, what of that?" queried the puzzled Foxhall.

"Just this: I'm going to put myself up for lottery."

"If it's meant for a joke, I don't think it's up to your average."

"It isn't a joke. I've been all over the world. I've had adventure, hair-breadth escapes, and, in short, I've been through all the sorts of experience that appeal to women. I'm more or less presentable — and I'm under thirty."

"When you're quite through reciting the catalogue of your charms I—"

"Listen. To-morrow morning let the Examiner announce something like this: "Young man, well educated, traveler, writer, etc., tired of adventurous existence, wants to settle down and marry; offers himself at $1 a chance to the women of America, and—"

The Stomach Needs Help

The Liver, Kidneys and Bowels Must Be Kept Active to Ensure Health

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

Not one person in a hundred can get along at this time of year, without using something to enliven the action of the liver, kidneys and bowels.

Too much eating of heavy artificial foods, too little outdoor exercise, this is the explanation.

The liver and kidneys are overworked in their efforts to remove the poisonous waste matter from the system. They fail and become torpid and clogged. The bowels become constipated and stomach derangements follow.

There is one medicine which will overcome this condition more certainly and more quickly than any other, and this is Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

This medicine gets the bowels in action at once and by awakening the liver and kidneys ensures the thorough cleansing of the filtering and excretory systems.

With the poisonous obstructions removed, the digestive system resumes its healthful condition, appetite improves, pains and aches disappear as well as irritability and depression.

You cannot imagine a more satisfactory treatment for biliousness, constipation, backache and kidney disease than Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

RECIPROCITY.

Some pilgrims went to Washington.
To talk on reciprocity;
Finance Fielding and Paterson
Wined and dined most sumptuously;
Uncle Sam, on the occasion,
Had Canadian puff pastry,
Pork and beans and ice cream taffy.
Chorus—There should.

The pilgrims never made mention,
While eating the good Johnny cakes,
About treaty obligation
On hitherto peaceful Great Lakes,
Nor anything in relation
To the Treaty of Panama;
Is there a scheme at Washington,
In conjunction with Ottawa?
Chorus—There should.

There should be a new election;
Why sell us like a lot of sheep?
There should be a new election,
Let all conscience rest in sleep.
If there's a pact at Washington,
In conjunction with Ottawa,
To dissolve British union,
By some reciprocity sway,
Why not make annunciation
In a just, honourable way.
British Navy dissolution,
Seem the key note at Ottawa.
Chorus—There should.

British Navy dissolution
By the Ottawa compact Clan,
Would be a sad ruination
To an Empire union plan.
There would be great tribulation,
And fighting between man and man
The Great Lakes would be the station,
To land troops of the Yankee gang.
Chorus—There should.

HIS UNCLE'S CHAMPION

A Short Story

My Dear Miss Bentley,—Bobbie's absence day before yesterday was obligatory. I do not see why he should have been compelled to remain after school. I trust it will not happen again. Respectfully yours,

Arthur J. Harding.

"There, I wonder how the new school marm will take that," soliloquised the rather young and overindulgent uncle. "Those old maids make me sick."

The Miss Bentley so harshly alluded to received the above note with indignation. Her brown eyes snapped dangerously as she re-read the words. It was too exasperating for anything, the little teacher thought, to be dictated to by some doting old father, who never knew how to take care of children. Bobbie was not kept because of his absence, but for the disturbance he caused in the school room by loudly lauding some heroic uncle of his, who, to quote Bobbie, "could fight any fellow in the room." But the explanation was not going to be given. She was here at Newtown to teach, not to be criticised and dictated to.

The note came at the close of a strenuous and very hard day. Her thoughts concerning the writer could easily be guessed by the manner in which she somewhat viciously put her books away, hurried into her coat, and put a very becoming little hat on a mass of wavy brown hair.

The air was cold and crisp and as she hurried along the pink tint in her cheeks turned to a rose and the annoyed look on her face soon faded away. Her daily walk always helped her to forget the cares and worries of the day.

The road to the skating pond looked especially alluring and she decided to take it and perhaps watch the skaters. The pond was quite crowded when she arrived and she watched the happy throng as they glided past her.

Suddenly a little fellow near by darted out on the ice in quest of his hat, which had been thrown away out on the pond by some mischievous boy. A skater coming along just at that time at a terrific speed, carshed into the little fellow. The momentum was so great it threw the little fellwas so great it threw the child and he lay on the ice, stunned by the fall. The crowd for an instant seemed paralyzed at the result of the accident, but Miss Bentley, quickly recovering herself, ran out on the ice and picked him up in her arms. It was Bobbie. The crowd began to gather around and made it hard for her. Then she heard someone say Mr. Harding was coming.

So she was to meet Bobbie's father so soon. The note of the afternoon loomed up before her, but when Mr. Harding at last reached them, her whole manner was of cool politeness. She was terribly surprised to find him so young and what made ehr even more provoked, he was actually good looking. He held out his hands for Bobbie, but she did not hand him over.

"He will be all right in a moment," she said, quietly; then glancing around, added: "Please get the crowd away; it will be much better for him."

Harding was quick to do her bidding. The crowd dispersed, he turned his attention to Bobbie and the girl.

"Hadn't we better get him home?" he asked, looking at the sweet face bending over Bobbie.

Miss Bentley was all attention to Bobbie. Harding was wondering, in between his anxious moments for his nephew, where this angel of loveliness dropped from. How kind and gentle she was to the boy; how sympathetic and affectionate; but she certainly made him feel as if he was a mere nothing whom she did not deign to notice. He could not understand why her expression changed so decidedly whenever she met his gaze. There was certainly something behind it all. He wondered if it was a case of mistaken identity. Harding knew positively that he had never met her before. It was preposterous, to even think if, after meeting such a dear girl, a person could ever forget her.

Just then Bobbie opened his eyes. He looked dazedly from Miss Bentley to Harding, then a delighted cry broke from him.

"Uncle Arthur, how did you know teacher?"

Miss Bentley started visibly, but hushed Bobbie quickly. Uncle Arthur never felt such a cold chill go through him. He thought of his note to the "school marm" and called himself all kinds of names for not minding his own business. Miss Bentley in the meantime was busy with her own thoughts; Bobbie had called him uncle and she had thought him a doting old father.

"I want to go home now," Bobbie's voice broke the awful silence. "And, Uncle Arthur, please make teacher come too; she's awful nice, and——"

"Why, Bobbie, boy," interrupted Harding, "Miss Bentley might object to our company because one of us was very rude to her. I don't think she will forgive him."

Bobbie looked from one to the other quite mystified, but Bobbie was an optimist.

"Oh, uncle, teacher's awful good, and I know she will come; won't you, teacher?"

Miss Bentley could not resist the pleading eyes and rather wistful little face.

"Yes, Bobbie, dear," she said smiling sweetly, "I will go as far as the house with you—and"—she hesitated—"your uncle, too."

Harding took Bobbie in his arms and gave him a surreptitious, though rather too strenuous, hug. Bobbie's teacher was just the kind of girl he had been looking for all these years, and he silently hoped he had found her at last.

Bobbie, having made sure of teacher's company, proceeded to fall asleep on Uncle Arthur's shoulder quite ignorant of the happiness he was bringing into the lives of the two he loved the most in all the world.—Boston Post.

WHY JOSEPH SHEEHAN IS AMERICA'S GREATEST TENOR

To those who have never heard Joseph Sheehan sing in the grand opera classics, it probably sounds far-stretched to make the broad statement, that he is America's greatest tenor, and they cannot be censured for taking that view, and remaining skeptical. But those who have had the unmistakable pleasure of hearing Mr. Sheehan, when he sang with the Savage Grand Opera Company, know that the aforesaid statement is entirely correct.

Joseph Sheehan who comes to the Grand Opera House next Tuesday, Feb. 14, heading his own company, known as the Sheehan English Grand Opera company, is a tenor of the first rank. His ability to sing both lyric and dramatic roles gives him a wonderful scope in his repertoire. When a member of the Savage company, he sang Wagnerian parts from "Tannhauser" to "Parsifal." Those who have heard his "Lohengrin" in Wagner's opera of the same name, say that his voice is marvelously suited for every requirement of the exacting role. He has sung Verdi's works from "Travatore" to the blood curdling "Othello," and he was the last tenor to sing the gigantic music allotted to the jealous Moor, in English, in Boston several years ago at the Tremont Theatre.

In Verdi's "Il Trovatore," which opera his company will present in this city, Mr. Sheehan will have ample opportunities to display his heroic as well as lyric style, and he sings the famous aria "Di Quella Pira," which closes the third act, in the original key, which very few tenors are capable of doing, ending with a full resonant tone on high "C."

The remainder of the principals are eminent artists, and include Miss Grayce Neilson, soprano; Miss Elaine De Sellem, contralto; Louis La Balle, baritone, and Maurice Macki, basso. There will be a splendid chorus of fifty artists, an augmented capable orchestra and a splendid performance is assured. The seat sale opens Saturday morning."

SOCIAL EVENING

The Knights of Columbus held a social evening last night, during which progressive euchre and dancing was indulged in. Miss Gordon won the lady's prize for progressive euchre while Mr. Carrol secured the gentleman's prize. During the evening a most enjoyable lunch was served by the well known cater. Mr. Potvin. Great credit is due to the committee in charge of the arrangements for the very enjoyable evening spent by those present. Among those present from outside were Mr. Kelly, of Norwood, Mr. Black and Mr. Brady, of Campbellford, and Mr. Brennan, of Belleville.

Funeral Of Late James Grady

The funeral of the late James Grady took place this morning from the family residence to St. Peter's Cathedral, where the services of high mass was conducted by Rev. Father McCauley. The Rev. Father O'Brien officiated at the grave. There were many beautiful floral designs, among them being a large cross from the Peterborough Collegiate Institute which goes to show the high esteem the deceased was held in by his friends and admirers. The pallbearers, were Mr. Frank Grady, Wm. Grady, Frank and Leo Cassidy, Cecil Wolf and James Malloy.

A TRAVEL TALK

A picture travel talk will be the attraction at hte Y. M. C. A. on Saturday night of this week. The trip will be from London to Rome and will be illustrated with sixty beautiful views. Mr. H. M. Gilchrist will give the lecture, which promises to be one of the most interesting ever given in the Association. This lecture will be free to men and will be given in the back parlour of the Association at 8 o'clock, sharp. At the close of the travel talk the Annual Sale of magazines will be held when those present will have an opportunity to buy magazines, the very be stof them, at ridiculously low prices. Many of these magazines come off the tables in as good condition as when the come from the stores and they are obtainable at half the price. Those wishing to look over the list may do so at the office of the General Secretary. The Travel Talk will be given to the boys in the afternoon.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

The T.A.A.C. senior team of Toronto will likely be here next week for an exhibition game with the Peterborough Intermediates. It is the intention of the Club to arrange a number of exhibition games for both seniors and juniors. Efforts will be made to have St. Michael's and Parkdale down for games with the intermediates and Teddy Mariott's Simcoes may be seen in action here against the juniors.

BOWLING

Yesterday was Ladies' Day at the Peterborough Bowling Alleys and a large crowd aws in attendance. The scores were good.

At the shooting gallery the scores were good also. Quite a large number of contestants attended.

A DESCRIPTION OF THE INVERLEA BRIDGE

An Interesting Article in the Contractors' Record by Mr. T. A. S. Hay, City Engineer---Conroy Bros Were the Contractors.

Contributed by T. A. S. Hay, City Engineer, Peterborough.

This bridge spans the River Otonabee in the line of Smith Street in the city of Peterborough, Ont., and replaces a wooden Howe truss bridge.

It consits of three arched spans of reinforced concrete. 100 feet centre to centre, or 94 feet clear, with abutments reaching well into the river banks on both sides and beyond the shore lines, making a total length of structure of 385 feet.

The arches were designed to sustain a maximum live load represented by a 15 ton road roller. The clear width between railings is 31 feet, sidewalk 5 feet wide on south side, a space 10 fet wide for single track street car line on north side, and 1r feet roadway between. The centre line of the bridge makes an angle of 72 degrees with the channel of the river. The intrados of arch is a two centre curve or 3 feet 9 inches, 120 feet radii and a rise of 12 feet. The extrados is a segment of a circle of 170 feet radius. The arches have a radial thickness of 22 inches at crown to 48 inches at the point of lesser radius, 45 feet from crown.

The west abutment rests on a compact mass of boulders and heavy gravel. The two channel piers and east abutment rest on a heavy bed of limestone rock. The footings of abutments and wing walls are carried up to 3 feet below normal level of water and thos eof channel piers to 5 feet. The width of footings of the wing walls is 5 feet 3 inches, of the abutments 1 2feet, and of the piers 9 feet 8 inches.

The piers above footings are battered 1 in 8 to 6 feet wide at top, with belt course extending 3 inches; bull-nosed ends, protected with 5-16 inch plate iron. Owing to the depth of water (6 to 16 feet) and speed of current, unwatering for foundations was not attempted, but the beds for footings were cleared of all loose materials and to a satisfactory bottom. Cribs of 10 by 10 inch close fitting timber lined with 1 inch vertical matched sheathing, were lowered into position, weighed down and filled concrete, deposited through a tube in 6 inch layers, well rammed, in which stone from 6 to 10 pounds weight were embedded.

The footings having been brought up to proper level, permission was obtained to lower the water sufficiently to set the forms and build up to belt course. Owing to inconvenience to power plants by loss of head, this part of the work had to be carried on as quickly as possible, as the time allowed for low of level water was limited to 14 days. The concrete in footings consists of one part cement to seven parts gravel and sand, and generally in all parts above footings the composition is the same

The false work for arches consisted of bents of 10 by 10 timber placed transversely with centre line of bridge and spaced 8 feet apart, centre to centre, with longitudinal stringers 4 feet apart on top, forming a deck level with spring line of arches. On this deck the centreing was erected, consisting of laminated rings of 2 inch plank, bolted together with a section of 10 by10 inches, supported on posts braced in both directions. On the rings was laid the lagging of 3 inch pine plank dressed and scribed to the radii of arches, all joints beink caulked. The concrete in arches consists of one part cement to six parts gravel and sand, built in voissoir sections, full width of bridge, commencing at spring of arch and working towards the centre and maintaining full depth.

The concrete in spandrel walls is composed of one part cement to seven parts gravel and stone. They are 18 inches thick at top, battered inside 1 in 4 and panelled outside 2 inches deep. The concrete in wing walls is of the same composition as spandrels. They are 18 inches thick at top, increasing by 9 inch steps at every 3 feet vertically.

The hand rail is composed of concrete one part cement to six parts gravel and sand. The part over arches is a balustrade of 6 by 8 inch balusters, with 6 inch spaces. That along the wing walls is solid, 8 inches thick. The base of railing is 16 inches wide by 15 inches deep. The cap is 12 by 8 inches. The railng is divided into sections by panelled pediments 2 feet wide by 4¼ feet long, projecting 4 inches beyond faces of railing, one over each abutment and pier. The rail is terminated at outer ends of wing walls with posts 18 by 18 inches.

The faces of walls are relieved by a sailing course on the line of intrados of arch and projecting 2 inches beyond face. The forms for all parts above water, except arches and handrailings, consisted of 2 inch pine plank, dressed, tongued, and grooved, and painted with soft soap. posts and braces being 4 by 4 inch pine, 30 inches apart.

All concrete above water was mixed and run as liquid as practicable to ensure filling. Expansion joints, tongue and groove, were made in spandrel walls and railings over each arch.

The reinforcing adopted throughout the structure consists of the Kahn System, manufactured by the Trussed Concrete Steel Company of Canada, Limited. The design conforming to the usual formula for parabolic arches (although more elliptic than parabolic as designed) each arch is computed to have a rise of only one-tenth of span or 9.40 feet from springing line to the intrados at the crown. The actual rise, however, is 12 feet, thus giving an additional factor of safety which more than takes care of the difference in assuming the arch to be parabolic.

The horizontal component of thrust of one arch is neutralised by that of the adjoining arch and the effect is a downward thrust on the piers. This result is only obtained when the spans are equal and under the same conditions of loading.

Owin gto the length of span it would have been practically impossible to have made the longitude steel reinforcing bars continuous throughout each arch. It was therefore important to enquire into the best position for splices in such members. Although it would be possible to splice two bars, to be embedded in concrete, so that the joint would be as strong as the bar, this is seldom done in practice. For this reason splices should be placed where the tension is least.

The severest loading of an arch of this type occurs when one-half (from centre to abutment or pier) is under full load ,while the other half is not loaded. Under these conditions the maximum tension occurs in the extrados at a distance of about one-third of the span from abutment (or pier) at the unloaded end. This, therefore, is a point where the longitudinal reinforcing bars in the extrados should not be spliced. Under a central load, tenson may be produced in these bars in the intrados of the arch, which is a point where no splicing should occur. In the design of this bridge the splices have been kept as far from these points as possible.

Owing to vibration caused by heavy moving loads, and the variations in stresses under varying conditons of loading, the danger of the reinforcing bars becomint loose in the concrete is provided against by the use of "Kahn" trussed bars. These form a perfect anchorage, having the long shear prongs bent into the body of the arch and attached rigidly to the main tension members.

The reinforcement of arches in intrados consists of 35 "Kahn" bars, 1 by 3 inches, and 12 inches centres, with prongs bent upwards 45 degrees; and in extrados 34 "Kahn" bars, 1 by 3 inches, 12 inches centres, with prongs bent downwards at same angle. These bars are 33 feet long, with splices 2½ feet long. They are placed with extreme angle of rit 3 inches from surface of finished concrete.

Arow of ¼ inch bars 32 feet long and 9 feet apart are placed inside and adjoining intrados bars, with the same for extrados bars, the latter placed over middle of space of lower row. Intrados bars extend to centre of abutment body and cross the corresponding bar of next span over pier and to 8 inches from face of pier. Extrados bars extend to rear of abutment body and cross at piers as with intrados. Over each pier are set 11 saddle bars, 1 by 3 inches, 16 feet long, 36 inches apart centres and with prongs downwards.

The total weight of reinforcing steel in bridge is 70 tons. The upper surfaces of arches were painted with asphalt paint laid hot. The total amount of concrete in structure is 2,754 cubic yards. The cement used was "Monarch" brand, manufactured by the Lakefield Cement Company.

The contract prices were $9.30 and $11.22 per cubic yard for reinforced concrete in place, including forms, false-work and removal of same. The centreing was struck 60 days after last of concrete (below hand rail) was laid. The gravel used in concrete was first grade clean gravel, with 35 per cent. of coarse, sharp sand, hauled three-quarters of a mile, costing 75 cents per cubic yard delivered.

Gravel filling for roadway was carried up to sub-grade before the centreing was struck. This will be topped with crushed stone next season. This gravel was procured from the Corporation gravel pit and was of a coarser grade than that used for concrete. Cost for loading, hauling and spreading was 36 cents per cubic yard, hauled three-quarters of a mile.

Drainage for road is provided for by 6 inch tile running from surface down through gravel filling and discharging vertically at each side of piers. The sidewalk has not been laid yet as it is intended tol ay mains, for water and gas, and ducts, for wires, beneath it next season. The bridge is lighted by eight lamps on cast iron posts set on thepediments, the wires for which are conveyed in galvanized iron ducts built into the base of railing.

The actual time occupied in erection was ten months, which included the removal of old bridge. The total cost when completed will be $35,000.

The bridge was designed by T. A. S. Hay, city engineer, and built by Messrs. Conroy Bros., and the construction was superintended by Inspector W. J. Martin, all of Peterborough, Ont.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

For the past few weeks the Young Men's Christian Association has been conducting a Normal Class for Sunday School Teachers, but with its membership confined to young men. There have been numerous inquiries for a similar class for the ladies. It was a question in the minds of the officers whether such a move would be acceptable to the Sabbath School Association. At the last meeting of the executive of the latter association the question was brought up and it was unanimously decided that such a class would be acceptable and the General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. was appointed to conduct a Teacher Training Class for the Sabbath School Association of this City.

The organization meeting of this class will be held in the parlours of the Young Men's Christian Association at the corner of Murray and George streets on Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock. It is hoped that every teacher in the city who can attend this first meeting will do so.

The first half hour will be occupied by a discussion on the subject "The S. S. Teacher's Qualifications" and the balance of the hour will be devoted to a study of the lesson for next Sunday in the Sunday schools.

Let it be distinctly understood that all teachers of Sunday school classes, both male and female are cordially invited to attend this class. Bring your note books with you and be prepared to take notes for home study.

Word was received this morning of the death of Master Vernon Chapman, of West Toronto, who passed away on Monday at 3 o'clock after an illness of some weeks from Bright's disease and pneumonia. Deceased was fifteen years of age and a former resident of Havelock, having been born here. The remains were brought to Havelock on Tuesday's noon train and from thence to Maple Grove cemetery for burial. He leaves to mourn his loss his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Chapman, two sisters, Nellie and Ila, and one brother, Mr. Ford Chapman. To them the heartfelt sympathy of the many friends in this village is extended.

Deceased was a great favourite in Havelock among the old, as well as the young, winning the affection of all by his bright and happy manner. He was a member of St. John's church and his attendance was regular both at church and Sunday school.

CANDIDATE WAS LITERAL.

Samuel Bingham Showed That He Made No Promise.

Now that the municipal elections are over, the average reader has seen much of such expressions in the press: "He is not in the field," "No! he will not run this year," "He will retire," "He is in the race again," etc. It is well not to interpret these remarks too literally.

Some years ago the late Samuel Bingham was mayor of Ottawa for two terms. Mr. Bingham was a man of generous heart and kindly disposition, but somewhat set in his ways and ideas. He had made a fortune bringing logs down the Gatineau River for the various lumbermen of the Ottawa Valley, and was currently reported to have more ready cash "on tap" in the bank than any other resident of the Capital. To him the safest place for coin was in the vault of some sound financial institution, and not in stocks, bonds, securities or mortgages. But he was not niggardly, and presented the Capital with Bingham Park, gave his annual allowance as mayor to charity and, in other ways, conferred on the city many benefits—but that is another story.

He had been in the council for some years before aspiring for the chair of chief magistrate and, when he decided to enter the contest, there were two opponents—and the most uncertain kind of a fight is a triangular one. The Sunday before nomination day it was rumored that Mr. Bingham intended to drop out. A reporter of a morning paper saw Mr. Bingham, who had heard nothing of the rumor, on Sparks street just as he was about to board a car for home, and had only time for a monosyllabic interview.

"Are you running, Mr. Bingham?" he inquired.

"No," came the answer promptly.

"Then, can I say that you are not in the field?" persisted the scribe.

"If you like," came the jovial answer as he boarded his car.

The morning edition came out in flaring headlines with the announcement that Bingham, one of the mayoralty candidates, had retired, and that the field had been left to the two other candidates.

Mr. Bingham was nominated just the same, and went into the fight, winning by a snag majority. When making his nomination speech a spectator asked him why he had announced his retirement from the race, and Mr. Bingham replied that he had authorised no such a statement. He was as much surprised as anyone to see the reference to his withdrawal.

He then explained that, as he was going home, a young man had breathlessly approached him late at night and asked him if he was "running."

"I told him, 'No!'" continued the speaker, "for I was walking leisurely at the time. He then inquired if I was "in the field," and I again answered in the negative and, of course, I told the truth, for I was making my way across the street for a car. There is not a field within miles of where I stood."

Mr. Bingham had not thought his replies to be taken so literally, but the newspaper man saw, what was intended for a joke in a different light, which goes to prove that municipal aspirants should not always be taken too seriously in their expressed intentions or promises.

MILLBROOK NEWS

The Council of the Municipality of Smith met in the Council Chamber, Peterborough, on Monday, February 6. All the members present with Reeve Graham in the chair. Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

On motion of Mr. Garbutt, seconded by Mr. Jobe, a resolution was passed to allow Mr. G. W. Bennett, Inspector of Colonization Roads, to address the Council.

Mr. Bennett in speaking of the new bridge, which the Council propose to build over the creek, near Mr. Jacob Snelgrove's, showed several plans, and prints of bridges that he would recommend. At the conclusion of his address it was decided to build a bridge of concrete and steel, at an estimated cost of $500.

Moved by Mr. Garbutt, seconded by Mr. Davis, that the Reeve be a commissioner to look after the construction of the new bridge at a salary of $4.00 per day.—Carried.

The following communications were received and dealt with:

From Messrs. Hall, Medd and Davidson asking that some action be taken to settle the dispute concerning the damages of drowned lands at Chemong Park.—Matter referred to the Township Solicitor.

From National Sanitarium Association, Gravenhurst, and Salvation Army of Toronto, asking for donations.—No action taken.

From County Treasurer, showing the standing of the Township as regards non-resident taxes.

From Grand Trunk Railway's Land Office showing that the Company own 66 3-4 acres in the Omemee Branch, and 87 acres in the Chemong Branch, with a total assessment of $5,000.

The auditors of the Township, Mr. J. A. Young and Mr. R. J. Edminson, reported showing the municipality to be in a good position financially with a total balance on hand of $2,-699.57.

Moved by Mr. Garbutt, seconded by Mr. McKee, that the auditors report be received an dadopted, and that the Clerk be instructed to have 200 copies printed for distribution—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Davis, seconded by Mr. McKee, that the Clerk send a bill to Mr. R. J. Edminson for $5.00. for timber cut in trespass on the 4th concession.—Carried.

A by-law was passed raising the salary of Fence Viewers from $1.00 of $2.00 per day.

Moved by Mr. Garbutt, seconded by Mr. McKee that the following accounts be paid:

Peterborough Review, $15.60; R. Hicks & Co., $21.64; Township of North Monaghan, $7.50; J. W. Kelly registration fees, $20.40; Wm. Nichols, $5.85;.

After verbally appointing Road-Masters, Pound Keepers and Fence Viewers for the ensuing year the Council adjourned to meet again on Monday, March 6th, at 10 o'clock.

GHOULS AT WORK.

They Steal Body From Place In Vault In Erie, Pa.

Erie, Pa., Feb. 10.—Body snatching that may equal the daring grave ghouls who stirred the country more than a quarter of a century ago, when the body of A. T. Stewart, New York's pioneer merchant, was stolen, has stirred this section of Pensylvania in indignation at its daring as nothing has since the sensational kidnapping which occurred in this vicinty a few years ago.

The mausoleum of one of the most prominent families of this section of the state was desecrated sometime between Monday and Wednesday afternoon. A body is missing from the vault of the family of the late Congressman William L. Scott. The police of neighboring cities and communities within 400 miles have been notified of the crime.

The discovery was made by two women walking through the Erie Cemetery. The family was immediately notified, and a watch was placed in the cemetery at midnight after all assurances were made that the missing body was not in the vicinity.

Details of Erie police kept watch at the tomb during the night to greet the body-snatchers should they return. The only disturbance they met was from newspaper men early in the morning, who were ordered from the cemetery at the point of revolvers.

While the police have been informed of the grave-robbing no name is attached to the missing body of them. The first information to the public come from the family, but again no name is given. It is known, however, that the body taken by the ghouls is that of Mrs. McCollum, a sister-in-law of the late Mr. Scott. The police believe the body is being held for ransom, and that the vandals also intended to carry away the bodies of the millionaire and his wife.

Investigation showed that the casket containing the body of Mrs. McCollum had been carried away. The caskets are sealed in a wall and a chisel had been used in breaking the seals, before the metallic box could be carried away. This casket was the 3rst on the lower tier at the north side of the mausoleum, and directly opposite it on the second tier is the caskets containing the bodies of Mrs. Scott and the millionaire, who built the mausoleum.

Flames Claim Aged Lady.

Toronto, Feb. 10.—Dropping a lamp from her aged hands in the little cottage where she has lived alone since the death of her husband in December, Mrs. Matilda Andrews, 65 years, was burned to death in her home at 163 Sheridan avenue. Not till the flames had laid hold of the interior of the little roughcast cottage and were bursting from the front door was the fire discovered.

Lieuts. Hamilton and Coulter forced an entry and found the body of the old woman lying on its face in the little dining-room. Nearby lay a broken coal oil lamp, which she is believed to have dropped and started the fire. The body was severely charred about the head and shoulders and the clothing on the upper part of the body was burned off.

No Discrimination.

Albany, N.Y., Feb. 10.—Boycotts are permitted and strike-breaking is prohibited in a bill introduced yesterday by Assemblyman Gerhardt. Any firm restraining persons from joining a labor organiaztion as a condition of such person obtaining employment with the company is made guilty of a misdemeanor. Employers are prohibited from bringing employes from other states or from other parts of the state by false inducements or representations of work to be done, conditions of labor, or compensation.

In Dread of Something
You Can Scarcely Tell What—It May Be Hysteria, Insanity, Nervous Collapse
DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD
When the nervous system breaks down you live in a constant dread of something terrible about to happen.
Physical suffering cannot be compared to the mental agonies of the nervous wreck who fears that his mind may give way or that his body may be paralyzed.
In this condition you must suffer alone for friends cannot understand or sympatize with you. They tell you to cheer up or that it is only imagination.
You can only throw off this depression when the nerve cells are restored to health by such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Your digestive system has failed to supply proper nourishment to the nerves and you are compelled to seek aid from other sources.
It will take some patience and persistent treatment, but there is no way by which you can so certainly restore health and vigour as by the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.
The best time to restore the nervous system is long before such a critical condition is reached. Such symptoms as sleeplessness, headaches, nervous indigestion, muscular weakness, loss of energy, failure of memory and power of concentration, irritability and discouragement tell of a failure of the nervous system and warn you of the approach of serious trouble.

YESTERDAY IN THE HOUSE

Opposition Support Monk's Tariff Amendment—Messrs. Fielding and Paterson Speak Ably

TARIFF DISCUSSION

Ottawa, Feb. 10.—The first round of the reciprocity debate showed the Conservatives counselling for delay. The Monk amendment to the motion to go into committee was rejected by a majority of 28.

Mr. Monk thought the matter was too serious to be received with the "shrieks of approval" which greeted it from the Government benches. Mr. Fielding said the agreement was a virtual repetition of the treaty of 1854 and was not new. Mr. Foster charged the Minister of Finance with having no mandate to Washington, and declared the Canadian delegates had treated Canadian interests like gamblers. Canada had bartered away her authority.

The House was well filled at all times during the debate. There was a large concourse in the galleries, and not the least interested was Henri Bourassa. The debates will be resumed next Tuesday.

The debate started when, on a motion by the Finance Minister that the House go into committee to consider the tariff resolution Mr. Monk (Jacques Cartier) brought up an amendment regretting that the Government had not given the "necessary time or occasion to ascertain the opinion of the people of Canada in that regard and to study more carefully the effect the new fiscal regime will have upon the various industries thereby affected."

Mr. Monk instanced the case of conventions between continental nations which always contained a clause that ratifications could be exchanged within six months. He had no desire to place any obstacle in the path of the Government, but said that the members wanted an opportunity to consult with their constituents.

Giving his reasons, Mr. Monk said the House expected something less considerable. The agreement covered the whole field of agriculture. It imperilled the forest wealth of Canada, at a time when Canada should "bring to the conservation of her natural resources all that care which has been found wanting in other countries."

The tendency of the agreement was to make trade lines run generally north and south. It nullified the sacrifices Canada had made for twenty years to develop a great transportation system. The agreement came to Canada with a suddenness, after forty years of isolation, during a time when Canada had established markets and created large industries.

While criticizing the House for the "acclaim" with which Mr. Fielding's report had been received, Mr. Monk declared, "We should be ready to trade and conclude treaties with all nations where our interests are concerned."

Mr. Fielding disclaimed any desire to rush the matter through the House. It was not a new question, reciprocity had been before Parliament for the past forty years. The surprise which the hon. gentleman opposite felt was a surprise that the Government had been able to come to such a good agreement, which would revive faith and hope in every industry and undertaking in Canada, and would make permanent the prosperity of the country. He declared there would be abundant opportunities for discussion.

He had strong hopes that President Taft would overcome the opposition in Congress, and in the event of rejection by Congress and acceptance by the Dominion Parliament, Canada would be in a much stronger position in future negotiations. In the bill to be brought down there would be a clause declaring that no part of the arrangement would come into operation until corresponding legislation would be passed by the United States.

On the division which followed the amendment was lost on a party vote, the smallness of the Government majority being due to the unexpectedness of the division on the amendment.

When the House went into committee, Mr. Borden arose to the accompaniment of Conservative cheers.

"These proposals are too grave for partisanship," he said. He desired to take a reasonable and moderate view of the trade arrangement without making an attack on the Government or anybody else. He would devote himself either to the conditions in the House, and show that these were proposed which should not be entered into lightly by the people of the Dominion at the present time.

Mr. Borden reviewed Canadian national progress and said prosperity was an assured fact.

There was no doubt that a section of the people in Canada would immediately profit by the proposed tariff; there was less doubt that it would spell ruin for a much larger number. Set as to the far reaching effect on Canadian trade, no one could speak with authority, beyond saying that it reversed the work of forty years.

Dealing with the argument that one good result of the agreement would be to provide a wider market for Canadian products, Mr. Borden said that if the national issue was to be disregarded, and wider markets in the United States, from which the Empire was to be excluded, were to prevail, the conclusion was logical and evitable that the part of reciprocity, as proposed, would lead to commercial union, and from that to political absorption.

Mr. Borden then went on to say that the proper fiscal policy for Canada to adopt was not which would provide in the event of a necessity for tariff reduction, for a revision upon a reasonable and scientific basis. He would recommend such a tariff as would aim at the development of the country, the employment for our labor, the increase of our population and the utilisation of resources. It would aim at giving producers reasonable opportunities by equalising the cost of production. It would have been well if a Parliamentary commission had been named, so that the effect would not be made by rule of the House. The problems of transportation and terminal elevators were of more vital importance to the West than the tariff question.

In conclusion, Mr. Borden said: "I trust that the Canadian people will not lightly relinquish the task to which their energies and the energies of their fathers have been consecrated for so many years. I trust that the standard will not be thrown aside and the retreat sounded when the battle is more than half won.

Hon. Wm. Paterson, speaking after recess, said Mr. Borden in remarking upon the progress made by Canada during the last forty years, had failed to notice that particular progress had been made during the last fifteen years. One of the acts of the present Government which tended to increase our trade, was the making of trade freer with the whole world, particularly Great Britain and the United States.

(Government cheers and ironical cheers from the Opposition.)

Referring particularly to Mr. Borden's speech, he said he could not make up his mind whether the Opposition leader was for or against the agreement. At any rate he was not so hostile as a section of the press of Canada.

Mr. Paterson continued his argument by instancing the development of the West, and declared that the export of a hundred millions of bushels of wheat every year would keep the railways busy. He thought Canada could do better even than she had been doing, and would progress more in the next five years than in the past ten.

"This agreement will, I believe, give trade a greater stimulus than the British preference gave it." He appealed to the patriotism of the Opposition to share with the Government the credit of the great thing they were doing. He argued it would help the miner, the lumberman and the fruit grower. If the Opposition would not help, the Government would press the measure alone.

Mr. Foster returned to his old time virility in an attack on the Government. He declared that the present was a crisis in Canadian history. It was a situation of great gravity. The Government should heed the lesson of history. It was valuable to tell them what they should avoid. The volume of reciprocity had been completed in 1891. A heresy remained with the Liberals until 1897, but subsequent to then both parties had cast it aside. The mandate of the people on four successive occasions had been to leave the question alone, and there had been no compelling impulse to make the Government think differently.

THE BUDGET DEBATE

Legislature Continues to Pound Away on the Subject—Night Session is Held

LEADERS NOT HEARD

Toronto, Feb. 10.—Vigorous criticisms of the Government marked the budget debate in the Ontario Legislature yesterday afternoon, but the charges were a repetition of those of preceding speeches, and were met by challenges to quote one misspent dollar.

The veteran Liberal from East Lambton, received two genuine ovations when he rose to express his opinions in the budget debate, and when he sat down. It made his Irish blood boil, he said, to hear the Tory members saying that the Liberals had done nothing. He felt very friendly towards the present Government and he was willing to vouch that the 18 members of the Opposition were willing to do everything in their power to help the Government to make good laws. He had taken a ride over the new railroad the Government had built up north and it was a splendid thing.

Mr. McCormick hoped that the Government would make a further grant of $105,000 to the Fall Fair Association.

J. H. Hewitt, South Wellington (Con.), made his initial bow as a debater. He pointed out that it was not good bookkeeping for Mr. Mallwing to have given no credit for the results of the heavy expenditures made by the Hydro-Electric Commission to be found in the outlay on the transmission line.

There was no doubt much to be said on both sides in respect to the question of reciprocity. Some would suffer severely and some interested will gain, but it was a bad policy to make so great a change at a time of such great prosperity.

D. Reed, Liberal for South Wentworth, brought up the Gillies' limit again. There never was a transaction put through by the old Government that had such a shaky appearance.

Hon. Frank Cochrane piped up: "The timber on the limit did not bring a cent."

"Your timber dues are coming from there now," persisted Mr. Reed.

"No, you're wrong."

Mr. Reed added that practically all the limit was sold.

"No," declared Mr. Cochrane, "three-quarters of it is not sold."

"I insist that nearly all of it is sold."

Mr. Cochrane—"That is absolutely untrue."

It was a disgrace to the province that a hireling from the United States came to live in hotels up north and beg and coax a man to break the law. It was a shame, too, that seized liquor should be peddled into an unlicensed district by the Government's hirelings.

Hon. Mr. Hanna declared that the man who had re-sold the liquor was not in the employ of the Government, but a man whom a Government agent had enlisted to assist him. The Provincial Secretary promised to produce the verbatim evidence of those trials.

J. A. Ross of Monck (Con.), pointed out that the new school books which had been criticised by the Opposition were considered worthy of adoption by other provinces.

The "poor old Financial Post" fumed against the Hydro-Electric Commission and efforts had been made to show that property owners had been treated unfairly in respect to the right of way. The reverse was the case. In the much-talked of Felker instance, Mm. Felker was paid $500 for the site of two towers, which was almost half the original price of her whole farm.

When the House resumed at night, J. C. Elliott, West Middlesex, criticized the Provincial Premier for introducing a Dominion issue into the budget debate. The Government members, being unable to adduce reasons against reciprocity, had been compelled to resort to their old tactics of waving the old flag.

He claimed that the annual expenses of the provinces had increased by nearly 14 per cent. over that of Liberal administration.

The Provincial Treasurer here interrupted that the extensive Government works that had been undertaken would go a long way towards making up the difference.

W. D. McPherson, Toronto West, said that the Opposition members appeared to consider it right to attempt to set class against class by commending everything that was done on behalf of agriculture, and condemning aid for any other profession. Instead of the Government discriminating against the agricultural students at Guelph, the per capita aid to Guelph College was $149, compared with $128 per student at Toronto University.

Vacuntine Steek, South Perth, criticised the increased expenditures as being attributable to increases of "the great army of officials."

Coronation Contingent.

Ottawa, Feb. 10.—It has been decided that there will be forty-eight officers, and altogether a force about 700 strong on the Canadian contingent to the coronation. This will mean that each regiment of cavalry and infantry will have about four representatives, and each brigade of artillery the same number. The non-commissioned officers and men will be recommended by the officers commanding the different units. The men will wear the uniforms of their respective corps on the contingent.

ARRESTS ARE MADE

Three Prominent figures in the Oxford Case Are Apprehended and a Fourth Man is Sought

REPORT WITHELD

Woodstock, Feb. 10.—The Oxford police net was thrown out yesterday afternoon and gathered in some of the leading figures in the Oxford graft investigation. The authorities yesterday morning received word from the Attorney-General's Department at Toronto instructing them to take quick action in apprehending M. T. Buchanan, Byron McCarty and Jno. Youngs. McCarty was arrested by Constable Fred. Hill at Thamesford late yesterday afternoon. Ex-Warden John Youngs of Brooksdale was in town during the afternoon, and was placed under arrest by Constable Olson. Chief Kiffings went up to Ingersoll and brought back Buchanan on the three o'clock street car. They were all taken to police headquarters and after an hour or so's conference the three were admitted to bail, furnished by their friends. Youngs, it will be remembered, was accused of offering money to the late jailer, Cameron, for his job.

M. T. BUCHANAN.

The arrests were startling in their suddenness, although it was generally believed that the fact that the commission's finding was being withheld until the Cabinet met portended some drastic movements by the Attorney-General's Department.

It was believed that the keeping back of the report indicated the Government's decision to make a sudden move and land the men wanted before they had a chance to get out, if they had any intention of doing so.

McCarty of Thamesford was not taken before the magistrate, his bail being arranged in the office of his solicitor, S. W. T. McMullen. M. T. Buchanan walked half a block behind the chief from the car to the police office, where bail was given for $2,500 cash and sureties of a like amount, similar bail being demanded of Youngs. There are several charges against Buchanan, but these have not been formally made out yet. The men wanted have simply been arrested on a general warrant of graft from the county, issued under instructions by the Attorney-General's Department.

Will Hold Back Report.

Toronto, Feb. 10.—Judge Snider's report on the Oxford County investigation was considered yesterday by the Ontario Government, but it is doubtful if it will be either presented to the House this session, or be made public until the prosecutions are concluded.

Sir James Whitney said last evening, that in view of the report of the arrests, it was not certain when the judge's report would be made public. Certainly not at present.

Reforestration Scheme.

St. John, N.B., Feb. 10.—Following an extensive investigation on reforestation, an American lumber company now operating in New Brunswick plans immediate action in reforesting the more denuded parts of the province. Nurseries will be established at Salmon River and Matins Head, where trees will be grown from seed. The company has fifty thousand acres at Coolshire, Que., which will be seeded this spring. The work to be done this year, it is understood, is merely preparatory to extensive reforestration in New Brunswick and the coast of Maine.

Protestants Object to Catechism.

Toronto, Feb. 10.—T. B. Collins and William Banks, sr., representing the grand lodges of Ontario East and West, I.O.L., and J. H. Burnham and James Thompson, representing the Protestant ratepayers of No. 3 Otonabee, laid a charge before Hon. Dr. Pyne, and afterwards before Sir James Whitney, that the Roman Catholic catechism and Roman Catholic doctrines were taught in the public school by a Roman Catholic teacher, and that the teacher had the support of the parish priest, who visited the school.

The Ministers promised an investigation, but Sir James refused to consider a suggestion that the schools be entirely secularized.

Why the Optical Institute Succeeds
There are Optometrists in Canada who do a larger business than ourselves. There are Optometrists and Opticians who do a smaller, but the Optometrist who does better work or gives better value has not pushed his head above the Optical Horizon. A strong statement to be sure, but when we point to twenty years of the best training and experience in both United States and Canada and over 27000 persons helped to the best possible Eyesight are we not justly proud of our work? We are even adding to our facilities and studying the latest methods. This is way we succeed.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES

James Compee, M.P., is ill with typhoid fever at Ottawa.

The postoffice of Newcastle, N.B., is quarantined with smallpox.

Sir Robert Bond advocates aggressive policy towards the United States.

Capt. Brereton, for many years stipendiary magistrate, died at Kenora.

Three big dams are being erected in the Ottawa River to conserve and regulate the flow of water.

Three Aylmer, Que., men have been arrested on a charge of stealing a prize ox, butchering the animal, and disposing of the carcass to a butcher.

Rev. Canon Almon of Halifax, one of the oldest minister of the Anglican communion, died last night. He was the youngest brother of the late Senator Almon.

The home of the Earl of Crewe, Secretary of State for India, caught fire yesterday. The greatest alarm was felt because of the fact that on Tuesday a son was born to Lady Crewe. The blaze was soon put out.

Sheriff Lemieux, while wandering about the excavations of the Montreal jail, stumbled on an old section of the building that had been buried and forgotten. It contains a number of cells where the prisoners of '37 were confined under sentence of death.

A Double Standard.

Montreal, Feb. 10.—Two weights and two measures is the way "L'Action Sociale" of Quebec sizes up the recent anti-reciprocity sermon delivered in Quebec by Rev. Fred. Scott, and while the clerical organ says no one should dispute the Anglican clergyman's right to speak as he did on Sunday last, it wants to know what French-Canadian politicians would think or say if a Roman Catholic priest got up into the pulpit and expressed himself so plainly on political subjects as did Rev. Mr. Scott.

Married Actress; Must Resign.

New York, Feb. 10.—A London cable to The World says: Capt. the Hon. Maurice Brett, son of Lord Esher, who recently married Zena Dare, the actress, has been obliged to resign from the Coldstream Guards like other sons of peers who married actresses. It is thought, however, that his father's influence might have prevented such a necessity. Capt. Brett has been transferred to the noted Highland regiment, the Black Watch, retaining his rank.

Certificates Withdrawn.

Kingston, Feb. 10.—Two Kingston captains who have held United States marine certificates, have had them withdrawn in accordance with the recent order from Washington that all captains and engineers serving on United States vessels, must not live abroad.

The Care Of The E--Y--E--S
A person in good health, at the age of 45 years, will ordinarily notice a change in the sight, requiring more effort to read fine print, or to see small objects.
It would then be advisable to have the eyes examined by a Competent Eyesight Specialist and fitted with "Preserving or Rest Glasses".
This would give great comfort and prevent eye-strain, which is the cause of much trouble in after years.
Glasses should be changed usually once in two years.
First, to fit changed conditions of sight, and Second, Glasses lose their transparency by wear.
Headaches are often warnings that the eyes need help and they should not be neglected.
The Eyes are the most important organs of the fine senses, and generally the most abused.
Many Eyes Are Ruined by wearing cheap and imperfect glasses.

HON. MR. MACKAY'S TELLING SPEECH

Severe Criticism of the Government.

Hot Shot For Minister of Education.

Administration of Justice—Industrial Education—Local Option—Reforestration.—Immigration and Colonization, All Dealt With.

On the resumption of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, Hon. Mr. MacKay, leader of the Opposition, in a brilliant 45-minute speech, gave a concise and masterly review of provincial problems. His speech, in part, was as follows:

"Mr. Speaker,—How fitting that the opening sentences of the speech of the Lieutenant-Governor, which was placed in his hands by his constitutional advisers, should contain a reference to the demise of King Edward VII. and to the far-reaching influence for good which he exerted throughout his whole reign. No British subject knows, no British subject will ever know, how great was the influence exercised by our late King, making for the peace of the whole world. His very extended ties of affinity and consanguinity were doubtless used to advantage with all other European monarchs. His was a reign that made for peace, that tended to bring about if not the age itself, at least the spirit of the age, when men shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning-hooks; and when the nations of the earth shall have learned to submit international difficulties not to the arbitrament of the sword, but to the decision of such tribunals as that of The Hague, which recently has done such splendid work and has removed forever as between us and the great nation to the South of us, a large number of irritating and mischief-making difficulties. That reminds me, Sir, that we are nearing the celebration of the century mark of peace between this nation and our cousins to the South; a celebration in which I have no doubt this Province and this Dominion will take a fitting and prominent part. Notwithstanding the exasperating recollections of the War of 1812, Canada and the United States have set the world an excellent example of how two nations with a 3,000-mile non-fortressed and ungarrisoned frontier may live at peace as neighbor nations ought to.

Lack of Content and Intent.

Coming to that portion of the speech which reviews the past Administration and the expected legislation of the present Government I may be permitted to remark, Sir, that the most noticeable feature of the whole speech is its absolute lack of content and particularly of intent on the part of the Government.

Prison Labor.

"With reference to the question of prison labor, while there has no doubt been a great deal of laudable work done in the way of employing prisoners, yet, Sir, I would like to suggest to the Honorable, the Provincial Secretary, the idea of considering carefully not only those whose liberty is restrained and who are confined in our public institutions, but also those who were prior to their incarceration dependent upon them and who possibly suffer more through their confinement than the actual prisoners. Some scheme might be devised which would not only encourage thrift and honesty on the part of those confined, but would also serve to alleviate the suffering of those who formerly depended upon them—if a part at least of the earnings of these prisoners could be sent back to their families.

Technical Education.

The next paragraph of the speech deals with a very important question, which I regret to say, is touched very gingerly and uncertainly—that of technical and industrial education. The reference to this very important subject is as follows:

"The necessity for and the advantages arising out of the adoption of a system of technical and industrial education are becoming more obvious day by day, and you will be asked to make an appropriation for this purpose."

This indeed is handling an extremely important subject in a very non-committal manner. One would gather from this vague reference to the subject that the gray dawn of intelligence is at last striking the Government. With reference to this all-important question, contrast this vague, indefinite, ill-defined and non-committal position, Sir, with the stand taken by this side of the House last year. We, Sir, divided the House upon this same question last session. The record appears at p. 246 of the Votes and Proceedings. Our motion was as follows: "That in the opinion of this House the province and the municipalities should unite in (a) the establishment of technical schools in the towns and cities in Ontario to supplement the practical training of the workshop. (b) An arrangement as to the basis of support for such schools as between the province, the municipality and the interested manufacturers. (c) The establishment in the larger industrial centres of technical high schools. (d) That the powers of the municipalities should be enlarged so as to enable them to aid in the support of such work."

This, Sir, was a well-defined scheme, and, had the Government accepted it and appointed a commission to make the necessary inquiry and obtain the necessary information, something practical might be the result in the immediate future. I cannot help thinking, Sir, that if this Government had accepted this suggestion and had sent a commission out to ascertain all facts pertaining to the technical and industrial conditions of this province, the information thus obtained would have fitted in with and would have been supplemental to any information that the report of the Dominion Government commission may contain. The latter commission does well in ascertaining industrial and labor conditions here and elsewhere not only in this country but several other countries; but we, Sir, priding ourselves on being the banner province of the Dominion, might well have acted upon our own initiative, and as a result of concurrent work ascertained more minutely the requirements of this particular province. Then, Sir, we could have availed ourselves of the work of the Dominion commission and at the same time have had the question from an internal standpoint dealt more exhaustively with by our own commission. As an incidental advantage, the educational effect of a properly selected commission moving from town to town and city to city throughout the province would have been distinctly felt and would have done very much towards crystallizing the views of municipal officers, boards of trade, boards of education, and employers of labor on this extremely important question.

Contrast With Germany.

There is a marked difference between our educational system and that of other countries which have given the question of industrial education serious consideration. Perhaps in this province, considering we are a young country, the school of culture has too much predominated. The marked distinction between our school system and that of Germany, for example, is, that our continuation classes are still entirely scholastic, whereas Germany says to her children:

"I will give you an education sufficient for ordinary life up to the end of your common school course. After that you must begin to think of this as a practical world, and I, the state, will assist you in a practical way, so that you may earn an honest living."

The result is that continuation classes in Germany become continuation industrial schools. Of these there are some 2,200, attended by 350,000 pupils. After a two-year's course in these industrial schools the young man specialises and attends higher technical schools and institutes.

We believe it is the duty of the state to give to the child of the state such education as may hereafter make him the best citizen of the state. It becomes a very grave and important question whether this province might not, whether this province ought not, to give such practical assistance as will enable the youth of the province the better and easier to make a livelihood. My contention is, Sir, that we ought to establish in every industrial centre an "evening industrial school" to supplement the work of the workshop. These schools ought to be of such a general character as to reach out to all the lads in the workshops, and ought not to be confined to those who are fortunate enough to reach a high school or collegiate institute status.

It is a matter of extreme regret that this Government has not taken more active steps, that it has not put itself in a position to take more active steps than it has done, and that the speech from the throne merely says:

"That the necessity is becoming more obvious day by day for a system of technical and industrial education."

Provincial Aid for Schools.

Last year, Sir, I produced figures to show what the province is doing by way of aiding in the education of certain classes of people. I then made clear the fact that the provincial grants to public and separate schools amount annually to $1.38 for each pupil attending the same; the grants to high schools and collegiate institutes to $4 66 per pupil; the grants to normal and model schools amount to $112.43 per pupil; the grants to Toronto University $126.36 per pupil. It is difficult to figure exactly what the average grant to agricultural colleges per pupil is, although some substantial aid is given; but, Sir, when we come to a very deserving class, the industrial school class, a far different story is told. This province practically says to the lad from thirteen to seventeen years of age who is perforce driven from school to earn a livelihood in the workshop that it has no concern for him, that it has neither moral nor financial obligation with reference to him. Sir, last year we assisted 4,500 odd public and separate school pupils at the rate of $1.38 per pupil; we assisted 3,100 odd high school and collegiate institute pupils at the rate of $4.66 per pupil; we assisted 438 normal and model school pupils at the rate of $112.43 per capita, and we assisted 3,950 university students at a rate of $126.00 per pupil. Thus does this province follow from stage to stage those who are financially able to attend our schools and colleges thus to attain a liberal education; but when it comes to the lad whom chill penury at an early age drives to the workshop, the province says to him, we are under no moral or financial responsibility with reference to you and we will make no provision whatever for your further education. I say, Sir, that until some different scheme is properly worked out that will have due regard to the moral and financial responsibility of this province with reference to the industrial classes the educational system of this province will be but ill-balanced and the state will not be doing what it should do for the large number of young men and young women we find in all our industrial centres.

The Hydro-Electric Problem.

Sir, I confess frankly that I have not as much confidence in the successful working out of this scheme as has, apparently, the framer of the speech from the throne. There has been already so much misconduct and mismanagement on the part of the commission as not to justify the highest hopes with reference to the future. Last year we criticized at length the inequitable and unfair way in which the commission obtained their easements. We have also heretofore dealt with the absolutely tyrannical legislation whereby the votes taken in fourteen municipalities upon one question were made to do service for an entirely different scheme. It will be recalled that by-laws were submitted in some fifteen municipalities in Western Ontario; the question then submitted to the ratepayer was, whether he was willing to pay a certain fixed figure for power delivered by the commission at the gate of his town or city. The ratepayer in that case was not called upon to make any inquiry as to the original cost, or as to the cost of transmission, but had only to decide the very simple question whether power delivered at the door of his municipality at a certain price was cheap power or not. That called for no investigation whatever upon the part of the ratepayers, and these by-laws were carried in some fifteen municipalities. Then, the Government entirely changed its scheme and instead of delivering, at a certain figure, power at the gates of the municipalities in question, it offered to sell power to the municipalities at Niagara at a certain price and to compel the municipalities to stand the cost of building and maintaining transmission lines, etc., let that cost be what it might. This was an entirely different scheme. Our view then was that when the Government had the commission entirely changed its scheme, the new scheme should have been submitted to the municipalities and the ratepayers given the opportunity of saying whether they voted yea or nay on this new scheme. This the Government absolutely refused them, and the vote that was given for one proposition was taken as a test for an entirely different one, and legislation was passed as though they had voted and favored the present scheme. Our contention then was, and now is, that the people should have been trusted and the present scheme should have been submitted to the people of the municipalities for their approval or disapproval.

There is another phase of this question deserving serious consideration, as the matter is being at present worked out, the credit of the whole province is pledged for the benefit of a few municipalities in order that cheap power may be obtained for these municipalities. The absolute unfairness of this plan is better seen if we take specific illustrations of how it works out. For example, Bracebridge the other day held a banquet as a result of the successful opening of their power scheme. What did Bracebridge require to do? Bracebridge was required to submit its scheme to the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board, a creature of the Government, and when their scheme had been approved of by the Municipal Board, Bracebridge was obliged to sell its own debentures. They sold at 98 1-2, bearing, I think, 4 1-2 per cent. interest. Now, contrast this method of procedure towards obtaining cheap power as, let us say, between Bracebridge and Welland. The province as a whole, Bracebridge included, is compelled to furnish cheap money and cheap power for Welland, but in turn the province as a whole, including Welland, does not endorse Bracebridge, and does not assist Bracebridge in obtaining cheap power. The result is that Bracebridge loses $1.50 per hundred on the sale of its debentures and pays 4 1-2 per cent. interest, whereas Welland loses nothing on the sale, and gets its money at about 3 1-2 per cent.

There can be but one result of this whole scheme if successful; namely, that it will induce intending manufacturers to locate in the Niagara Peninsula rather than in the different towns and cities throughout the province. Nay, Sir, it may go so far as to take away factories already existing in other towns and change them to near the Falls. I leave it with the Government to say whether as representing the whole province they think such a scheme is fair and equitable to the whole province. And this raises the further question whether a uniform flat rate would not be more equitable even within the electric zone.

Reforestration.

I regret that I do not find any reference whatever to a very important subject, perhaps one of the largest question which the Honorable, the Minister of Lands and Forests has to deal with, namely, that of reforestration. I think, Sir, the Government has been sufficiently long in power and the necessity of the conservation of our forests has been put so plainly, and so often, before the Government from this side of the House that the public might now expect a well-defined plan of forest conservation and of reforestration.

Peopling the Northland.

The honorable member for South Norfolk spoke of the population of Ontario. In that connection, Sir, I desire to raise the question whether we are doing as a province all that might be done to obtain desirable immigrants; whether the province is at all doing its duty towards peopling our Northland? Sir, we know what the result of a vigorous Dominion immigration policy has done for the West, and I think this Government might well take a leaf out of their book and show more initiative, zeal and energy as to the important question of obtaining settlers for the fertile agricultural lands of North Ontario. Sir, this Government in that respect ought to awaken out of its sleep, and ought at once to institute an active propaganda in favor of peopling our own Hinterland. We know something, Sir, of the rapid progress of the West. Calgary, for example, last year boasted a population of 30,000 or 35,000. This year she claims 51,000. Similarly Edmonton's population last year was about 20,000, now it is claimed that it is 30,000. The population of the agricultural lands of that province is increasing in about the same proportion. This Government claims that we have as fertile lands in Northern Ontario as will be found in the West, why then, is not something practical and tangible being done towards securing population.

That Three-Fifths Clause.

I was rather amused with the idea expressed by the honorable member for South Norfolk with reference to local option. He expressed the idea that a grand work had been accomplished for temperance within a certain time past, because of the fact that 242 municipalities had in that time adopted local option, that 555 hotel licenses had been cut off, and 16 shop licenses removed. This under the present law he said was a "splendid result." I would like to ask the honorable gentleman whether he is not falling into the logical fallacy of proving either too little or too much? If it was a splendid thing under the three-fifths clause to have cut off 555 licenses, would it not have been a much more splendid thing to have cut off seven or eight hundred under a majority vote? What says the honorable gentleman? He sits silent, while the ridiculousness and the absurdity of his argument is apparent even to himself. He pledges himself to stand where he has always stood, namely, for the three-fifths clause. We, Sir, on this side of the House have ever stood on safer ground. We have maintained that so long as the vote taken in any particular municipality has no bearing as to results outside of that municipality that it should be treated as an ordinary municipal vote, and that a majority should rule. Examine the present Act, and see what anomalous and ridiculous results it leads to: In a certain town you have two voters, John Smith and John Brown. John Smith is a local optionist, John Brown is an anti-local optionist. Prior to the submission for the first time of the local option measure, according to the present law John Brown's vote was worth one-and-a-half times John Smith's. The moment, however, local option is carried, notwithstanding that these same two men are living and voting in the same town under similar conditions the situation is reversed, and John Smith's vote become worth one-and-a-half of John Brown's. A law that produces such results would do credit to a sleight-of-hand man, or a Japanese juggler, but it is not at all creditable to a British Legislature. The only sound position to take, Mr. Speaker, is the one I stand upon, namely, "one man, one vote, and every vote of equal value."

We have, Sir, divided the House for five successive sessions upon this question, and we will continue to divide it until the true principle of legislation is recognised and adopted. I, Sir, have taken that position, and intend to continue taking that position regardless of who is hit. He would be a mean local optionist who would ask to have the dice loaded in his favor, and he would be just as mean a friend of the trade who would make such a request. I repeat, Sir, that the dice should not be loaded for or against either party. If a municipality desires to adopt local option, the voice of the majority should rule. If, after having had an experience of local option, that municipality desires to return to the license system in preference to local option, again the majority should rule. The people who live under a law for three years, day in and day out, know more about its workings than any Government sitting in Queen's Park, be that Government Liberal or Conservative. Trust the people, and allow the people to deal with the matter fairly.

Education.

In dealing with the Government's attitude with reference to industrial education I pointed out that this Government has practically done nothing along that line. Perhaps, Sir, it is well for industrial education that they should never take the subject up. If no more intelligent direction is given to the movement by the Education Department than it has shown in the dealing with rural school education, I repeat, it may be a blessing if this Government never touches the question at all. Of all the mismanagement that any Department in the known world ever was guilty of, I venture to say that that of the Education Department with reference to our rural schools is the most pronounced. Of all the floundering and blundering and sinning against device ever known, I know nothing to equal that of this Government in the manner in which it has dealt with our rural schools. No Department, Sir, could possibly have been more mischievous as to results than the Education Department of this province. I make that statement deliberately, I make it plainly, with the full sense of the responsibility that the charge implies. When this Government, Sir, proposed to wipe out our model schools we, on this side of the House, gave them fair warning and told them plainly what any intelligent ten-year-old child ought to know, namely, that if they at one stroke wiped out the means of training qualified teachers for our public schools, there must inevitably be a dearth of qualified teachers. After first, Sir, they had determined to abolish the Model Schools, when we found our efforts to save them were unavailing, we next begged of the Premier of this Province, the Honorable the Minister of Education, not to wipe out the model schools at one stroke. We urged that there should at least be a survival of the fittest of them, in order that a supply of properly qualified teachers might be ensured for all our schools. This, Sir, was the burden of our plea. What I have said from session to session upon this subject is well known to honorable gentlemen in this House. They will also recall a plea along this line made by the Hon. Mr. Harcourt and the Hon. Mr. Graham; but, Sir, the Honorable, the Minister of Education, seems always absolutely impervious to knowledge. He seems, Sir, unsusceptible to receiving even a single idea along educational lines. Nothing could or would permeate his thinking faculty. Session after session we pointed out what must be the inevitable result of closing the model schools; we also pointed out what is a known fact, that at least, twenty, possibly thirty per cent. of our normal trained teachers do not remain in Ontario, but go to the western provinces where without any further training, they are qualified to teach. The result is that we have cut off largely the basis of supply of teachers for our rural schools, and are spending Ontario money to train teachers, a very large percentage of whom do not remain within the province. I repeat, Sir, this Government with reference to the rural schools of Ontario sinned against light, sinned against warning, and sinned against knowledge. No class of people in the whole province are more anxious to give the very best education they possibly can to their children than are the farmers of the Province of Ontario; but, Sir, there is a limit beyond which they cannot go. By closing the model schools this Government barred the door to many a poor man's son and daughter from ever entering the teaching profession. This fact is so well known that it needs but to be mentioned to be recognized as truth in every part of Ontario. I say, Sir, the result of the stand, stubborn and blundering policy of this Government was absolutely inevitable and was easily discernible in advance. It has led to a deplorable and lamentable state of affairs. We now find twenty per cent. or more of the rural schools in our land in the hands of teachers with absolutely no professional training whatever, and some of them without even a semblance of a non-professional certificate, and this, Sir, is a direct result of the stupidity and stubbornly adopted policy of this Government. As an illustration, Sir, I find in the Public School Report of William B. Tilley, Esquire, Public School Inspector for the United Counties of Northumberland and Durham, that there were last year seventy rural school teachers in these united counties. Two having first-class certificates, twenty-seven with second-class, twenty-two thirds—mostly renewed, and not less than nineteen schools were being taught by people having no professional training—teaching simply on temporary permits. Now, Sir, contrast this with ten years ago: From the same report I learn that in the year 1900 there were exactly the same number of rural school teachers in these united counties, namely seventy. Of these, two had first-class certificates, twenty-two had second-class, and the remaining forty-six has professional thirds. There was not one single permit in either county in that year. Last year we had not less than nineteen. That, Sir, is a fair average of what we find all over the Province of Ontario, and this is the result of the policy deliberately adopted by this Government in spite of all warning we could possibly give them. In my own riding, Sir, in the early January of last year, there were no less than fifteen rural schools vacant, and the trustees and inspector were busy scurrying hither and thither in an endeavor to secure any person regardless of qualification, to act as a teacher. Complaints come from all over the province along the same lines. This scarcity of teachers is the natural consequence of the closing of the model schools. My arguments years ago was, and now is, that it was far better to have teachers, some of whom may not have had the normal school professional training, than to adopt a system calling for a more expensive training and resulting in the fact that one-third of our schools are in the hands of untrained teachers. I may add, Sir, that I have always had great faith in the work of our model schools; they were in charge of competent and experienced men, men of five, ten, fifteen, and twenty years' actual experience, men who were trained in what is by all odds the best of all universities—the university of actual experience. They were doing efficient and successful work. These schools were easy of access to intending teachers. A poor man's son or daughter was not obliged to leave home and reside for a year in one of our cities to obtain professional training. Instead, however, Sir, of continuing these model schools until at least a sufficient number of teachers were guaranteed for the province, practically all the model schools in Old Ontario were closed, with the deplorable results already referred to. The net result is that the cost of education in the rural districts is increased fifty or seventy-five per cent., and on the average the character and quality of the teaching is far lower than it was ten years ago.

Summary.

Now, Sir, I have dealt in a cursory way with the leading subjects which are either mentioned in, or omitted from, the speech from the throne. I regret to say that I find in the speech no guarantee, nay, Sir, not even an indication of a forward movement as to the large question of reforestration, perhaps the largest the Government has to-day to deal with. I find no indication whatever of the adoption of an aggressive colonization system looking to the peopling of our own northland. Nor do I find any indication of dealing comprehensively and systematically with that all-important question of industrial education. Nor, Sir, do I find any indication of any intention on the part of the Government to take any steps whatever to relieve the serious condition of affairs in which the rural school sections find themselves with reference to teachers. I, for one, Sir, strongly urge upon the Government, in order to supply a sufficient number of teachers to reinstate in the meantime at least the model schools of the province in order that duly qualified teachers may be furnished for the rural schools. I stand, Mr. Speaker, where I have always stood on the "three-fifths clause" as to local option. Much credit has been claimed for the Honorable, the Provincial Secretary, by the honorable member for South Norfolk with reference to the enforcement of the liquor license law, and he even had the temerity to refer to the enforcement of the law in New Ontario! Doubtless he had in his mind the fiasco of sending Yankee Pinkerton detectives up into that north country, who collected a considerable quantity of liquor, then illegally sold the same, and then prosecuted the purchasers for re-selling! This hollow humbug of pretending to put down the illicit sale of liquor in the north country is becoming a scandal. Every man knows that if one good Canadian official stood on each train of the Government road, by which road alone liquor can be brought in to that north country, he could absolutely stop the traffic; but instead, Sir, the liquor is allowed to go in, and then the province is put to the expense of sending a gang of disreputable detectives up to make a farce of the administration of justice.

Again, Sir, we are told, and the boast is made by Government supporters ad nauseam, that the Attorney-General's Department is, and has been extremely active, because of the isolated fact that years ago they put out of existence a single poolroom. I make the statement boldly, I make it with a full responsibility of the gravity of its nature, when I say that there never was a time in the history of the province when the people of the province had so little faith in the activity, or rather inactivity, of the Attorney-General's Department as now. Never, Sir, since Confederation have there been so many absolute miscarriages of justice, and never have so many scoundrels gone unwhipped of justice as during the past five years. I do not purpose entering into details, they are familiar to the public—the Orangeville affair, the Kinrade inquiry, and others, furnish striking illustrations. The Department seems to be absolutely overcome with inertia. How well, Sir, we all recall the boast of the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer, during the session of 1906, that this Government had actually raised the standard of the administration of justice. "The King's writ now runs," throughout the province, shouted this distinguished gentleman. Sir, the general public are strongly of the opinion that it is the other fellows that are allowed to do the running, while the King's writ, under the direction of the Attorney-General's Department, lags lamely on the stage of action. And yet, Sir, the mover and seconder shout "Behold this great Government." The honorable member for South Norfolk went so far in his adulation as to say "there never was a Government like ours in the world." Sir, let me assure him that for once I unreservedly accept his statement. Unfortunately for this province his statement is entirely too true.

Now, Sir, pursuing the course adopted last year, this debate has been somewhat curtailed. The House will not now be divided, but later during the session, on all these and other issues, honorable gentlemen of this House will have not only an opportunity for discussion, but of sitting and taking notice while the Division Bell rings.

ONTARIO'S POLITICAL LEADERS.

(From The Globe, Jan. 27th.)

The opposing leaders in the Legislature made their declarations of policy in concluding the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. It is in these contests that the keen, insight, sound judgment, and statesmanlike grasp of the Opposition leader become most clearly apparent, and his incisive strength as a debater has a most telling effect. He was fully conscious of the seriousness of his words when emphasizing the loss of public confidence in the Attorney-General's Department and the pernicious influence of the easy escape of malefactors.

The opposing policies as to technical education were brought into clear contrast, although Sir James urged the need of waiting for the finding of the commission. The fact that nothing is done for the children who at twelve, thirteen, or fourteen years of age must leave school for apprenticeships was condemned in the strongest terms by Hon. Mr. MacKay. Industrial continuation classes for these boys and girls would sustain their mental development, perfect them in their chosen work, and make them more useful members of society. This form of technical education would not provoke the antagonism of workmen suffering through competition for employment, and would not deprive children of the full benefit of mental training during their school years. The full persuasive effect of the Opposition leader's logic was felt in behalf of the class of children most in need of technical training.

In educational affairs, as in other important functions of Provincial government, he showed not only a thorough familiarity with administrative principles and details, but with the results of various lines of policy on the public directly affected. The closing of model schools and the great expense entailed on prospective teachers had produced a system not at all responsive to the needs of the Province. As a result it was impossible to obtain a supply of competent teachers. Turning to the complete omissions of the speech from the throne, Hon. Mr. MacKay dealt with the continued absence of any attempt to form a reforesting policy and the lack of a system of colonization for New Ontario. The House was unusually attentive during the Opposition leader's address, but it is in the Province at large that such reviews of public affairs have lasting effect.

Sir James was vigorous and determined as usual, and happy in the general good fortune enjoyed by the Province. His continued tendency to revert to ancient political history suggested that, as was said of an American statesman, his future is mainly behind him. Economic reasoning has never been his specialty. When he said the Province got nothing and the Dominion much in taxation from immigrants he was innocent of the fact that they pay indirectly their share of the supplementary revenue tax on many corporations, and the scarcity value given to some of the assets of the Province by increases in population. Sir James defended the three-fifths clause against Hon. Mr. MacKay's demand for the British system of majority rule, and dwelt on the favorable features of Provincial development with vigorous emphasis. The two speeches, commendably brief, weighed the opposing leaders in the balance. Alike in sincerity, in courage, in determination, and in confidence, the Opposition leader shows clearly superior in economic understanding, in comprehension of public needs, and in appreciation of the subservience of Governmental institutions to the people for whom they exist.

A WOMAN'S BACK.

Not One Woman In Twenty Has a Stong Back.

The kidneys are to blame nine times out of ten.

When the blood isn't properly filtered the poisons that ought to be carried off by the kidneys are sent back through the system, and it's hardly to be wondered that backaches and lame backs come to make life miserable.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles. They begin by expelling all the poisonous matter from the kidneys, and then heal the delicate membranes and make their action regular and natural.

Mrs. A. H. Hutton, Jr., McCreary, Man., writes:—"Two years ago last spring I had a very severe pain in the small of my back. When I would rise it seemed as if my back would break. My kidneys were very badly out of order, and I would have to get up three or four times during the night. I took one box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they effected a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by the T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

"THE INNOCENT MURDERERS"

By Wm. Johnston and Paul West

"You know," said the druggist, in a professional whisper, "they make artificial vichy out of marble dust, somehow, I'm told. Maybe there's a subterranean marble quarry around here somewhere, and thedust is leaking into the lake."

"Very plausible," asserted Rice. "You might mention that fact generally." He thought it would be just as well to have the attention of the public directed as far away from the real cause—or what he firmly believed to be the real cause—as possible.

James Bradley, owner of the icepond, asked Rice his opinion as to whether it would be a good plan, financially, to bottle the water and sell it for medicinal purposes. The professor, hsuddering at the thought, advised delay, to see whether the condition of the pond would be permanent.

As the boys had said, the peculiar tingling effect of the water was most apparent in the vicinity of the icehouse. Rice reached that part of the pond in fear and trembling. He noticed a group standing in earnest conversation by the side of the tumbledown old shed, and his heart stopped beating in dread that they had already discovered the body of Hopkins and were discussing their find. His fears were groundless, however.

At the first opportunity he edged toward the ice-house and managed to secure a glimpse of the interior through a wide crack in the plank wall. Through a chink in the roof, the sun was beating into the house, its rays falling directly on the corner where they had secreted the body. At first Rice was alarmed by this illumination of Nature, but on second thought he realized that it was an excellent piece of good fortune.

"While the sun is shining," he said to himself, the refulgence of the body, if it hasn't died out, will not be noticeable." He noted, too, with satisfaction, that no portion of the bundle showed. They had done their work well, and the planks and sawdust completely covered the ghastly secret.

Rice spent as much time at the ice pond as he dared steal away from his duties, returning only when his presence was absolutely necessary at the college. After the last classes had been dismissed, he again sought conference with his remaining two partners in crime.

"So far the body has not been discovered," he said. "But it cannot be concealed for long. Old Bradley, owner of the pond, is for setting up a bottling plant at once and converting what he considers a freak of nature into money. Very likely he will locate it at the ice-house. By to-morrow morning if the body has not been discovered in the meantime, there will be a still bigger crowd on hand and someone is absolutely certain to stumble over Hopkins."

"It seems to me," said Fischer, knitting his brows, "dot it is not to-morrow dat we haf to fear. It iss to-night. If der body is still as luminous as it vas—?" he stopped questioningly.

The condition of the water indicates that it has not lost any of its peculiar properties," said Rice.

"Den," said Fischer, "ven der crowd goes out dere to-night, or if only von person goes, dey will be sure to see der strange light."

"We must prevent that possibility," said Rice. "We must remove the body to-night." Snyder groaned. He did not relish such a task. Fischer glared at him.

"Vat!" he demanded, "you, too, weakening? Look here, Snyder, I varn you dot any attempt on your part to desert now will be mighty disastrous to you! You brought this whole affair on, and you'll stick till—till the bitter end!"

"I didn't intend doing anything else," expostulated Snyder with an attempt at a show of bravery htat was far from his real feelings. "Only it all seems so horrible!"

"It is," said Rice, "and we must all keep it from growing any more horrible."

"Den it is settled—ve move der body to-night?" asked Fischer.

"I think so," said Rice. "Suppose we meet here to-night, in front of the building, at ten o'clock. If they not found it by that time we will place it somewhere else."

"Where?" asked Snyder, Rice and Fischer thought.

"I have it," said Rice.

A sudden realisation of the need for caution came over him. He beckoned the others nearer to him, and whispered in a tone so low that they could barely hear what he said. They nodded.

"The very place," said Snyder.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN.

The Pursuit of Ernesta.

Detective Sullivan reached Boston about two o'clock in the afternoon. As he alighted from the train he caught sight of one of the men from the main office, and hurried to him.

"Hello, Murphy," was his greeting "The chief got my message?"

"Sure," replied Murphy, "and we have landed 'em all right. Krauss was put on the case, and saw the girl and the fellow meet right here. Then he sent for me. He kept his eyes on 'em until they jumped into a cab and went uptown, and he followed, leaving me here to tip you off."

"Where did they go?" asked Sullivan.

"Krauss will have 'phoned the office about that," said Murphy. "We will call up and see."

Communication with headquarters of Allen's Detective Agency resulted in Sullivan's leaping into a public carriage and being driven rapidly to No. 6, Pemberton Square. On the sidewalk he saw Krauss.

"Hello, Krauss, what's up" he demanded.

"They're upstairs," said Krauss. "I spotted 'em the moment they got together down at the South Terminal. They talked a long while, mighty excited, but I didn't dare get near enough to overhear what they said. Finally the girl—say, she's all right!—finally she threw her arms around his neck, right before the crowd. He looked mighty foolish, and led her to a cab. They jumped in and come up here. I was right behind them, and I've been watching ever since. There's no back way out o' this building—I know the lay of things around here all right. So, if they come out at all, they'll have to come this way. What have they done?"

"I don't know exactly," said Sullivan. "It's a complicated case. The girl's wanted for eloping, that's all so far. Maybe the man—well, I can not tell just yet." He attempted to look mysterious to make Krauss believe he knew mor ethan he was telling. "How long have they been in the building, and what are they up to?"

"About an hour," said Krauss. "They're in a lawyer's office on the second floor. I saw them at the window a little while before you came. Look! There's the girl now!"

Sullivan glanced at the second story window in one of the old dwelling houses converted into business offices. He saw a young woman whom he in stantlyrecognised as Ernesta Frost from her resemblence ot the photograph in Mrs. Hopkins' parlour. He was struck with her beauty, which was all the more attractive at this moment, the girl's face being lighted up with a happy smile, her eyes aglow with evident satisfaction over something. Then she was joined by Gordon, and Sullivan withdrew from the range of vision just in time, as it was not in his book to be seen by the young professor as yet.

"Yes," said the detective, "I see they're there all right. Now I'll tell you. I don't want to keep you standing here any longer and you can go if you want to. Tell the chief though to keep somebody at the office in case I telephone for help, and let him know that I'm standing watch on this couple. I'll be down to the office later, I hope."

Krauss departed, leaving Sullivan alone on the sidewalk. Ae he watched the building he had plenty of time to try ot patch the strange facts and theories of this remarkable case together.

"She's given Hopkins the slip, I guess," said he to himself. "Probably her telegram to Gordon about being in trouble was all a bluff to get him there. So she threw her arms around him in the station, did she? That looks like she cared for him, all right. But what are htey doing in a lawyer's office? You can't get married off the reel in Boston, I know, so it can't be that. Some legal busniess, I suppose, but what kind? I'd like to be up there to find out!"

"And where's poor old Hopkins all this time? Poor, deluded old fellow! I'll bet he's sick of his job, all right! I wonder if she's got his money? Most likely she has, and she and the young chap are going off to enjoy it. Poor old Hopkins! I wish they'd come out!"

He glanced up at the window. Ernesta was shaking hands with a legal looking person, and Gordon was placing his hat on his head.

"They're coming," said Sullivan, and hurried across the square, into the entrance of the court house where he stood watching the door of Number 6. In a few minutes Ernesta and Gordon came down the steps. Sullivan was on the alert. There were no cabs in the square and they would have to walk down the hill to Scollay Square. They turned the corner and Sullivan, only so far behind as he considered absolutely necessary, followed. As they reached Tremont Row Gordon glanced at his watch, and said something to Ernesta, with the result that she took his arm and they quickened their steps, going across the Row to the subway station. It is a difficult thing to shadow anyone in an underground railroad waiting-room, as everybody is obliged to stand so near to everybody else. Sullivan, then, allowed Gordon and the girl to get further ahead of him, and waited till they had descended the stairs and reached the lower platform beofre he bought a ticket and dropped it in the box.

As he heard a train coming in, he made ready for a quick start down the stairs, and watched to see what car the couple would enter. Just in time, he dashed down the stairs and jumped aboard the car behind the one they had entered.

He could see them easily. Gordon appeared very nervous, continually consulting his watch. Sullivan, in turn, looked at his, and found that it was lacking ten minutes to three o'clock.

"They can't be trying to catch a train," thought the detective, "or they wouldn't be going uptown. I have it. They're afraid they'll be too late for banking hours!"

Gordon and Ernesta alighted at Boylston street. Sullivan now had no trouble to following them undetected in the crowd. They ascended to the Common, crossed the street, and entered a bank on the corner. Sullivan smiled with satisfaction at the correctness of his deductions. He tried to peer in at hte windows of the bank, but could see nothing from the front, so he stepped around into Boylston Street and had the satisfaction of being able to watch every movement of Ernesta and Gordon.

They went hurriedly to the paying teller's window, and Sullivan saw that the man behind it knew Gordon, for he reached through and shook his hand. Then ensued what Sullivan interpreted as an introduction of Ernesta, after which the girl passed a check through the window and the teller reached into money drawer. While he was getting the necessary cash, the girl's face was a study to the detective. It fairly radiated with happiness, yet with this was mingled a look of anxiety, as though she feared that after all she was not to receive the money. Gordon wore a frown.

"CHEER UP JEREMIAH"

An Incident of the Days When John Burns Was in Jail

It is, of course, well known that Mr. John Burns, the President of the Local Government Board, spent some weeks in prison in the early days of his career as a result of his prominence in in labor wars, and it is in connection with that experience that he recently told the following amusing story. "I was once," he said, "for the benefit of my health, interned in a building somewhat monastic in character, with a celibate population, and with cellular accommodation which enabled me to be alone. There was there one book called the Bible, and I noticed that my predecessor was a great student of it. With a pin which had probably been concealed in his oakum he had pricked comments in the margin. Opposite this passage in Jeremiah, 'Mine heart within me is broken; all my bones shake; I am like a drunken man, and like a man whom wine hath overcome,' he had pricked, 'Cheer up, Jeremiah!'"

ALFONSO'S QUEER MUSEUM

Making Collection of Articles With Which His Life was Attempted

King Alfonso XIII. of Spain is forming a curious, although somewhat ghastly, museum, where are grouped the various articles which have been used in attempts against his person together with objects which have placed his life in danger.

Among other things in the museum is to be seen the teat of a baby's feeding bottle, with which an attempt was made to poison him at the tender age of eight months. Also a large glass vase, which he fell over and broke at the age of five years, sustaining injuries which placed his life in danger. the walking-stick of a discontented member of the Court, who made an attempt to strike him; pieces of the bomb of Barcelona; the skeleton of one of the horses which was conducting him and a fragment of the landau in which he was seated by the side of President Loubet at the time of the attempt in the Rue de Rivoli, at Paris; various articles found in the street after the explosion of the infernal machine, hidden in a bouquet, which was thrown against his coach on the day of his wedding—in fact, daggers firearms, and projectiles of all kinds which have been used in unsuccessful designs against his life—unsuccessful, thanks to the careful precautions taken by the police.

"PIMPLES"

Broke Out All Over Her Face.

Pimples are caused, almost entirely, by bad blood, and there is only one way to get rid of them, and that is to get at the seat of the trouble by using a good reliable blood purifying medicine.

Burdock Blood Bitters has been on the market for 35 years, and is one of the very best blood medicines procurable. After using it you will find that the pimples have disappeared, and you will have a beautiful clear complexion.

Mrs. Robert McNab, Badjeros, Ont., writes:—"I am greatly pleased to report the benefit I have derived from the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. About a year ago I became so weak and run down I could scarcely walk, and pimples broke out all over my face. I tried one thing after another, but nothing seemed to do me any good. I was advised by a lady friend to try B.B.B., and before I had used one bottle I felt it was doing me good so I used three bottles, and I am now well and strong, and the pimples have all disappeared."

It would not matter so much if you only used sugar in one or two articles of food. But when you think how many of the dishes and drinks you serve, owe much of their goodness to sugar, you see how important it is to get the very best sugar.

By actual analysis St. Lawrence Granulated is 100 per cent pure cane sugar, with no impurities whatever. Being cane sugar, it is much whiter and sweeter than the ordinary beet sugar you so often get.

Because it is all sweetness, St. Lawrence Granulated goes farther and is most economical.

JACK and JILL in FAIRYLAND

(COPYRIGHT, 1910, BY THE NEW YORK HERALD CO.) All Rights Reserved

1—While Jack and Jill were on the hill to get the pail of water
Who should go by but Mary's Lamb. "I'm off to school," sez he; "I am."
So as it was a perfectly fluffy and harmless lamb, Jack thought he'd throw something at it—just on general principles.
"Watch me," said he, most aimable.

2—But the Giant (that Jack the Giant Killer killed afterward, you know) just started to come over a hill at that moment.
And then both Jacky and Jill "let fly"
And the Giant got something right over his eye.

3—So off ran Jack and off ran Jill,
And after went the Giant—as, of course, a Giant will.

4—And he pretty nearly caught 'em, too, I can tell you; only Puss' Seven League Boots happened to be right in front of 'em.
Said Jill, "I've a trick;
Jump into 'em quick."

5—They did, and in a second the Seven League Boots were seven-leaguing. It seemed as-if Jack and Jill's luck had changed at last!

6—But all things which go up must come down.
So Jack fell down upon his crown and Jill came tumbling after While the Giant (who was jolly) split his jolly giant sides with gusts of his demoniacal laughter.

THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS.

1—"This is the land of furniture," the tiny Tads all cry;
"Perhaps we'll see some Deskimos and such things, by and by."

2—"Perhaps we'll see a Zebureau! Oh! look beneath that tree.
I guess that is a Zebrass-bed! He's pretty, isn't he?"

3—"Come on!" exclaims a tiny Tad; "I see a brick smoke-stack!
"Oh, see that funny creature with a chimney on his back."

4—"A Buffalopen-fireplace, he is no good to us!
"For we are very warm with all the exercise and fuss."

FEAR OF DEATH

A Well-Known Magistrate Doubts Its Deterrent Effect on the Criminal

The well-known magistrate, Mr. Plowden, contributes an interesting study in criminal psychology to the discussion on the death penalty which has been carried on for the past fortnight in the columns of the "Times." Incidentally Mr. Plowden pleads for a saner judgment of the character and motives of the murderer. He says:—

It is a popular fallacy to regard a murderer as the worst of criminals. The real truth is that in many cases it is hardly fair to describe him as a criminal at all.

No one who has not been through the fire can tell what may be the effect on his self-control of a long course of studied insults and provocation on the part of a worthless wife against her husband persevered in day by day, for months and even years at a stretch.

Sir Henry Smith, in his virtuous indignation with Crippen, makes no allowance for desperate circumstances like these.

He is angry with Crippen on account of his coolness in the witness-box, which he calls an outrage, and he apparently regards it as a distinct aggravation of his conduct that he should have sworn to love and cherish at the altar the wife whom he subsequently put to death.

It is somewhat amazing to me that considerations such as these should weigh for a moment in any just appreciation of Crippen's character. They were to me absolutely irrelevant.

What Crippen actually did, and for which he suffered death, was to kill a wife whom he hated for the sake of a woman whom he loved. Probably of all the murders that are committed under the sun, in one country or another, there is no more common type of murder than this.

It was the irony of Crippen's fate that he did not meet No. 2 until after he had met No. 1. Had such been his good fortune he would probably have lived a life not better nor worse than his neighbors, and have enjoyed with the best of them the reputation of a contented, law-abiding, citizen. I am convinced from such experience as I have had of criminal courts, extending over many years, that what a man murderously inclined really dreads is not death, but pain.

The spectre of death, though it can always be conjured up, is too remote and shadowy to have much effect on the nerves of a man in the enjoyment of full and vigorous health. Not so with pain. There is no imagination so dull that it cannot take in the terrors of the "cat"; and I believe if such punishment could be made part of the sentence, even without abolishing capital punishment, the deterrent effect would be unmistakable.

I think even Crippen's courage, wonderful as it was, would have quailed on that dark and wintry morning, had he known that he would have to endure a flogging before he was hung.

And had he been asked which he feared most—the physical pain of the lash or the death to follow—can anyone doubt what his answer would have been?

GOOD MANNERS

Apropos the complaint that good manners are declining in France, a Paris correspondent remarks that if women do not respect themselves they can hardly expect men to respect them.

IN ALBERTA'S CABINET

Are Foremost Easterners—Three Natives of Ontario

Four eastern men are members of the Provincial Cabinet of Alberta, the entire personnel of which is considered, at least by the majority party, as very strong.

Hon. Arthur Lewis Sifton, late Chief Justice Sifton, and now premier provincial treasurer and minister of public works for Alberta, is a son of the Hon. John W. Sifton, at one time speaker of the Manitoba Assembly. Born near London, Ontario, on Oct. 26, 1858, he went west of the Great Lakes in 1875, when his family moved to the then sparsely settled province of Manitoba. In the year following, Arthur, then a youth of 18 years of age, returned to Cobourg, Ontario, where he attended the Victoria University in that town, taking the arts degree in 1880. The city of Winnipeg saw him complete his law course, and Brandon his entry into the legal profession, in which latter city he took an active interest in matters municipal. He was a member for a time of the Brandon city council.

In 1885, Mr. Sifton moved to Prince Albert, and in 1889 to Calgary, whence in 1898 he was elected a member of the Northwest Council, and in 1901 selected as a commissioner of public works. In 1903 he was created chief justice of the Northwest Territories, and in 1907 chief justice of Alberta. In 1882 he married Miss Mary H. Deering, and has two children. In 1905 Mr. Sifton refused the offer of the leadership of the Liberal party and the provincial premiership that went with it; but with the Liberals divided against themselves on a question of a colonization railroad he yielded to the demand for his return.

A powerful magnetic speaker, tactful, dominant, self-reliant, unafraid, clear-seeing, possessed of a colossal brain and urbane withal, Premier Sifton is one of the biggest men in the Northwest.

Hon. Duncan Marshall

If Duncan Marshall were to walk down the main street of any city, town or village in the province of Alberta, very likely every man on the thoroughfare would speak to him, and address him with real western cordiality.

Hon. Duncan Marshall has spoken in every part of that huge province. He knows Alberta, and Alberta, after duly appraising the man, has taken him to her heart.

His father was the late John Marshall, one of the pioneers of Bruce County, Ont. He was born in Ellerslie, Ontario, on Sept. 24, 1872, and received his education in the public schools, Walkerton High School and Owen Sound Collegiate, securing a teacher's certificate at the age of 17 years as a result of his energetic application to his academic work. Even at his early age, Mr. Marshall evidenced a strong inclination towards politics, and, interesting himself in the farmers' party, the Patrons of Industry of Ontario, was, at 18 years of age, organizer for the party.

The fact that seventeen Patrons were elected at the next election is proof of the executive ability possessed and exercised by Mr. Marshall.

Going to the Maritime Provinces in the interests of the Patrons, Mr. Marshall returned in 1896 to his native province and entered the field journalistic, connecting himself with the Toronto World and the News, Toronto, until the year 1900. He bought and edited a paper in Thornbury, and in 1903 took over the Bracebridge Gazette, entering politics with a vim. In the contest in Muskoka constituency he cut the majority in two, and in 1905 came to the West as manager of the Edmonton Bulletin. Buying an 800-acre farm at Veds, Mr. Marshall studied western conditions and absorbed much that was of later benefit. In the general election of the province he was elected, and he is the only man in the new Alberta cabinet who held a portfolio in the old ministry, in which he was also minister of agriculture.

Mr. Marshall married Miss McIsaac, of Charlottetown, P.E.I., and has two children.

Hon. Charles R. Mitchell

Quiet and dignified, but brisk and very businesslike, is Charles R Mitchell, attorney-general and minister of education for the Province of Alberta, as befits a keen young lawyer from the Maritime Provinces, that incubator of college presidents, politicians of high calibre, and men of like stamp.

The Hon. Mr. Mitchell is a son of the late James Mitchell, inspector of lighthouses, and was born at Newcastle, N.B., on Nov. 20, 1872. He is a nephew of Hon. Peter Mitchell, one of the fathers of confederation, the same who first organized the department of marine and fisheries at Ottawa. He was educated at Harkin's Academy, Newcastle, and the University of New Brunswick, where he took degrees in arts and civil engineering. Beginning the study of law in the office of Hon. Andrew Blair, at St. John, he practised later with Hon. L. J. Tweedie, at Chatham. In 1897 King's College, Windsor, conferred the degree of B.C.L. upon him, and in the year 1898 Mr. Mitchell came west to Medicine Hat, where, for several years he sat in the council, and later was city solicitor. In the year 1907 he was made district judge for the judicial district of Calgary.

He was married at St. Thomas, Ontario, to Miss Clara Fraser, daughter of the late Alexander Fraser.

Hon. Archibald J. McLean

A typical western rancher is Archibald J. McLean, provincial secretary for Alberta. Mr. McLean is rich from a worldly standpoint, but one would never learn that fact from his own lips. One could tell at a glance that the provincial secretary had lived in the open, and was generously hospitable, but that he was the famous owner of the C. Y. ranch in sunny Southern Alberta, of 45,000 acres, one would not learn from him in many years. Mr McLean is also interested in good coal mines.

Born in Aldboro, West Elgin, Ont., on Sept. 25, 1863, Mr. McLean went west to Manitoba in 1881, and six years later went on to Alberta, where he invested in one of the largest ranches in the country.

Saved His Life

Mr. H. C. Freeman was completely restored to health and strength by Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, the grand old family medicine.

He writes: "I honestly believe I owe my life to the use of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey. After 31 years of hard work as expert accountant I suffered a complete physical breakdown and was compelled to give up my work. A hard, dry cough and frequent night sweats were gradually sapping what little vitality I had left. A friend induced me to try Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey. Almost immediately I began to feel a change for the better. I am working harder today than ever before, and I feel as I did twenty years ago. Nothing in the world but Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey brought about my present condition, and I am never without a bottle of this wonderful stimulant in my room. It is my only medicine." H. Chester Freeman, 224 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill., U. S.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

is one of the greatest strength builders and tonic stimulants known to science. Its palatability and freedom from injurious substances render it so that it can be retained by the most sensitive stomach. Overworked men, delicate women and sickly children will find in it the health and strength-giving properties so necessary to them. It strengthens and sustains the system; is a promoter of health and longevity; makes the old feel young and keeps the young strong and vigorous.

All grocers and liquor dealers, or direct, $1.25 a large bottle. Medical booklet and doctor's advice sent free to any one who writes

MARITIME BRIDGES

And Other Railway Improvements Under Consideration

The C.P.R. has had several surveyors overlooking the Joggin and other bridges between Digby and Annapolis, N.S. Several of these bridges are not constructed sufficiently heavy to allow the passage of large locomotives, and it is necessary that they be rebuilt in the near future. It is contemplated to abandon the two bridges that span the Joggin, and possibly a third, and erect a steel bridge at the first location made by the Western Counties Railway a short distance beyond Digby town. This bridge will be much longer than either of the present structures spanning the Joggin, but will do away with both of them, and the approaches will be greatly improved and much easier than at present and make the road five miles shorter. Other improvements are contemplated, which, when completed, will afford a more rapid trip from Yarmouth to Halifax.

NOT FOR THE CHURCH

Was Lord Morley—No Sign as a Boy of Becoming Great

There are still people in Blackburn who can recall Lord Morley who, as the son of Jonathan Morley, a surgeon of that town, spent his boyhood much in the same way as other boys do, preferring the open air to the study. John Morley in those days evinced no signs of forthcoming greatness. "I shall put him into the Church," old Dr. Morley used to say. "He will be able to earn a living at that." But John Morley had no desire to enter the Church, and, if he did not flatly decline to go, he soon showed that he would prefer to rough it in a vocation he cared for than escape the worry of having to hunt for to-morrow's meal by adopting a calling which could not awake any sympathy in him. At twenty-one he was called to the Bar. Then he began to write, and ultimately turned to politics. Curiously enough he made his first attempt to enter the House by contesting Blackburn, and was rejected. Eleven years later he put up for Westminster, and here again met with defeat. His opportunity came with a by-election at Newcastle in 1883, when he headed the poll.

BIRTH-RATE LOWER

In Great Britain—So is the Death-Rate—Latest Figures

An official return shows that the birth-rate and the death-rate in England and Wales during the quarter ended September 30th were the lowest ever recorded.

Births numbered 227,246, or 24.9 per 1,000 of the population. That is 2.6 per 1,000 below the average for the ten preceding third quarters. Deaths totalled 104,188, or 11.4 per 1,000, which is 2.8 per 1,000 below the average.

In the whole of the United Kingdom 282,519 births and 135,015 deaths were registered, the birth-rate being 24.7 and the death-rate 11.8 per 1,000 of the population. The population thus increased by 147,504.

During the quarter ended June 30th the marriages of 122,006 people were recorded, or 13.5 per 1,000, against an average of 16.8 per 1,000 in the corresponding quarter of the preceding ten years.

WEALTHY SCHOOL-BOYS

Marquesses and Earls in Eton Jackets —Own 600,000 Acres

Among the boys who are this term wrestling with Euclid and Horace at Eton and who are not superior to the fascinations of the "tuck-shop," are two Princes and no fewer than sixteen youthful lordlings, who among them will one day divide fifty-three titles, lord it over 600,000 acres—an area three and a half times that of the entire County of Middlesex, and, roughly speaking, as large as Cheshire or Nottinghamshire—and will be able to pick and choose among forty-two of the most palatial "pleasure-houses" in the United Kingdom.

Probably the most enviable of these aristocrats in Eton jackets is the Marquess of Hartinton, heir to all the vast possessions of the Cavendishes, with their dukedom and five other titles of peerage. He will have six magnificent mansions in England, one alone of which is said to be worth $20,000,000, and a seventh in Ireland. His pictures alone at Chatsworth, Hardwicke, and Devonshire House represent more than a king's ransom; and the land that will call him lord will be more than Rutland County, with the County of London thrown in.

Then there is the seventeen-year-old Marquess of Titchfield, future Duke of Portland, and owner of the priceless treasures of Welbeck Abbey, of three castles and mansions in Scotland, and a house in Grosvenor Square. He will be duke, marquess, earl, viscount, and baron, all in one, and will own more acres than are crowded into Middlesex.

Bruce Arthur Ashley Ogilvy, an Etonian of fifteen summers, is known in Scotland as the tenth Earl of Airlie, and holder of a barony more than four centuries old. His ancestral home is Cortachy Castle, in Forfarshire; and he owns more land than you will find in Banffshire or Linlithgow. A fellow-peer of the same age at Eton College is the Earl of Lathom and Baron Skelmersdale, who has had a title ever since he had his first rocking-horse ride in the Lathom House nursery, and who owns considerably more than a hundred square miles of land. And a still younger schoolboy earl is my Lord of Stamford, aetat fourteen, earl and baron, and a descendant of the old-time Dukes of Suffolk.

These three Etonian earls are all peers in their own right, and not merely courtesy lords; and within a few years they will probably have exchanged their school jackets for the ermine and scarlet of the House of Lords.

OLD SAYINGS IN RHYMES

As poor as a church mouse, as thin as a rail,
As fat as a porpoise, as rough as a gale,
As brave as a lion, as spry as a rat,
As bright as a sixpence, as weak as a cat.

As proud as a peacock, as sly as a fox,
As mad as a March hare, as strong as an ox,
As fair as a lily, as empty as air,
As rich as was Croesus, as cross as a bear.

As pure as an angel, as neat as a pin,
As smart as a steel trap, as ugly as sin,
As dead as a door nail, as white as a sheet,
As flat as a pancake, as red as a beet.

As round as an apple, as black as your hat,
As brown as a berry, as blind as a bat,
As mean as a miser, as full as a tick,
As plump as a partridge, as sharp as a stick.

As clean as a penny, as dark as a pall,
As hard as a millstone, as bitter as gall,
As fine as a fiddle, as clear as a bell,
As dry as a herring, as deep as a well.

As light as a feather, as hard as a rock,
As stiff as a poker, as calm as a clock,
As green as a gosling, as brisk as a bee,
And now let me stop, lest you weary of me.

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Feb. 9.—Improved domestic call for cash wheat strengthened the option market to-day and caused slowly rising prices from the start. Closing figures were at a net advance of ⅛@¼c. The day's business left all other leading staples, too, at a level above last night: Corn, up ⅛@c to ⅜c; oats, ⅛c to ⅛c, and hog products, 10@30c. There was added to have been much buying of Canadian wheat for export account. Local sales of cash grades reached a total of 85,000 bushels in small lots. Primary receipts were short of a year ago and there was a noticeable let-up in country offerings. Closing prices were almost the top for session, with the final tone firm. May fluctuated from 94⅛c to 95¼c, with last sales ⅝c up, to 95c.

Liverpool wheat futures closed to-day ½d to ⅝d higher than yesterday; corn futures were ⅛d to ¼d lower. At Berlin wheat was ⅛c lower; at Paris, unchanged; at Buda Pest, ⅝c higher, and at Antwerp, unchanged.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Feb. 9.—The foreign demand for Manitoba spring wheat was good and a fair volume of business was worked at an advance in bids of 1½d. The feeling in oats is steady, but the volume of business doing is small. There was considerable enquiry for spring wheat flour and sales of some round lots were made for shipment between now and June. Provisions are fairly active and steady. There is an easier feeling in the market for potatoes and sales of carlots (Green Mountains) were made at 87½c per bag. A few cars of American potatoes have been imported which cost 87½c, duty paid.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Toronto Live Stock.

TORONTO, Feb. 9.—The railways reported receipts of 70 carloads at the City Market, consisting of 802 cattle, 1088 hogs, 1407 sheep and lambs, 41 calves and 6 horses.

Butchers.

Prime picked lots of butchers' cattle sold at $6 to $6.25; loads of good $5.75 to $6; medium, $5.40 to $5.60; common, $5 to $5.30; cows, $3.60 to $5.40; canners, $2.25 to $3; bulls, $4.50 to $5.50.

Milkers and Springers.

The bulk of the milkers and springers coming on the market are common to medium, and are easier in price at $60 to $65 each. Good to choice cows are scarce and sell readily at $70, $75, $80 and occasionally one reaches $100, which occurred to-day.

Veal Calves.

Good to choice veal calves are scarce. Common, sell at $2.50 to $4.50; medium at $5 to $6; good at $7 to $8, and choice new milk fed calves, $8.50 to $9.50, but there are very few of the latter class, some weeks none at all, at least we seldom see them

Sheep and Lambs

The market is firm for sheep and lambs. Wesley Dunn, who does the bulk of the trade, reports prices as follows: Sheep, ewes, $4.25 to $4.75, rams, $3.50 to $4 per cwt.; lambs, $6 to $6.50.

Hogs.

[illegible] and weighed off at $9.60 at the market, and $9.75 to drovers for hogs f.o.b. cars at country points. Thick fat heavy hogs are not worth as much by 25c per cwt., and are being culled out at that reduction in price. Drovers are warned to go easy on heavy hogs if they don't want to lose money.

Chicago Live Stock.

CHICAGO, Feb. 9.—Cattle—Receipts, 800. Market, steady. Beeves, $5 to $8.80; Texas steers, $4.15 to $5.50; western steers, $4.40 to $6.70; stockers and feeders, $3.25 to $5.90; cows and heifers, $2.65 to $5.80; calves, $7.65 to $9.

Hogs—Receipts, 34,000; market active; light, $7.45 to $7.75; mixed, $7.35 to $7.65; heavy, $7.05 to $7.60; rough, $7.05 to $7.25; good to choice hogs, $7.25 to $7.60; pigs, $7.45 to $7.80; bulk of sales, $7.40 to $7.60.

Sheep—Receipts, 20,000; market, weak; native, $3.60 to $4.40; western, $3.50 to $4.40; yearlings, $4.50 to $5.50; lambs, native, $4.25 to $6.25; western, $4.50 to $6.25.

Two Aviators Killed.

Douai, France, Feb. 10.—Two more names were added to the death roll of the aeroplane yesterday. The aviators Noel and Delatorre, were killed while conducting a trial of a military aeroplane before experts from the War Department, previous to its delivery to the army. Noel was the pilot and Delatorre a passenger.

The aviators were planing down from a height of about 250 feet, when suddenly the wings folded up and the machine fell headlong to the earth.

Sewage Contamination.

Montreal, Feb. 10.—After an investigation of the typhoid outbreak in Ottawa, Mr. Meadows, provincial sanitary inspector, has come to the conclusion that the cause of the outbreak was the drinking water, contaminated by sewerage near the city. The source of contamination being local, Hull and Aylmer are in no danger of a similar outbreak.

Found Wreckage.

Victoria, Feb. 10.—A life preserver marked steamer Pamlico, N.Y., has been found at Nitynat, Vancouver Island. The same name is on a broken bar found. Lumber, a ship's rail and empty provision cases have come ashore.

The schooner Pamlico, formerly the Geo. W. Roper, is registered in New York. She is forty tons and carries six men.

Won His Appeal.

Montreal, Feb. 10.—David Russell has won, in appeal, in the fight for jurisdiction before the Ontario courts in the case which he brought some time ago against M. N. Greenshields, K.C., for the sum of $1,250,000, a dispute in a land deal in Ontario being the basis of the suit.

Hanged the Clever Forger.

Of curious petitions against the death penalty being enforced one recalls the eighteenth century case of William Lyland, who was sentenced for forging a bill for £7,114 on the East India House. The forgery was a work of art. No less than thirty signatures were imitated, and at the trial not one of the victims could swear that the signature was not his own. However, with the help of the paper manufacturers Ryland's guilt was brought home. Then came the petition of his friends. So clever a man ought never to be hanged, they pleaded. His craftsmanship should save him. It gained him a respite. He was allowed to finish a fine engraving he had begun, but nothing more. Though the engraver was a favorite of George III., that king quite failed to see how a forgery could be excused on the ground that it was a clever forgery.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Soap and Water Cure.

The traveler in the Himalayas must be prepared for surprises. Two days after the Hon. C. G. Bruce had reached Mana he received a message from a young lady saying that ever since she had seen him on the day of his arrival she had been ill. "I was very much hurt, I allow," says Major Bruce in "Twenty Years in the Himalayas." During the course of a short but interesting career no such snub had ever been administered to my self respect. I said, 'But can't I do anything?' She said, 'Yes; wash your face and let me have the water.' So we got hot water and soap, and she sat on a rock to see that there was no deception. The water, or, rather, the decoction, was then put into a long tumbler, and she then and there drank it all! What is more, the next day she sent word that she was quite cured."

NEED NOT WORRY

From Farm and Dairy.

Toronto, Monday, Feb. 4, 1911.—The excitement over the reciprocity situation seems to have calmed down preceding the outcome of the deliberations of the Americans on the question. No matter how they view it, Canadian farmers can afford to remain easy in their minds. Their markets are absolutely assured and the growth of the country coupled with the advantages of position precludes all possibility of their being ousted as caterers to their own countrymen. Spring business is reported as opening up well in all departments of trade and merchants and wholesale houses are correspondingly pleased over the outlook. Banks throughout the country have had a prosperous year. Call money in Toronto rules at 5½ per cent.

WHEAT

Wheat has been see-sawing throughout the week, with a tendency towards its close, to be weaker. From all appearances there is not likely to be much change in quotations for some time to come. The amount of wheat in sight precludes all possibility of the bulls raising the price beyond a fair marketable figure. The quantity of wheat and flour in transit to Europe towards the end of last week was about 89,139,000 bushes against 59,364,000 bushels at the same period last year.

The local trade is steady and dealers give the following quotations: No. 1, Northern $1.08; No. 2, 99½c a bushel; Ontario winter wheat, No. 2, 86c to 87c outside. On the farmers' market, fall wheat is selling at 86c to 87c and goose wheat at 80c to 83c a bushel.

COARSE GRAINS

The market for coarse grains is firm and local dealers quote, as follows, Canada Western Oats, No. 2, 37½c; No. 3, 36c a bushel at lake ports for immediate shipment; Ontario White oats, No. 2, 32½c to 33½c outside; No. 3, 35c to 36c a bushel on track; peas, 79c to 80c; American yellow corn, No. 3, 53c on track, Toronto; feed barley, 49c to 50c; malting barley, 53c to 55c a bushel outside; buckwheat, 47c a bushel at shipping points. On the farmers' market coarse grains are selling at the following prices, oats 38c to 39c; peas, 75c to 76c; barley, 66c to 66c; rye, 60c to 70c; buckwheat, 49c to 50c a bushel.

In Montreal trade is steady and prices firm, dealers give the following quotations: Canada Western oats, No. 2, 39½c; No. 3, 38½c a bushel; feed barley, 46c a bushel; malting barley, 67c to 68c a bushel; rye, 61c to 62c; buckwheat, 53c a bushel ex store.

POTATOES AND BEANS

There is no change noticeable in this market. Dealers are quoting potatoes at 90c to $1 a bag outside of store, and 75c to 80c a bag in a jobbing way. Beans are quoted at $1.90 to $2 a bushel for three pound pickers. On the farmers' market potatoes are selling at 90c to $1 a bag. In Montreal the situation is somewhat different, as there is a very active demand and there is not much stock coming in from the maritime provinces. Potatoes are quoted at 90c to 95c a bag. There is not much doing in the sale of beans and quotations are nominal at $1.75 to $1.75 a bushel for three pound pickers.

EGGS AND POULTRY

Eggs are declining in price everywhere and retailers are now enabled to replenish their stocks at from 28c to 30c a dozen. There is a suspicion that the cold storage plants are somewhat overloaded for this particular part of the season and are trying to dispose of some of their surplus stock before spring opens up in real earnest. At any rate the quantities of storage stock on the market give strength to the supposition. Present quotations for new laid eggs by wholesalers are strictly new laid eggs, 32c to 34c a doz.; cold storage stock, 25c; selected eggs, 26c to 28c a doz. On the farmers' market, fresh laid eggs are selling at 34c to 40c a dozen. Wholesale prices for poultry are about the same as last week and range as follows: chickens, 17c to 18c; fowl, 12c to 14c; turkeys, 22c to 25c; ducks, 14c to 17c; geese, 12c to 14c a lb.; live weight, one cent to two cents a pound cheaper.

On the farmers' market poultry are selling at the following prices: chickens, 18c to 20c; fowl, 14c to 15c; turkeys, 23c to 24c; ducks, 17c to 18c; geese, 17c to 18c a lb. Montreal wholesale prices for eggs and poultry are as follows: new laid eggs, 30c to 32c a dozen; cold storage stock, 25c a dozen. Prices for poultry have remained unchanged at last week's quotations and are as follows: chickens, 13c to 14c; fowl, 11c to 12c; turkeys, 18c to 19c; geese, 13c and ducks, 15c to 17c a lb. The Allan Line steamer Hesperian recently took to Liverpool a shipment of 3618 cases of dressed poultry from Chicago.

DAIRY PRODUCTS

Butter is also on the down grade, not only in Toronto, but all over the Dominion. Local dealers make the following quotations: choice creamery prints 28c to 29c; choice dairy prints, 24c to 25c separator prints, 22c to 23c and butter of ordinary quality, 17c to 18c a lb. On the farmers' market choice dairy butter is quoted at 24c to 26c a lb.

Local wholesale quotations for cheese are, large cheese 12c a lb.; twins, 12½c a lb. Montreal wholesale prices for butter and cheese are quoted as follows: choicest creamery, 24c to 24½c a lb.; Western dairy 19c to 23c, choice dairy 22c to 23c a lb.; Western colored cheese, 12½c to 13c. Western White cheese, 11½c to 12c a lb., Eastern cheese, 12½c to 13½c a lb.

HAY

Local trade is exceedingly quiet in hay, everyone seems to be well supplied. Wholesale prices are, No. 1 timothy, $11.50 to $12; No. 2, $10.50 to $11 a ton on track, Toronto; straw, $6.50 to $7 a ton on track, Toronto. On the farmers' market choice timothy is selling at $13 to $20 a ton, clover and clover mixed at $13 to $14, straw in bundles, $17 to $18 and loose straw, $8 to $9. Montreal prices (wholesale) are as follows: choice No. 1 timothy, $11.50 to $12; No. 2, $10 to $10.50; clover mixed, $9.50 to $10.

MILL FEEDS

Contrary to the rumours current in the trade last week there is no change in the price of millfeeds. Trade is steady, and the supply is equivalent to the demand. Wholesalers quote Ontario bran $20; shorts $22 a ton on track, Toronto; Manitoba bran, $19 and shorts $20 a ton on track, Toronto.

Montreal prices are nominal, although there is a very small supply of Ontario bran. Ontario bran is quoted on the market at $22 to $23 a ton; shorts have advanced in price and are quoted at as high as $24 a ton. Manitoba bran is $22 a ton in bags; shorts, $24 a ton.

SEEDS

Quotations for seeds in Toronto are unchanged from last week and are as follows: No. 1 alsike 97 to $7.00 a bush; No. 2, alsike, $6.50 to $7; No. 3 alsike, $5.50 to $6.25 a bush.; No. 1 red clover, $6.75 to $7 a bush; No. 2, $6 to $6.50 a bush.; Montreal dealers quote as follows: No. 1 alsike, $7 to $7.50; No. 2, $6.50 to $7; No. 3, $5.50 to $6 a bush; No. 1 red clover, $6.50 to $7; No. 2, $6 to $6.25; No 3, $5.50 to $5.75 a bush.

WOOL

Dealers give the following quotations washed fleeces, 20c to 22c a lb.; unwashed fleeces, 13c to 14c ;and rejects, 16c a lb. Montreal quotations are washed fleeces, 26c to 27c; unwashed fleeces, 17c to 18c a lb. Trade continues to be fairly brisk.

HIDES

There is absolutely no change in the prices of hides, either in Toronto or Montreal. Toronto quotations are given as No. 1 inspected steers and cows, 9½c, No. 2, 7½c to 8½; No. 3, 6½c a lb.; calfskins, 12c to 14c a lb.; tallow, 4½c a lb. At country points dealers are paying the following prices: Cured hides, 8c to 8½c a lb.; green hides, 7½c a lb.; sheep skins, 60c to 90c; horsehides, $2.75; horse hair, 30c a lb.; calfskin, 11c to 12c a lb Montreal dealers give quotations as follows: No. 1 steer and cow hides, 10c; No. 2, 9c; No. 3, 8c a lb.; calfskins, 13c to 15c a lb.; lambskins, 60c to $1.60 each.

HOPS

The Trade Bulletin has this to say in regard to the hops market. "The market continues strong at an advance of from 2c to 4c a lb., and we quote: Bohemians 38c to 40c; British Columbia, 25c f.o.b. coast; English mixed Kent Goldens, 37c to 40c; Bavarian, 35c to 37c; German, 35c Californian, 17½c to 20c; f.o.e. coast Oregon 17c to 18c f.o.b. coast; Canadian 22c, but very few if any here. Brewers are said to be low down in supplies."

FRUIT AND VEGETABLES

The following quotations for fruit and vegetables are given: cranberries, $10 to $10.50 a barrel; beets, 60c a bag; carrots, 60c a bag; yellow onions, $2.50 to $2.75 a case; Canada beans, $3 a bushel; parsnips, 60c a bag; cabbage, 40c to 45c a dozen. On the farmers' market vegetables are selling at the following prices: cabbage, 50c to 60c a dozen; dry onions, 40c to 45c a basket; celery, 50c to 75c; cauliflower, 10c to 15c each.

HONEY

Prices are quoted by wholesale dealers as follows: strained clover honey in 60 lb. tins, 10c a lb.; buckwheat honey, 7c a lb. in tins; 6½c a lb. in barrels; choice comb honey, $2.25 to $2.50 a dozen.

HORSE MARKET

Things are continuing to pick up but they might be a good deal better still without dislocating the neck of trade. The steadiness of the winter is causing a few farmers to dispose of some of their animals, on account of scarcity of feed.

The following prices have been quoted during the past week: choice heavy draft horses, $270 to $300; medium quality $230 to $260; ordinary quality, $180 to $21 agricultural horses, $190 to $235; drivers $200 to $320; expressers, $190 to $270; saddle horses, $180 to $240; serviceably sound horses, $80 to $120.

LIVE STOCK

There was a steady trade throughout the week and although prices did no rise to a startling height they were good enough to keep buyers and sellers alike in good humour. The only noticeable feature to be recorded is the drop in the price of lambs, which declined 50c cwt.; all other grades, including hogs remained stationary at prices quoted last week. One or two dealers were rather inclined to be caustic over this issuance by the press of high level prices paid for stock. They stated that such prices were to vendors and did not actually represent the correct market prices, vendors were apt to be misled and to hold their cattle at prices that were really only paid for absolutely superior animals.

The following prices were current during the week: choice export cattle, $6 to $6.25; medium, $5.50 to $5.75; ordinary quality, $4.60 to $5.25 a cwt., choice butcher cattle, $5.75 to $6; medium, $4.25 to $5.50; ordinary quality, $4.25 to $5.25 a cwt.; stockers, $4.25 to $5; medium, $4.25 to $4.50; feeders, $5 to $5.50; carcasses, $2.75 to $3; choice milch cows, $60 to $75; springers, $60 to $80, calves, $4 to $8.50; sheep.—ewes, $4.25 to $4.50; bucks, $3.25 to $4.50; lambs, $6 to $6.25; hogs, f.o.b $7, fed and watered, $7.50 a cwt. The Trade Bulletin, London cable reads as follows: "The market is firm, Canadian bacon quoted at 68s. to 69s."

MONTREAL HOG MARKET

Montreal, Sat. Feb. 4.—There has been a decidedly weaker tone to the market here for live hogs, and although the supplies were fairly light, the offerings have been very much smaller than they were last week. There was hardly sufficient demand to absorb the total supply, and prices were lower than prevailed last week. Selected lots weighed off cars sold at $7.25 to $7.50 a cwt. Prices quoted on dressed hogs have also declined, and fresh killed abbatoir stock is offering freely at $10.50 to $10.75 a cwt., with country dressed quoted at $9.50 to $9.75 a cwt.

EXPORT BUTTER AND CHEESE

Montreal, Sat. Feb. 4th.—The trade in cheese has dropped off this week, and as far as can be ascertained there is very little business being done, what shipping is going on being in fulfilment of orders that were booked during the past two weeks, or goods that have been ordered forward by the owners in Great Britain.

I will make up Now Party Dresses, Blouses and Suits and guarantee all my work to be the best on the market.

J. GOLDBERG 452 GEORGE STREET TELEPHONE 1267

The steamers that sailed last week from the Atlantic ports carried away over 35,000 boxes of cheese, and as many more were booked for the steamers that are expected to sail this week. Stocks have been greatly reduced by these shipments, and it is doubtful if there are 100,000 boxes of cheese available in all Canada. The total stock in store in Montreal is estimated at about 40,000 to 50,000 boxes.

The market for butter is considerably improved owing to the increased demand from local sources and from the far West, and finest creamery is firmly held at 26c a lb., with undergrades at 24c to 25½c a lb.

MAN GOES TO GAOL FOR ONE MONTH ON A CHARGE OF ASSAULTING A YOUNG GIRL

Chas. Brimble Could Not Pay the Fine Inflicted---Accused of Following Girl and Holding Her---Father and Brother Gave Chase and the Offender Was Finally Rounded Up.

Chas. Brimble, a man who came here from Port Perry some time ago and got in the employ of the B. F. Ackerman Co., was this morning sent to gaol for one month, for assaulting a young girl on Auburn street last night. He was given the option of a fine of $20.00, but could not pay the fine. The young lady is Miss Foster, of No. 5 Dunlap street, near Auburn. She gave evidence to the effect that the accused met her last night near the Royal Theatre, when she was going on her way home from the Salvation Army meeting about 9 o'clock. She stated that he followed her up as far as the Central Park before he said anything, and then he stepped up to her and said "hello." She replied that she had seen him before, whereupon he argued with her that she had not seen him before. She further stated that she had seen the accused several times on the street, and knew his name, but never talked to him. When he had followed her some distance past the Park, he started to recall a supposed previous appointment which they had made on Hunter street last summer. She stated that she told him that she wanted nothing to do with him .He had not asked to see her home. She said that he kept following her until they reached the other side of the Smith street bridge, all the way she had kept telling him that she wanted nothing to do with him as she was going to meet her father and brother. He still persisted in following her, but did not lay hands on her until they reached the corner at the east side of the bridge. She stated that he took hold of her, and would not let her go any further. She had called out several times, but no person came to her assistance. This occurred just when they had reached Auburn street. When she started to scream, he allowed her to walk in the direction of home, but still kept with her. When they got near home, he left her with a "Don't go away mad." She ran home and related her experiences to her father and brother, who immediately gave chase to the culprit, evidently with good results.

Mr. Richard Foster, the complainant's father then related his part in the event. He stated that his daughter came in about 10.50 and told him the story as she had related it in court, and he and his son went out to get the accused. They went out Auburn street and when they got near the end of it, they saw the man. He did not hurry until they got within 50 yards of him, and then they started to run. He did the same and the three did a lively sprint out of Auburn street. The race continued until they got down near the George street church, where they caught up with Brimble. Mr. Foster, Jr., caught hold of him and the two closed, then the elder Foster got into the game. After a scuffle they succeeded in collaring Brimble, and proceeded to take him to the police station. They had no trouble until they got down near Brock street, when the prisoner refused to go any further, saying that if they wanted to take him to the police station they would have to get a police officer. The elder Foster held the prisoner while his son went for the officer. All went well until five or six of the prisoner's friends gathered around, and some threatening remarks were passed. Mr. Foster got alarmed at the length of time the officer was in coming, being in the predicament he was situated and he thought the best thing he could do would be to let the prisoner go. He told the accused at this stage that he had better go, and leave young girls alone in the future. Just then Constable Adams came around the corner, and the prisoner bolted. P. C. Adams went after him and soon had him in a loving embrace.

Mr. Foster, jr., was put in the box and gave corroborative evidence, which the prisoner did not deny. Brimble had previously pleaded not guilty, but His Worship Magistrate Dumble thought that the evidence was sufficient. The prisoner was given a chance to give evidence, however, and did so to the effect that the girl had allowed him to go until they got to the other side of the bridge, and then she said he had better not come any further as they might meet her father and brother. This evidence was not gone into.

Mr. Foster told the court that his daughter had been molested no less than five times before on her way home from the Salvation Army meetings, and he did not know who the offender was. The magistrate pointed out the folly of allowing a young girl to go alone so far at night, especially along such a lonely street, and advised Mr. Foster to not let her do so any more.

The Chief stated that during the last month several complaints had been received, similar to this one, but he could not say as to whether the prisoner was the offender. He said that the whole affair would be carefully investigated and that the next offender would be severely dealt with. The prisoner was then taken to his new home.

WANTED FOR THEFT

Milton Thompson, a Port Hope Man, Caught by P. C. Newhall Yesterday, Accused of Stealing Jewellery

TAKEN BACK TO-DAY

Milton Thompson, who was employed as porter at the Royal Hotel, Port Hope, until about two weeks ago, was arrested here yesterday, at the hotel where he was staying, on a charge of stealing about $15.00 or $20.00 worth of jewelry from the Royal Hotel. The jewelry consisted of bracelets, two rings and a lady's chain and locket. The accused came to this city about two weeks ago and got in the employ of a local hotel, as porter. A few days ago, Chief Thompson received a communication from Chief Bond, Port Hope, giving a description of the man, and the stolen goods. The local officers got busy and yesterday P. C. Newhall located his man at the hotel, where the latter was employed. Chief Bond, of Port Hope, arrived in the city this morning and took the prisoner out on the noon train, G. T. R.

It Grows Hair

Here Are Facts We Want You to Prove at Our Risk

Marvelous as it may seem, Rexall "93" Hair Tonic has grown hair on heads that were once bald. Of course, in none of these cases were the hair roots dead, nor had the scalp taken on a glazed, shiny appearance.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic acts scientifically, destroying the germs which are usually responsible for baldness. It penetrates to the roots of the hair, stimulating and nourishing them. It is a most pleasant toilet necessity, is delicately perfumed, and will not gum or permanently stain the hair.

We want you to get a bottle of Rexall "93" Hair Tonic and use it as directed. If it does not relieve scalp irritation, remove dandruff, prevent the hair from falling out and promote an increased growth of hair, and in every way give entire satisfaction, simply come back and tell us, and without question or formality we will hand to you every penny paid us for it. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. Sold only at our store,—The Rexall Store, Mel Dermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets.

ENJOYABLE "AT HOME"

Was Given by the Knox Church Ladies' Aid

The Ladies' Aid Society of Knox church held a social yesterday afternoon for the new members of the Society and a very enjoyable time was spent. After the business portion of the meeting had been transacted with Mrs. Shurter the president in the chair, a pleasant social hour was spent. The programme included solos by Miss Williamson and Mrs. Keith and a some recitation on Ladies' Aid Work by Mrs Keith. At the conclusion of the programme the ladies retired to the dining room, where an enjoyable repast was served. Twelve new members were added to the ranks of the Society, increasing the membership to sixty.

Farmers' Bank Investigation

Yesterday afternoon in Toronto a summons was issued for service on Hon. J. R. Stratton, in connection with the Farmer's Bank Investigation, which was given journalistic prominence beyond what the circumstances warrant; for the matter is capable of satisfactory explanation, and does not involve Mr. Stratton in a personal way, but joins him with the matter in his official capacity, as President of The Trusts and Guarantee Company.

Mr. Stratton was in Toronto on Thursday and when he learned that a summons had been issued, he informed the officials where he might be found. The summons was served in the evening and the matter will come to a hearing on Friday of next week. Mr. Stratton's connection iwth the Farmer's Bank was in his capacity as president of the Trusts and Guarantee Company, which had made a loan to Mr. Travers of the Farmer's Bank; and it is alleged that the money obtained from the Company, was applied by Mr. Travers to completion the amount required by the Banking Act to be paid in cash subscription to capital stock of the bank, before a certificate of incorporation could issue.

The whole matter as far as Mr. Stratton's connection with it is concerned will be fully explained in court during the continuance of the investigation, when it will be shown that all the dealings between the Trusts and Guarantee Company and the Farmer's Bank were in the regular course of business.

If the liquidators of the Bank desire to get at the true cause of the failure of the bank, they should publish a full list of the debtors to the bank—those who borrowed money from the bank and have not repaid it. They would find in such a list the names of very prominent men in Toronto, who promoted the wrecking of the bank by failure to pay their notes.

OIL OR WATER ON THE STREETS OF PETERBOROUGH? BOARD OF WORKS MEMBERS DISCUSS THE QUESTION

Committee Had a Busy Session Last Night---Engineer Chipman Reported in Regard to the Progress Made on the Pumping Station for the South City Sewerage System.

It was decided at a meeting of the Board of Works last night, that the Sign By-law be left unaltered. Ex-Ald. J. J. Turner put in a request that there should be some alteration in the present by-law, as the merchants had to pay a license of $2 per year and yet were responsible for any damage done by the signs. He thought that when they had to pay a license, that the city should assume the responsibility.

Moved by Ald. Graham, seconded by Ald. Anderson that no action be taken.—Carried.

Mr. Chipman, Civil Engineer, was present to report on the different offers which had been made regarding the new pumping engine for the sewage, to be installed at the south end. Mr. Chipman pointed out to the Board, that the order should be placed as early as possible, for purposes stated. He said that the machinery had been asked for as early as September. He ascertained from various men that they manufactured only part of the machinery they required, and that for that they put on a good price. He thought it best to consider the different offers, there being about five in all. He stated that the walls of the pumping station were now completed within five or six feet of the top of the ground, and that the bottom was in.

He stated that there had been some difficulty in sinking it, but he was satisfied that it was all in good shape now. He stated that when he learned the prices here, he concluded that it would be cheaper to purchase a smaller pumping unit and allow it to run all the time, than to put in a big one and have it run intermittently. He also strongly advised that there be two units, one gasoline and the other electric. He said that with the compressed air system, that the motor worked the air compressor.

By this system, he said that there was no probability of a stoppage occuring. He had placed four of these in Portage la Prairie, and they had given entire satisfaction. He was asked if he proposed starting operations as soon as the frost went out of the ground. He said that he would, if the season permitted, but it all depended on the condition of the season.

Mr. Chipman then read over the offers, there being one from the Canadian General Electric Co., one from the Westing House and Mann, offers from two English companies, and one from the Fairbanks Co. The English Companies' offer was the cheapest by $300.00.

The Lancashire Motor Co's. offer was $1092.00, and the Canada Foundry Co's. offer for motor was $1,246. and for a horizontal gasoline engine, with Peerless chain drive, $975. The Fairbanks' horizontal engine was recommended, if the Board decided to purchase a Canadian make. The Canada Foundry Co's. machine was $315 cheaper than the Fairbanks, the Fairbanks machine being $1290.

Ald. Graham moved, seconded by Ald. Brown, that the purchasing be left with a committee, composed of Mr. Chipman, Ald. Metheral, City Engineer Hay, and Mayor Morrow.—Carried.

Ald. Graham recommended that the Canadian machine be purchased on account of the repairs. It was decided that the Committee appointed should look after the repairs also. Regarding the installing of the engine, the city was to furnish some iron work.

Mr. Hay asked the William Hamilton Co. if they could do the work and supply the material, and they undertook to do so. Mr. Chipman advised them that the engine would run according to the way it was set, and that it would not be necessary to watch it all the time, only to look at it two or three times a day, as he did not know whether, if the power was shut off and turned on again, the machine would start itself.

Mr. Hay thought that an agreement should be entered into with the Power Co., to notify the authorities when anything went wrong with the power, so they could attend to the motor. Ald. Buller thought that the gasoline engine could be done away with altogether. It was to be used in cases of emergency, when anything went wrong with the motor. He pointed out that storage batteries could be purchased to keep the motor going until the current was turned on again. The cost of the storage batteries was the next question. The whole thing was left in the hands of the Committee.

Ald. Buller thought that it would be advisable to leave the street blocking to the City Engineer. This was decided upon.

City Engineer Hay said that he had on the 24th of April and in May, 1910, reported the conditions of Sherbrooke street, and no action was taken. He proposed that pipes be laid and the west part of the drain be filled in. This, he estimated, would cost about $620.00. It was decided to do only half the work. No stated amount was settled upon to be spent, but they decided to do as much as they could.

The Park Street drain was the next to be discussed. It was reported that there was no sewer on St. Joseph's street, and that that street was drained into the Park Street drain. It was suggested that the matter be referred to the Board of Health. It was discovered that the by-lay only covered that part of the city east of Aylmer street, and the area would have to be extended before any actual move could be taken.

Ald. Brown moved, seconded by Ald. Buller, that those who are running their sewage in to Park street drain, should be forced to cut the connection and connect with the sewer, and that the City Engineer notify the people of the move.—Carried.

The city was also to put in a sewer on St. Joseph street.

The oil-on-the-streets question came up, but was left over until a later date. Ald. Buller said that he wanted water on his street, and Ald. Brown said he wanted oil on his street—"that he wanted something pleasant to smell."

Ald. Buller assured him that he would get the pleasant perfume.

The City Engineer reported regarding Rink and Crescent streets. He said that the plan of the city was dated Sept., 1904, and at that time some of these streets were covered by water, and that they were not on the plan. Part of the McDonald estate was at that time under water also, and Ald. Graham moved that the necessary steps be taken to get the Company to acknowledge that part of it as city property. This was duly seconded and carried.

The drivers of the city team, asked for rubber horse-blankets. This was left in the hands of Ald. Metheral.

The question of moving the Navigation Co's. tool house on Mark St was discussed. The tool house was built right on the street. The matter was left in the hands of the chairman, who will instruct the Navigation Company to move the building.

Moved by Ald. Duncan, seconded by Ald. Anderson, that City Engineer T. A. S. Hay get two weeks' holidays.—Carried.

Pains That Make Misery

A Talk With Our Lady Readers

Have you ever noticed how miserable and unhappy the little pains and aches make one? A stinging cut, badly chapped hands, a nasty burn, a sore foot, a poisoned finger—none of them wounds or ailments ever likely to cause serious trouble, which come to every woman—and man too—and are just sufficient to take the edge off one's temper and give one a "grouch."

Zam-Buk is just the thing at such times. As soon as you put it on to a sore, a cut, a burn, or any skin injury, it stops the pain, and the smarting, and starts up healing. Don't make the mistake that because Zam-Buk is so widely used by medical men, by nurses, and for serious skin diseases and accidents, that it is only for serious cases. Keep it handy and use it immediately you get some trivial injury or have some little sore.

Mrs. Chas. H. Barrett, Harmony Road, Truro, N.S., says: "I had an ingrowing toe nail, which caused me acute agony. Sometimes the pain was so severe I could not sleep. It became so bad that I feared blood-poisoning had set in. I was advised to try Zam-Buk and bound up the sore toe with it. In a few days it was much easier, and I continued the treatment. The result is that to-day the toe is sound and I have no more trouble with it. We always keep Zam-Buk in our house, and I would strongly recommend it to every housewife."

Zam-Buk is just the thing, too, for the little ones. Pure in its composition, and herbal in nature, it is suitable for the most delicate skin. It also cures piles, eczema, varicose ulcers, cold sores, abscesses, blood poisoning, ring-worm, and all similar skin diseases. Sold everywhere at 50c. a box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price.

PRESIDENT TAFT BEGINS HIS WHIRLWIND CAMPAIGN

Special Wire to The Examiner.

COLUMBUS, O., FEB. 10.—President Taft this afternoon made the first speech of the whirlwind campaign, educating the United States people to the benefits of the proposed reciprocity treaty with Canada. At the National Corn Exposition he said the treaty would benefit the entire United States, farmers, manufacturer, railroads and everybody. All would be gainers as a result of the treaty going through. While the speech was delivered particularly as a reassurance to the farmers he also dwelt on the benefits to the manufacturers. The President dwelt exhaustively with the situation of the Western States and Western Canada, where, he declared, the treaty would bring great mutual benefit.

The greatest reason for the adoption of this agreement," said Taft, "is that it is going to re-unite two countries with kindred people, tying them together across a wide continent in commercial and social union to the great advantage of both."

LECTURES ON "PURITY" WERE MUCH APPRECIATED

The following from the Berlin telegraph, is part of the report of the Board of Education and refers to Mr. A. W. Beall of this city, whose services in connection with lectures on Purity in the schools is thus practically appreciated:

"The services of Mr. A. W. Beall, of Whitby, who has been delivering addresses in the various schools on "Purity" during the week were highly spoken of by the members and a grant of $25 was made to him by the Board.

It was moved by Dr. Hett, seconded by Mr. A. Pequegnat, that the Board of Education hereby approves of the very valuable lectures on social purity given by Mr. A. W. Beall, M.A., of Whitby, and that we recommend his able lectures to all the School Boards and that we implore the Minister of Education to appoint Mr. Beall permanently to visit the various schools of the Province at a proper salary, as we believe no money can be spent for better purposes in education, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Ontario Trustees' Association, and request their co-operation in requesting lectures on these lines to be conducted throughout the Province."

Deputation From County To Wait Upon Government

The Norwood Register says: The members of the County Council leave next Tuesday evening for Ottawa as a deputation to interview the government with regard to the maintenance of Buckhorn and other bridges along the Trent Valley Canal. A deputation from the East Peterborough Agricultural Society will probably accompany them to bring before the government a proposition to erect a building on the grounds here, to be used as an armoury and drill hall for the local company of militia and the cadet corps, and by the Agricultural Society as an exhibition hall. Since the fire last May, No. 2 Company of the 40th regiment whose headquarters are at Norwood have been without a place to store their arms and accountrements.

PETERBOROUGH MEN ELECTED ON FAIRS' ASSOCIATION

TORONTO, FEB. 10.—"The Province of Ontario is losing millions of dollars annually through the destructive agency of weeds. Weeds have driven men off their farms in Ontario."

These were opening sentences of an address on "Standing Field Crop Competitions and Exhibits," delivered by Mr. H. Glendinning, Manila, Ont., at the closing session of the Ontario Association of Fairs and Exhibitions yesterday afternoon at the City Hall.

The speaker said that during the past twenty years there had been a marked falling off in the Province. The reason for this deterioration, Mr. Glendinning said, was the changing from the business of grain growing for market to stock feeding.

Bad Influence of the West.

"It is only during the time of one generation that Manitoba and the other western Provinces came under the hand of man. The soil was free from weeds except a few natives common to the prairies. Had care been used in the selection of seed we would have had a country that would have been a breeding-ground for the purest and best grain in the world. This would have brought millions of dollars extra annually to this country over what it is doing at the present time," said Mr. Glendinning, who, in conclusion, advised the Fair Boards in the Province to pay more attention to the extension of the field crop competitive work.

Electricity on the Farm.

Earlier in the day, Mr. C. C. James, Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, addressed the convention on "Why Do Boys Leave the Farm?" Mr. James also referred to the application of electricity to farm work, and said: "One of these mornings you farmers will wake up and find out that many of the problems that have been perplexing you for years have been solved by electric power."

David Evans of Cornwall spoke on "The Best Method of Laying Out Buildings and Grounds," and J. W. Sangster on "Members of Agriculture Should Join the Ploughmen's Association."

New Officers.

The following officers for the ensuing year were elected: President, J. A. Simmons, Frankford; First Vice-President, John Cornell, Forest, Second Vice-President, R. H. Leary, Peterborough; Secretary, J. Lockie Wilson, Toronto; Treasurer, Alex. McFarlane, Oakville; Auditors, R. Agnew, Meaford; William Collins, Peterborough.

THE GILLIES LIMIT SALES.

Col. Matheson, Provincial Treasurer ,must have a pain in the head every time he thinks of the Gillies limit near Cobalt.

Not many years ago the word went around that the Government would never part with this valuable mineral property. It was understood, says the Ottawa Free Press, that it was to be exploited by the people of Ontario for the people of Ontario. Valuable silver finds were made all around the Gillies limit. Prospectors who had carelessly walked over the government's reservation said they know of silver out-croopings that indicated great riches underneath. The government even did a little preliminary mining with excellent results.

But one day Col. Matheson sounded the note of alarm. There wasn't enough money in the treasury. The various departments were spending so much it was hard for the colonel to keep things going.

And so it was they came to sacrifice the people's property, the Gillies limit. Chunks of it were advertised, and the prices the government got were shamefully low. One company paid around $30,000 for their claim; they worked it four months and then sold out for $320,000 more than they paid for it. It was good business for the company, but it made the government look sick.

Had Col. Matheson got hold of that $320,000, he could have figured out the greatest surplus ever. Yet the same thing has happened before, when shrewd mining men have got around the Ontario Government just as a book agent sells family albums to grandmothers.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Some rather severe criticism has been devoted to Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General, on account of the laxity of his department in criminal matters. But this one action cancels a good deal of neglect—and stands greatly to his credit—the action of permitting Matthews, charged with murder, to leave Cobourg jail, in charge of officers, to visit his mother, who, on her dying bed, wanted to see her son. A man is sometimes more of a man in being a man than in hunting criminal- Heart, on occasion, may count for more than head.

The Trade Agreement And Its Relation To Imperial Interests

In answer to those who claim that the cultivation of friendly trade relations with the United States would be hostile to the interests of Great Britain and the Empire, the Montreal Herald says:

This proposition should be given a direct negative. Instead of it being true that the Empire will be served by Canada maintaining an attitude of cold indifference to the States, we believe that it can be shown that such attitude is directly at variance with Imperial interests. More, that it is at variance with Canadian interests, and with those of the English speaking world.

For nearly one hundred years Great Britain had to count upon a widely-prevailing hostility to it within the United States, and this adverse sentiment had to be considered as a factor in calculations made respecting international complications in all parts of the globe. In the midst of the Napoleonic wars the States attacked Canada. The Oregon boundary dispute threatened of embroil the two peoples. The Trent affair made the issue of peace or war to tremble in the balance. The Fenian raid held the seeds of international trouble. Even Cleveland's Venezuela message found its menace to peace in the same antagonism to Great Britain, which gave to the other occurrences their gravity. In face of this incomplete but significant record is it part of true imperialism for Canadians to assist in aggravating this hostility, or does not every dictate of good citizenship, of neighbourly feeling, and of Imperial interest, point to another pathway? Surely it is our duty, and should be our pleasure, to live on terms of warmest cordiality with these people of kindred tongue, and largely of common origin, to our own

The proposition is a self-evident one, and it is incomprehensible that it should not find instant and wholehearted acceptance by all Canadians. As a nation, we have everything to gain by relations so friendly and intimate that differences of opinion have only to arise to be settled, by common consent of both people, by such methods as have of late been happily adopted to secure lasting settlements of the Alaska boundary question, the fisheries dispute, and the respective rights of the two nations over boundary waters.

Where Britain's Interests Are Involved.

It is of vital importance to us as a nation to have these and similar controversial questions removed from the arena where friction might be engendered, but it is also of the utmost concern to the Mohter Country.

The Triple Alliance of Germany, Austria and Italy, when viewed in the light of Germany's development as a military and naval power, and co-incident policy of aggressiveness, constitutes the most serious of Britain's world-problems. Japan has given notice of its intention of ending the treaty with England, and a better understanding between Germany and Japan is not improbable. France and Russia are friendly to Great Britan but the measure of their aid in time of crisis is not assured. It is, therefore, quite within the realm of practical politics that Britain may need a friend in the Great Republic. It is the part of Canada to help her find such a friend, or is it our duty to strew the Mother Country's path with daggers?

What answer but one can be given? Are we to fear friendship with the States because it may make us love England the less? Are we justified in assuming, with Sir Gilbert Parker, that President Taft's words of friendship hide a nefarious design to dominate the continent from Yucatan to the North Pole? Why should we not take Mr. Taft's assurances at their face value? He is too clear-sighted to imagine that freer trade will imply political union. He, no doubt, with all sensible, broad-minded men, would do what he can to seek peace, and ensure it, between these two peoples. No more sympatheic words have ever come from an American President. Why should we flout them when Egnland's interests as well as Canada's, call for the friendliness that begets commerce, that smoothes the rough places of diplomacy, and in times of stress may help to avert world-shaking struggles?

It is Canada's duty, we hold, to be the link that will unite the Mother Country and the Republic in the bonds of friendship. We are here, on this Continent, a British nation growing to a giant's strength. Without abandoning one jot or tittle of our Imperial destiny we may cultivate such commercial and personal relations with the United States as will, on the one hand, relieve the over-burdened Mother Country of many causes of anxiety regarding us, and on the other hand, will cause her to feel that in the United States she has a people growing more and more sympathetic as they learn to better understand the ideals of British statesmanship.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

LOVE me and tell me so sometimes."

—Gail Hamilton.

I want you to do something for me.

"You," this time, means all my married folk friends, and especially those married folk who've been married folk for over five years.

I want you before February fourteenth to go out and buy a valentine and I want you to carefully disguise your handwriting just as you used to do, and I want to you to send it to your wife or husband.

Next door to me there lives one of those beautiful couples who through sickness and health, through failures, discouragements and successes, through child bearing, child rearing and child marrying, and straight into the grandparent stage, have carried enough romance so that they do this thing every year.

And not only do it, but take as much genuine delight in the doing as the little boy across the street when he drops the lace and gilt creation that so chastely declares:

"The rose is red, the violet's blue, Sugar is sweet, and so are you."

at his little lady love's front gate, and runs and hides his heart almost exploding with excitement and two around the corner and crouches against the house with buttons getting rubbed off his coat.

The way I happen to know about it is that last year the lady next door was ill, and to me was entrusted the solemn mission of buying and mailing that valentine. I thought at first I'd tell you about it right off and then I decided to wait until this year so it would be fresher in your minds.

St. Valentine's day is supposed to be a young lovers' day, but I think it would be much more beautiful if it were made an old lovers' day, too. In fact it seems to me it ought to be especially for the older lovers, for the young lovers don't need the reminder of any especial day to make them confide in each other about that wonderful feeling — "that itching of the heart that can't be scratched," as someone has unpoetically but graphically called it—which they have within them.

They're doing that all the time.

While the old lovers—well they may be loving each other just as deeply, but I guess they are more apt to forget the last part of Gail Hamilton's advice "Love me AND TELL ME SO SOMETIMES."

And isn't this a beautiful time to remember it?

Of course I don't insist that you shall confine yourself to a gilt and lace valentine. I'll be quite as well satisfied if you go out and buy a bunch of violets or a pair of gloves, or whatever he wants the most if I'm talking to the lady in the case, and put a little valentine verse with the gift.

Only you mustn't omit the verse. And you mustn't fail to have it say, "I love you," just as sweetly and foolishly as the verses you used to send in the days before.

Of course you know the old Navy Toast:

"Here's to our sweethearts and wives.
May our sweet hearts soon be our wives
Don't you think St. Valentine's d-sweethearts."

Don't you think St. aVlentine's day is a good time to get some of the spirit of that toast into your lives?

GREENE MUSIC COMPANY'S NEW BUILDING IS OPEN

This morning, without ceremony or demonstration of any kind, the J. M. Greene Music Co. threw open the doors of their handsome new music building to the public. This building is one of the finest of its kind, for the display of musical instruments, that one will find in the Dominion to-day, regardless of size, and will rank prominent among the many beautiful edifices constructed for commercial purposes that adorn the city of Peterborough today. The building has a frontage of 54 feet, with a depth of 50 feet, and is two storeys high. On entering the building one is struck with the elegance, yet prevailing simplicity, which is a characteristic of the interior throughout. The reception room is on the ground floor, and is the first room to be entered by the main door. This room is plentifully supplied with easy chairs and is also used as a display room for the small acessories in the music line, such as violins, harmonicas, mouthpieces for instruments, etc. The offices adjoin this room and are elaborately equipped. Next follow the phonograph demonstrating room, with two sound-proof rooms adjoining for the purpose of trying out the records. There is also a record stock room in connection with this department, with a capacity of about 2,500 Edison records and about 1,000 Victor. The next pleasing feature to attract attention is the piano salesroom and recital hall, which is located upstairs and will accommodate nearly 200 people. In this room is also carried a large stock of pianos from the "Baby Grand" to the well-known "Heintzman", all of which will be under the able supervision of Mr. Geo. Leader. Along the side of the piano sales room are a number of small rooms, which are to be fitted up as studios, and will be occupied by prominent teachers of pianoforte. Another department worthy of mention is the organ and sewing machine demonstration room, and piano player room, all of which are elegantly fitted up, these along with the music library, hoist room, lavatory and an excellent cellar, 22 x 48 feet, constitutes the principal features of the building. The general finish of the interior of the building throughout is of Georgia pine, in its natural state. These, with metallic ceilings and hardwood floors, make an elegant combination which is pleasing to the eye. The building is heated by a Gurney boiler, which was installed by Mr. R. J. Sutherland, while the lighting contract, which is known as the low voltage system, was let to Mr. MacPherson. To-day and to-morrow the building will be open for inspection by the public, while an excellent programme of music has been provided for those who avail themselves of the opportunity to inspect this handsome build ing with its extensive display of goods.

BIRTHDAY PARTY

A very enjoyable time was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs Wm. Stanley, 455 Stewart street, last evening, when they had a birthday party for their son Ernest, who was 21 years old yesterday. The evening was spent in playing games and dancing, and music and singing were also indulged in. There were about twenty-five guests, intimate friends of the family and of the young man personally. He was made the recipient of many beautiful and costly presents. At an appropriate time refreshments were served, and the social side, in general, was cultivated. The event was a most enjoyable function, and the party did not break up until the wee sma' hours of the morning.

THE T. A. A. C. TEAM WILL PLAY PETES ON TUESDAY

Fast Senior O. H. A. Team Will Hook Up With the Local Intermediates---Visitors Will Bring Down Their Full Senior Line-up.

Arrangements were fully completed to-day by which the fast Toronto Amateur Athletics Club team, of Toronto, the senior O. H. A. contenders, will play an exhibition game against the Peterborough intermediate O. H. A. team on Tuesday night of next week at Brock street rink. The Crimson aggregation is one of the fastest teams in Toronto and the game will undoubtedly be well worth seeing Believing that the Peterborough fans are anxious to see more hockey before the season comes to an end the executive of the Peterborough Club is arranging to bring the best senior teams in the province here for exhibition games. The T.A.A.C. game next week will be the first of a series and if the patronage is what the management are convinced it will be, the Eaton team, St. Michael's and Parkdale will be secured. The fans have, therefore, some very interesting games to look forward to and will no doubt be glad to learn that there will be a lot of hockey here before the ice goes. The Peterborough team will practise to-night at 7 o'clock in preparation for the game. They will need to be in the best of shape to hold the speedy Athletic Club outfit. It will be the first appearance of the T.A.A.C. hockeyists in Peterborough, although the Crimson's football team has played here several times.

WHERE WAS HARRY FELION?

Whitby Intermediates Beat Trenton on Their Own Ice Last Night

TRENTON, FEB. 9.—One of the largest crowds of the season witnessed the first series of the home-and-home games played here to-night between the Whitby intermediates, winners of Districts 2 and 3, and Trenton, winners of No. 1. The play was decidedly swift throughout the game and ended in a score of 9 to 3 in favour of Whitby. The line-up:

Referee—Lawson Whitehead of Toronto.

PICTON TEAM IS THROUGH

Pros Quit With a Deficit of Fifty Dollars

PICTON, FEB 9.—Wednesday night's game was probably the last pro. match Picton will see in many moons. The Picton pro. team disbanded to-day. The cash question was the big factor. There is an absolute failure to make it go here. It was Picton's first pro. attempt and the last. Hockey fans refused to get enthusiastic or to give the players here any following. Save for one or two games the attendances have been slim indeed. After Wednesday night's game the players decided to call quits. They pull out with a $50 deficit. Harry Burgoyne, who has been managing affairs, says in the beginning the association with "Buck" Irving gave a black eye to the league.

Peterborough Circle Meet.

The regular meeting of the Peterborough Circle, No. 193 O.C.H.C. will be held in the Knights of Pythias Hall, Simcoe street, to-night. A full attendance required.

BEN DUSTY

Peterborough boy who was hurt in Professional Game at Belleville Last Night

DUSTY IS LAID OUT

Former Strathcona Player Badly Hurt at Belleville

BELLEVILLE, FEB. 9.—Consequent on the disbanding of the Picton professional team following last night's game three of their players were on Belleville's line-up against Port Hope to-night, namely, S. Burgoyne, Dusty and Crossett. The game was fast, but rough, several of the players being laid out, finally resulting in a farce in so far as fine hockey was concerned. Dusty and Randall were laid out, probably for the remainder of the season. Port Hope won the game by a score of 10-6 In the last period there were but four players a side. The line-up was as follows:

Referee—W Lane of Belleville.

EASY FOR OTTAWAS

Any lingering doubt as to the complete collapse of the wonderful Wanderers of 1910 was removed when the far-famed "red hands" suffered at the hands of "Newsy" Lalonde's Canadiens the most humiliating defeat they have met with all season. The calamity puts the Wanderers down and out for this season at least. The players that the Ottawas must now keep an eye on are the fast Canadiens. Canadiens gave Ottawas an awful run three weeks ago. There is barely a probability of Canadiens tieing up with Ottawa. The League leaders will probably apply the finishing touches to the Wanderers and shunt them into the discard Saturday night. At this distance, however, there is absolutely nothing to it but Ottawa. The league standing:

	Won	Lost	T.P.
Ottawa	8	0	8
Canadiens	5	4	7
Wanderers	5	4	7
Renfrew	3	6	7
Quebec	1	8	7

This week's games: Saturday, Wanderers at Ottawa, Quebec at Canadiens.

BELLEVILLE PROS HERE TO-MORROW

Manager Nolan's Belleville professional team will arrive in Peterborough to-morrow, and the Peterborough fans will get their first taste of professional hockey next week, when either the Picton or Port Hope pros. will be here. The team includes Lightfoot, the famous forward of the old Stratford Midgets and Chipchase, formerly of the Montreal Wanderers.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

The Canadian General Electric toolroom team of the Mercantile League wish to challenge the leaders of the Bank Hockey League to a game to be played as soon as arrangements can be made. Apply to J. Evans. Manager, telephone 1259.

Stoddart of Lindsay was imported by the Saskatoon team of the Saskatchewan League, but was not allowed to play against Prince Albert because he had not been twenty days in the Province.

A despatch to the Globe says: "Bouncer" Brouse will not lose the sight of his eye, but may not play with Frontenacs to-night against Peterborough. In case "Bouncer" does not play Williams will figure in the line-up.

Hockey happenings

An interesting game was played between Cressman's Counter-hoppers and the Bee-hive team last night at Brock street rink, the engagement winding up with both teams having scored three goals and the honours even.

It may be a little early to call the turn, but how do St. Michael's, Midland and Kingston Frontenacs look for the three championships?

The Peterborough intermediates will practise at Brock street rink to-night between 7 and 8 o'clock for the purpose of keeping in shape for the series of exhibition games that will be arranged for the team. Nothing definite has been arranged with T.A.A.C. yet, but the Crimson team will likely be seen in action here next week.

Oh you, Whitby.

It must have been the strain of the conscience of the Trenton team on account of that stolen game on Monday night that made them easy money for Whitby last night. Beaten 9 to 3 on their own lake-like rink. They will be easy picking in Whitby's vest pocket affair.

Where was that Trenton goal umpire last night? He was the best man on the team in Belleville.

If the Trenton team was playing their usual home game form, Whitby will have to be figured on when the championship question is being settled.

The return game will be played at Whitby on Monday. Cover-point McGaw of Trenton will have to get hinges put on or he'll be knocking shingles off the roof with his head.

Trenton might as well have given Peterborough that sudden death game.

CURLING

The following scheduled games were played at the Charlotte St. Rink last night:

IN DUTY BOUND

A Short Story

BY EDRIC VREDENBURG

He was in duty bound to leave her. He loved her dearly, she was the whole world to him, and now that he had to turn his back on her and go, that real world that was before him seemed an utter blank, a desolate, dreary waste.

And she loved him as truly and devotedly as he loved her, yet she was in duty bound to let him go. All the dreams of the happy future, all the castles they had built between them, all his ambitions, in which she was to share, were shattered.

Shattered—in such a simple, ordinary, everyday, unromantic sort of way, but nevertheless, shattered to atoms!

He was ruined, that's all, just ruined! Yesterday he had been a man of money, to-day he wasn't worth a shilling. He received the news by telegram, and then by letter; quite a short letter. His trustee had speculated with his money, lost it, and fled the country.

At first he could hardly realize all the loss of the money meant to him, that it meant the loss of his life's happiness, the loss of her he loved beyond all measure. But her father realized the truth immediately; he was a poor man himself and knew the sorrows and sins of poverty, so he quickly opened the young man's eyes, and his daughter's eyes—they were in duty bound to part.

So they parted—John Strong and Muriel Leslie bade good-bye as thousands of lovers have done before, and thousands of lovers will do again; which fact, by the way, does not lessen the individual sorrow in the slightest degree.

Muriel stood at the garden gate to see the last of the man she loved as he walked down the road with the setting sun before him. He came shortly to the point where he had to turn away to the right, so he stopped a moment and waved his hand; then he strode quickly on, and the sun went down behind the hills.

John Strong was by no means a perfect man, he was nothing so uninteresting. He was an ordinary being, with his good points and his bad. At present, of course, Muriel Leslie was uppermost in his mind, and in conjunction with her in his thoughts was the man who had robbed him, robbed him of all the glorious happiness in store for him; and he cursed this man body and soul, swore that if ever he met him—swore that which he would not utter aloud, swore that which made his blood boil in his veins, and caused him unconsciously to stride along the road like one demented.

John Strong went to London to arrange his affairs. This did not take him long. As a matter of fact he had very few affairs to arrange. There was not even a remnant of his fortune left to give him the trouble in securing. His trustee had cleared off everything. Cash, papers, and himself.

Strong had relations in town, poor relations certainly, but between them they managed to scrape together sufficient money to send him to Australia and to give him a little, very little, cash in hand when he arrived there.

"I will go to the goldfields, and make a fortune, or die for it," he said to himself, which remark certainly shows that he was distinctly an ordinary young man.

"The placing of one sixpence on the top of another is too slow a process for me," he continued. "I shall be old before I have enough to marry on." And then he cursed again the man who had robbed him.

So he went to Australia to make his fortune.

Time and the good ship brought him eventually to the island continent. On board ship he made the acquaintance of two young men, ordinary young men like himself, and the three would talk together of what they were going to do, the fortunes they were going to make, and of their happy return to England; but Strong never mentioned his lost love; it was too deep a feeling for him to speak of lightly, neither did he ever refer to the man who had robbed him: this also was too serious a subject to be idly talked about.

These three young men resolved to try their luck together; they were about the same age, and all equally poor: between them they had only sufficient money to take the train part of the way to the Land of Ophir, to the Land of the Golden Nugget and Golden Happiness, so they resolved to walk the remainder of the distance.

It was a foolish, mad idea, but foolish, mad ideas have before now succeeded in the end.

Be that as it may, when they could go no further by train they started out to walk. They walked till they were footsore and weary, under a burning sun for three days with little to eat and little to drink. It was in the evening of the third day that, as they dragged their tired legs along, they saw a cottage in the distance. It was a welcome sight, for they were out of the beaten track, and night was upon them. They were confident that the inmates of the cottage would give them such hospitality as they were able, so they pushed on with renewed energy.

A half-starved dog met them in the garden of the miserable little house, while half a dozen unhappy looking fowls picked about the door.

The young men knocked, but no one answered; knocked again and again with the same result, so at last they lifted the latch and walked in. The door opened into a room which was close, evil-smelling, and empty. They stood for a moment in silence, and then one of them shouted. There came a reply, a faint cry from above stairs; they shouted again, and the cry was repeated.

"I will go and see what's the matter," said Strong, and he went up to the room above.

He was not away long; he came down hurriedly! His face was white, and his hands were trembling; he went into the garden for air—he breathed with difficulty.

"Why, man, what's the matter?" cried his companions; "have you seen a ghost?"

"Matter — matter little enough. It's nothing," he replied, disjointly; "there are two men lying ill upstairs, that's all; go and see them."

Strong's two companions went upstairs and left him alone for a few moments. He was glad to be left alone; his thoughts were running riot.

"To think of meeting him here," he said to himself, as he paced the wretched garden to and fro. "Damn him—God or the devil has placed him in my hands—this robber who has robbed me of all I love on earth."

When his friends joined him, he was quite composed, quite himself again, or appeared to be.

"They are in a bad way," said one of the young men as he came down stairs; "stricken down with fever, and hardly conscous. Come, we must help ourselves."

They caught and cocked a couple of the unhappy looking fowls; they were thin and very tough, but they were better than nothing—better even than the worm-eaten biscuits they found in a cupboard. They discovered water in a shallow well, dirty water, but they boiled it in a rusty kettle and drank it with a relish, for they were parched with thirst.

"This is a fearful place," said the second of Strong's companons after a while, "and gives me the horrors. I am decidedly of opinion that we should move on. We are rested somewhat, and the moon is rising. It will be pleasant walking."

"I'm with you for certain," said his friend.

"I'm not," remarked Strong emphatically.

"Not what, Strong?" said the other two together.

"Not going."

"Not going? Why, man, let us get away from this beastly hole; we shall surely catch the fever if we remain," replied one of the others.

"You go on, I'm resolved; I remain," answered Strong, with his lips compressed, and determination written on every line of his face.

"But why? Why should we stay?"

"I—I cannot leave these two sick men to die alone? it, it isn't right," was the reply; and John Strong looked on the ground, and at the ceiling, anywhere but in the faces of his companions.

"Oh, rot," cried one of them; "they'll be all right: the neighbors will look after them; we cannot be expected to do so."

"Neighbors," exclaimed Strong; "why, we are in the wilds; there is not a house within miles of us, I'm certain. I remain, I say; I remain."

No argument would induce him to alter his mind; nothing, except the death of the two men upstairs would release him, he said, from the spot.

His two companions left him, left him with regret, but they had their way to make in the world, you know, and a couple of fever-stricken men must not stand in their way to fortune.

John Strong watched them go; then turning, fed the half-starved dog with the remainder of the fowls; after that he leant against the side of the door for a while and looked out on the barren country.

The moon was shining brightly, and the flat land was bathed in silver light, except where the black shadows were thrown by the cottage, and a few stunted trees in the foreground.

A bright light, too, shone in Strong's eyes, while there was a black shadow in his heart. He was no ordinary man now. Opportunity had changed him. He had his grand opportunity, his enemy had been delivered into his hands.

His face grew very hard as he turned into the cottage, and went upstairs.

Rivers, Strong's late trustee, the man who had ruined him, lay on his back on a low bed, his hollow cheeks and bright eyes told their story. He was at death's door. He recognised Strong immediately he entered the moonlit room, but for the moment believed him to be the spirit come to torment his last hours.

The other man was on the floor, in a sitting position, half covered with a rug. He appeared to be deadly ill, as he held his head between his hands and rocked himself to and fro.

"For the love of God," he exclaimed in a choking voice, "give me some water."

"Some water," faintly repeated the man on the bed.

Is there a more fearful torment than that of thirst? The two men were burning with a fever. Until the last few hours one at least had been able to drag his weak limbs to the shallow well and bring water; but at last the sickness took such a hold of them that they were both unable to move.

Strong went down stairs and fetched the rusty kettle, which was half full of water. He filled a cup and gave it to the man on the floor. He drank greedily, and then another cupful; and all the while the man on the bed watched him with staring eager eyes.

"Give him some," said the man on the floor, "he wants it more than I do. Look at his poor eyes."

"Don't you wish for more?" replied Strong, hoarsely.

"I—could drink the well dry," was the answer; "but give it him; see how he suffers. A drop of water is worth more than the gold of all Australia to him."

John Strong rose from his knees, and hesitated. The man in the bed followed his every movement with the keenest anxiety; and then of a sudden Strong became an ordinary man again—the hardness died away from his face, his lips trembled slightly, and his eyes became moist with tears.

He turned and tenderly raised the head of the man who had done him so great an injury, and gave him water. He did more—with a hand as gentle as a woman's, he pushed back the tangled hair from the hot forehead; he smoothed the pillow, and made the bed tidy.

He did more—he whispered words of comfort and encouragement in the sick man's ear; he did more still—he whispered his full forgiveness. He nursed him day and night, and the other man also with equal care.

It was an awful week, a fearful seven days; the sun shone down with increasing heat, the dog died, the fowls died. No living thing came near that little cottage; the only thing to eat was the worm-eaten biscuits, the only thing to drink the dirty water from the shallow well.

To look out on the dreary waste, with the stunted trees and brown grass, hurt his eyes; to see never a living thing or hear never a sound drove him almost to madness.

Was this, then, the end of his ambition? Where was that fortune he had come to seek? Where was that revenge he had sworn to have? He went upstairs and prayed by the bed of the sick man!

He was sorry when the man died; he wept like a woman—perhaps it was because he was weak and ill himself. The man died in his arms, and with his last words blessed him for his loving kindness. The other man, who was the owner of the cottage, died the same day. He also blessed the stranger who had found them in their hour of need and stayed by them and comforted them.

"You will be rewarded for your charity," said the dying man. "He told me all about it" (and he pointed to the bed), "all about it. How he robbed you, ruined you. I know now your thoughts when you held the cup of water in your hand. Praise be to Heaven you gave him drink."

"The Lottery Man"

BY RIDA JOHNSON-YOUNG

"Jack!" interposed Peyton, sadly, "if you had just a little more sense you'd be half-witted."

"I tell you its a great idea!" insisted Jack Wright. "I offer myself in a lottery. And I'll marry the holder of the lucky number."

"And your 'idea' — if any paper were silly enough to adopt it—would soon have you peeping out from behind the bars. There happens to be a pretty stiff law against lotteries."

"I've figured it all out," explained Jack, easily. "I can beat the law to a frazzle. Or, rather, my case won't come under the Lottery Law's provisions."

"Oh, you talk like a man in a cave. Can't you see?—"

"I can see I have the biggest newspaper idea of the century. The Lottery law forbids the giving away of prizes. But it does not say a word about prizes that give themselves away. See? I'll make a contract with the Examiner, buying the space that is to be used to advertise the lottery. And I'll pay for it when the money begins rolling in. I offer, through the paper, to give myself away at $1 a chance. The government can't interfere with a man for making a present of himself to some lucky woman, can it? Anyhow, I'll take that chance. You take no risks. And you get a corking good feature for the Examiner. Can't you see what a sensation it will make?"

"I can see that your brain is in need of a few local repairs. —I"

"Here's an 'added feature,'" pursued Jack. "Each week I'll write an exciting chapter of my life for the Examiner. Under each chapter you are to print a blank coupon, numbered, which is to be cut out and sent, with one dollar, in a sealed envelope, with the senders' name and address, the numbered coupon to be returned to the sender. Then watch the dollars pour in. Every unmarried woman in America, will be buying Examiners by the thousand and cutting out the coupons. It'll become a national joke. It'll wipe the Affinity Wheeze off the map. It'll—"

"And," put in Foxhall, excited in spite of himself, "you would actually marry the holder of the lucky number?"

"Sure. The offer's open to all comers. If I should refuse I agree to give up the whole sum—every dollar received—to the woman who wins. If she should chance to refuse me we split the purse, she and I. Each will take half the money. And, by the way, here's another detail. You aren't to publish my name at first. Just the letter of it each week, and one little slice of my photograph. Sort of Missing-Name Puzzle Picture plan. Gee, how they'll buy the paper!"

"Jack, if you weren't a friend of mine I'd do it! It's a crazy idea, of course, but it's the sort to bring big results. It would catch the town — the whole nation. McGuire would go wild over it."

"And I'll clean up a full $50,000 out of it. Then for a glorious easy life for mother. It can't fail. Here's a written agreement that I won't back out. You can get the number-drawing inspected by a committee of men who are known as straight. That will prove it's no fake. And remember to say that if I refuse to marry the winner, she can have all the money. And if she refuses to marry me, we'll each take half."

"I won't do it!" faltered Peyton, as a final defense.

"If you don't I'll sell the idea to another paper and—"

"Oh, all right!" growled Foxhall. "I agree. It'll be the biggest sensation of the year. But—" he hesitated, "suppose you meet a girl some day—the right sort of a girl—and fall in love with her?"

"I never will. No girl has ever been able to make my battered old heart quicken its beat. I size them all up alongside of mother. And they lose out. By the way, don't mention this idea to mother. Not yet, anyhow. She'll be furious."

"All right. I'm off now to start the ball rolling. Good-night."

"Good-night!" called back Jack after his hurrying friend. Then he came back into the room and stood silently in troubled thought. At last, with a shrug of the shoulders, he shook off the foreboding that had seized him.

"I'm in for it!" he muttered, "and I'm not going to welsh!"

CHARTER II.

The Only Girl.

"Has Foxey gone?" asked Mrs. Wright breaking in on Jack's gloomy reverie.

"Yes," answered Wright, "he's gone—with the story I promised him. I thought you'd gone to bed. It must be midnight!"

"I don't want to go to bed without seeing you again. Something is troubling you dear boy. What is it?"

"Oh, only the same old grouch that gets me every now and then."

"Money."

"No, the lack of it."

"What an ungrateful youngster you are! Have you ever been in actual want for anything?"

"You bet I have. I've wanted to buy you a brown silk dress, and some of those fluffy, frowsy furs with heads and tails on them. And a—"

"Nothing for yourself?"

"Why should I? I've got you. As long as I can keep a roof over your head—"

"But you do keep a roof over my head, you silly boy."

"Yes. Four stories over it. I let you live in a measly basement when I ought to be earning enough to buy you one of those suburban mansions with Queen Anne fronts and Mary Ann backs."

"What does it matter where we live, as long as we can be together? We're chums. I only wish I weren't such a handicap to you."

"A handicap!" echoed Jack, catching up the fragile little figure in his strong young arms. "A handicap? Why you're the one thing that's worth while. Your faith in me has been like a candle in a window on a dark night. I've zigzagged a bit, now and then. But with that light to guide me I couldn't stray far out of the path. There! Now I've gratified your love of flattery quite enough. And—"

A crash, the splintering of metal the grinding of a heavy body, the sharp tinkle of falling glass, and an icy breath of air poured through the room's smashed window, mingled with a chorus of feminine screams.

Mrs. Wright started to her feet in alarm.

"The place is pulled?" announced Jack, in a sepulchral voice.

"Do go and see what the matter is," begged the mother. "Perhaps—"

Jack strode to the window, crunching broken glass under his heels, and peered out. "Hello!" he exclaimed. "An auto's skidded clean through the fence and up against our wall!"

He leaned farther out to view the wrecked machine, from which several fur-muffled figures were squirming.

"Anybody hurt?" he asked. Then with quick recognition, "why, it's Foxey Peyton's chauffeur! And Mrs. Peyton's in the car! Wait a minute, mother, and I'll bring them in. They'll freeze out there."

He bolted from the room. Mrs. Wright could hear a buzz of voices in the dooryard. Then Jack reappeared ushering the three excitedly talking women. One of the trio advanced with both hands outstretched to greet Mrs. Wright. The newcomer was a large, somewaht overdressed woman in whise naturally kind face worry and selfishness had worn odd lines.

"You remember me, Mrs. Wright?" she queried, "I am Mrs. Peyton, Foxhall's mother, you know. How awkward of us to upset just outside your home! We were on our way from a dance. I've sent our chauffeur for another machine. It was all his fault. He nearly ran over a poor innocent baby that was being pushed along in a perambulator by its dear, tired mother and—"

"In the middle of Twelfth Street—at midnight—with the thermometer below zero?" gasped Mrs. Wright. "The poor child! What was its mother thinking of to allow—?"

"Why, Aunt Fanny!" broke in a girlish voice at Mrs. Peyton's elbow. "It wasn't a baby carriage we turned out for! It was a man with a push-cart, who—"

"All this excitement for a miserable peddler!" exclaimed Mrs. Peyton, crestfallen. "Anyhow, it has given us the chance of seeing you again, Mrs. Wright. Have you met my niece, Helene? Miss Heyer?" indicating the tall, slender girl who had interrupted the tale of the mythical baby carriage.

"I'm so sorry," said she, "for the damage we've done to your house. It was—"

"It was all right!" interposed Jack. "Come and do it every night. We like it. You must be frozen, though. Mother, I'm going to make some punch. You remember the punch I used to make for you in the Adirondacks, Mrs. Peyton? It's so strong it would put Marcel waves into an Indian's hair."

"Oh, I mustn't drink anything!" declared Mrs. Peyton. "It would be certain to make me ill. But if you put it before me I'm so afraid I shan't be able to refuse. It's a very strange case, Mrs. Wright, and my doctor doesn't quite know how to classify it; but I have a morbid craving to eat and drink everything I hear mentioned or catch sight of. You wouldn't believe how I hate to deny myself. Why, Lizzie and I once lived for a whole week on crackers and apples."

"Lizzie?" queried Mrs. Wright, puzzled.

"Yes, Lizzie Roberts—my companion, you know. Why, where is Lizzie? She's always getting mislaid!"

From a corner of the door emerged a black clad woman of so amazing an aspect that Mrs. Wright's keen sense of humour battled fiercely with hospitality before an unbidden smile could be driven from her face. The woman was lean as a living skeleton. Her expressionless black eyes popped forth like twin gooseberries from an equally expressionless yellow face Her scant hair was strained back into a knob, giving her whole head an unfortunate resemblance to a peeled onion.

"Oh, there you are, Lizzie," remarked Mrs. Peyton, carelessly. "I was telling Mrs. Wright about the time you and I took the apple-cracker cure for—"

"Miss Roberts has the same malady as yours, then?" asked Mrs. Wright.

"Oh, dear, no! But if she had eaten other things, I would have wanted to eat them, too. So she always diets with me. And I let her try all my cures before I try them myself. For instance, she is taking an anti-obesity course now that was recommended to me. If it works well on her," with a glance at Lizzie's emaciated form, "I shall use it. Next week she takes a face bleach treatment for me that has been very favorably mentioned in several advertisements. Helen laughs at me, the heartless girl. She says I am—but where is Helene? She can't have gone out."

"She must be in the kitchen," replied Mrs. Wright, "helping Jack with the punch."

A MISTAKE CORRECTED

Editor Examiner:

Mr. Editor,—You published last night an article headed 'Name Omitted,' evidently without making an effort to verify the accuracy of the information.

It might be well to read over your own editorial relative to inconsistency in publishing material concerning a reputable citizen without first making an effort to obtain the facts. I should have been pleased to have been with the gentlemen on the Chemong trip, but did not have the pleasure.

Please give this the same prominent publicity that you did the article in question.

COURT CHEMONG, I. O. F. HELD ENJOYABLE SOCIAL

Delightful Affair Was Held in the S. O. E. Hall Last Night—Address on Benefits of the Order.

A FINE PROGRAMME

Court Chemong I.O.F. held their annual social in the S. O. E. hall last night. Despite the fact that owing to unavoidable circumstances the George street orchestra and one or two other entertainers were unable to be present, the programme was excellent in every respect. Space is too limited to dwell on the merits of each individual performer, but each and every one showed his or her ability.

Mr. F. C. Rooke, C.R., occupied the chair, and needless to say he performed his duties in a very able manner. Bro. Frank Mullett, organizer for the I.O.F., who is stationed in the Peterborough district for an indefinite period, took occasion during the course of the evening to present a few facts and figures concerning the good work of the order and the advisability of becoming affiliated with the same. He also dwelt on the matter of protection which the Order afforded to each individual member in case of disablement, or in case of death, those who had been dependent on the deceased for support, were made beneficiaries in this great Order.

Following Bro. Mullett's address the programme was then proceeded with, after which very enjoyable refreshments were served. It is the intention of the lodge to hold a social evening once a month during the winter and it is to be hoped that the indefatigable efforts of the executive committee in connection with these meetings may be rewarded by a large attendance. Special reference was also made to a departed brother, George Reginald Greenland, whose funeral will take place on Saturday afternoon and will be in charge of the Foresters.

The programme for the evening was as follows:

Chairman's address—F. C. Rooke, C.R.
Pianoforte solo—Mr. Bogstrom.
Song—Bro. Harold Lee.
Speech—Bro. Mullett.
Humourous song—Mr. Wilfred.
Instrumental—Miss Noble.
Duet—Miss Ada Lee, Bro. Lee.
Song—Mrs. Bert Read.
Trio—Messrs. Greenslade, Read and Bloore.
Song—Bro. H. Lee.
Instrumental—Mrs. Rehill and Miss Rehill.
Song—Mrs. Bert Read.
Duet—Bro. Lee and Mr. Bloore.
Comic song—Mr. Wilfred.

How to Grow Hair

It has been proven that Henna leaves contain the ingredients that will positively grow hair. That they contain this long-looked-for article is proven every day.

This preparation is called SALVIA and is being sold with a guarantee to cure Dandruff and to grow hair in abundance. Being daintily perfumed SALVIA makes a most pleasant hair dressing. McDermid & Jury, your druggist, is the first to import this preparation into Peterborough, and a large, generous bottle, can be procured for 50c.

We Do Not Want Your Money

If we fail to cure your Cough with the famous Rexall Cherry Bark Cough Syrup, we will refund to you every cent you paid. : : :

ORANGE LODGE ELECTS OFFICERS

The annual meeting of the County Orange Lodge of West Peterborough was held Wednesday evening, in the Orange Hall, Simcoe street. The brethren present numbered about 80. After the general routine of business was transacted the followig officers were elected and installed for the ensuing year:

Co. M. Bro. John C. Waldie, No. 321.
Dep. Co. M. Bro. W. Kindred, No. 80.
Co. Chap., Bro. Joseph Batten, No. 80.
Co. Rec.-Sec., Bro. W. G. Bartley, No. 321.
Co. Fin.-Sec., Bro. N. C. Howard Moore, No. 1175.
Co. Treas., Bro. W. Watt, No. 321.
Co. Dir. of Cer., Bro. Harold Dodds No. 50.
Co. Lect., Bro. W. Stewart, No 50.
Dep. Co. Lecturers, Bro. R. Carter, No. 1386, Lakefield, and Bro. J. Stewart, Peterborough.

The newly-elected officers were duly installed by Bro. J. B. McWilliams, P.D.G.L., for Ontario East, after which the members of the city Dis. entertained the brethren to a well-spread luncheon.

A flock comprising about twenty-five wild ducks, may be seen daily disporting themselves in the River below the Hunter street bridge. They are fine, large, black ducks, and more than one pair of envious eyes have been cast at them. They are evidently aware of the fact that the game law is taking care of them at the present time, or they would not be enjoying themselves so thoroughly.

The Fruit Growers Protest

Examiner Special.

OTTAWA, FEB. 10.—Fruit growers from the east and west, from southern Ontario and Quebec, arrived here by train loads and were joined by representatives of producers from the apple country of Evangeline and New Brunswick, as well as from Fruitland, the Valley of British Columbia, to make emphatic protest this afternoon to the premier and cabinet against the passage of reciprocity, which in their opinion will give the growers of the United States unfair advantage over them and place some districts in a ruinous position.

Sir Wilfrid's reply to fruit growers was that all must make sacrifices for the general good of the country. It was impossible to satisfy everybody. With this non-committal reply, the proceedings ended and the big delegation departed.

PREACH TO ORANGEMEN

Mr. Jas. Northey, of Belfast, Ireland, will preach at Knox church on Sunday evening next to the Orangemen of the city and county upon the subject of "The Prospects of Protestantism." The members of the Orange Lodges will assemble at their hall, Simcoe street, on Sunday night at six o'clock and march in a body to the church.

In addition to this sermon, Rev. Mr. Northey is to give two lectures in the city, one in the lecture room of Knox church on Monday evening on "Love, Courtship and Marriage in Ireland" and the other in the Orange Hall on Wednesday evening on the subject of "The Siege of Derry and Its Results."

DREDGE MOVED

The Little Lake dredge, which has been employed all winter, in dredging out the river at the Quaker Oats Co., has been moved down to the Wolfe Street wharf, the dredging operations at the former place having been completed. The ice had to be cut and dug out in order to get the dredge down to the wharf. It was no small job, as the ice was about 2½ feet thick. The moving of the dredge to the Wolfe Street wharf was in accordance with the Company's agreement, otherwise it would not have been necessary to go to the extra trouble.

WHY SLEEP IS NECESSARY

During sleep Nature restores the cells and tissues wasted by the activities of life. Without sleep physical bankruptcy is quick and certain. Mrs. J. Derocher, 485 Bethune street, Peterborough, Ont., writes: "I can say for a certainty that Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food is a splendid medicine, for besides steadying the nerves, it built up my sleep wonderfully and enabled me to sleep and eat well."

First Sale In The New Store

The first piano sold at the opening of the new warerooms of the J. M. Greene Music Company, Limited, on Charlotte street, was a beautiful New Scale Williams upright piano in mahogany; a Louis XV design, which was purchased by Mr. and Mrs. R. Routley of Peterborough.

The city is to be congratulated in being able to number among its prominent stores a piano warerooms that, for its size, equals in artistic display any piano warerooms in the Dominion, not excepting those found in the largest cities.

Hard work, backed up by fair dealing and the best value for the money, is the foundations upon which the J. M. Greene Piano Co., Limited business has been built.

Are they not the men who consider first their responsibilities to those dependent on them?

Are they not the true men, the men who do not live to themselves alone, the 100 per cent. fine men?

Are they not the men who remember that their beneficiary lives after them, and knowing they have provided, carry their heads higher and their chins in, they step firmer, and because they need not worry, they live longer and better. They realize that Life Insurance is not a duty but a privilege.

Are you a 100% man? The chances are that you have not thought of the advantages to you as well as the others. Can you get insurance? Possibly without your knowledge it is already too late. Perhaps to-morrow you will be beyond Life Insurance. Better call in at the Sun Life Office, 150 Hunter Street, and have a talk about it right away.

They are giving the most satisfactory results in Canada. Call or phone, neither puts you under any obligation.

HALIBURTON HAS SPLENDID MINES

Each week brings fresh information concerning mineral development in the county of Haliburton, the northern portion of the county of Peterborough, and the county of Hastings. There is, as a matter of fact, a great deal of development work being carried on in this district at the present time, and there is reason to believe that before a great while these counties will take a prominent part in the mining industry of Ontario. It is now announced a new mining industry for Haliburton, and a promising one, is reproduction of high-grade graphite. A graphite prospect is being opened in Monteagle township, about a mile east of the C. O. R. tracks between Hybla and Maynooth. The prospect is on a farm belonging to Mr. Robt. Best, which has been sold to the company operating. The mineral was discovered by Mr. T. C. McConnell, who interested the American capitalists, who are operating at Wilberforce on I. B. & O. Railway. Mr. Matthews, a mining engineer, is in charge of the work and is likely to develop a good paying mine.

The graphite occurs on a hillside, and by sinking holes a few rods apart, it was found that the entire rock is mineralised. A main shaft is being sunk and several carloads of mineral have been taken out.

The graphite is distributed through the rock in fine flakes and is treated by grinding rock in a special mill requiring much expensive machinery.

The graphite, however, is of a high grade use for gunpowder, crucibles, manufacture of steel, etc. It is several times more valuable than the atmosphouse graphite used in lead pencils and in electric lamps.

The rock from different parts of this property test 15 per cent. graphite which assured a rich paying property.

THE LYNX THAT STOLE THE TRAP

We were passing the time leisurely in the sitting-room of Ben. Coone's local option stopping-place at Apsley the other day, and the several residents of the neighborhood who were in the company were discussing the lumbering operations in the district, the fact that some outside interests were prospecting for iron in the neighborhood, and the price of lynx hides, rat skins, mink, and other matters, that afford the main topic for discussion in that particular section.

Ben. Coone, the proprietor, had just put another dry stick of wood in the old-fashioned box stove, turned on the damper in the stove pipe, and the roar of the fire could be heard distinctly above the varied conversation that was from time to time going on.

Ned Wigg was there, and Ned told the best lynx story. Ned is a man of standing in the community, and no one who knows him as I do would doubt his word, even if there were not two or three witnesses, as there was on this occasion, to bear out what he said. Mr. Wigg lives over on Jack's Lake, winter and summer. His cottage commands a very picturesque view, it being situated on the side of a hill on the west side of the lake, and overlooks an expanse of water over 4,000 acres in area. This is dotted with many pretty islands, and the shore line is irregular with many little bays and projecting points. During the winter months Mr. Wigg breaks the monotony of life on the shore of Jack's Lake by setting out a few traps for the lynx, and any other animals which may come that way, and which it may be lawful to gather in.

Some few weeks ago Mr. Wigg found one of his strong steel traps missing, and although he was quite satisfied that some animal had broken the chain and got away with the trap, still he never expected to know what particular beast had been guilty of the act.

However, 12 days later Mr. Wigg's son Walter, who was engaged on some work on the shores of Turtle Lake, some 12 miles distant, captured the Burleigh road and got over on the foot.

The poor animal had crossed the Burleigh road and got oven on the Deer Bay creek waters, and was evidently trying to cross Turtle Lake. It was nearly "all in," however, and it was quite easily captured and destroyed. The trap, which was marked with Mr. Wigg's private mark, was still securely locked on one of its feet. The portion of the foot that protruded down through the trap was commencing to decay. The poor animal must have suffered great agony.

Mr. Wigg sold the hide in Peterborough for $18.00, and has the trap set again on aJck's Lake, more securely fastened than before.

Ned Wigg has a lot of good stories based on personal experiences. He is not easily drawn out, however. He never talks too much, and is not the sort that imagines things and then relates them as facts. The next time I run across the laird of Jack's Lake he may not tell me another story, for he is not fond of publicity.

TRAVELLER.

SHOULD INSURE AGAINST LOSS

Before Johnnie went to college he should have been insured. A big fraction of every year's stipend after he started to preach should have been set aside to insure him against failure, so that when he found that creed infra dig, to quit and go out draw his insurance, and start in peddling nursery stock, keeping hens, or get a job as a motorman somewhere. It would be a good thing for the Churches and a better thing for Johnnies.

There is something positively brutal about chaining a helpless boy to a profession. The boy and his people do not find out the dreadful mistake till it's everlastingly too late, and the man has to stay with it till the last dog is hanged. If he is a preacher, he will talk to empty pews; if a lawyer, he will go hungry to court many a time; if a doctor, he will sleep on a lounge in his little surgery inan obscure street, and live on crackers and kippered herring. It is considered infra dig. to quit and go out and work in a sawmill. Ah! if they had started in a sawmill in the first place!

It's astonishing the dicerent kinds of insurance we have. We can insure against almost anything—fire, water, plague, tempest, rainy weather, accident, potato rot, midge, grasshoppers hail—but there is one kind of insurance that we haven't got, but ought to have.

We ought to insure people against failure. For instance, we decide to send Johnnie to college and make a preacher out of him. Now, it's no joke giving a boy a college education, and it's a big responsibility to pick out a profession for a lad and fasten it to him for life. There's the rub—for life. Supposing it's agreed that Johnnie's share in the farm goes to fit him for the ministry; and supposing, after he is ordained, Johnnie is a failure; supposing he is lacking in horse sense, or in tact—which is pretty much the same thing—or he is not eloquent, or his heart isn't in his work—what then? I'm sorry for Johnnie. He can't go back to the farm, that's certain. And he is unfitted for going into the West or Northern Ontario and clearing a new one. He will be shoved off into holes and corners by the stationing committee, and he will lead a dog's life. Worse than that; supposing Johnnie gets new light and he doesn't believe what he is expected to preach—what is he to do then? The best thing he could do is to get out of the ministry. But how? He has his own mouth, and perhaps half a dozen other mouths to fill. He has to live up to his cloth; and he certainly is in a hole.

Every year we compile losses by fire and water, by plague, sickness, or war; but the figures are only a bagatelle to the losses in men. A square peg won't fit a round hole Three men in seven are square pegs. If the hole happens to be square, then it's their luck to be round Sometimes there is no hole for them at all, then where are you at?

There should be a pruning committee appointed in the head councils of the Church, whose business would be to sift the pulpits. They would tell Johnnie, for instance, that he had missed his calling.

"We have nothing against your morals or general conduct, Johnnie—none at all. But, Johnnie, you can't preach, and, for that matter, you'll never be able to preach. You've emptied three churches now, and that's the limit. Here's your insurance; go 'way back somewhere and keep store. They need teamsters in the Porcupine district, or you can get a saw and big chisel and go round the country pruning trees. You'll be sure of work, for a fool farmer will allow 'most anybody to slash away at his trees. You don't need any credentials. Or you could sell shoe laces or cellar buttons or mend umbrellas."

And thus the Church would do something really tangible for the glory of God and the welfare of our fellow men.

$25.00 FOR A LETTER

CAN YOU WRITE ONE?

Eight Prizes to Be Awarded in a Letter Writing Contest Open to Every One in Ontario

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People have been used in Ontario for a generation. Hundreds of remarkable cures have been reported during that time and there is scarcely a family in which the remedy has not been tried with beneficial results. This furnishes the material for the letter to be written in this contest. There is no demand upon the imagination; every letter must deal with facts and facts only.

PRIZES:

The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., of Brockville, Ont., will award a prize of $25.00 for the best letter received on or before the 20th day of March, 1911, from residents of the province on Ontario, on the subject, "Why I Recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills." A prize of $10.00 will be awarded for the second best letter received; a prize of $5.00 for the third best letter, and five prizes of $2.00 each for the next best five letters.

CONDITIONS:

The cure or benefit from the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills described in the letter may be in the writer's own case, or one that has come under his or her personal observation.

More than one cure may be described in the letter, but every statement must be literally and absolutely true.

The letter should be no longer than is necessary to relate the benefit obtained from the remedy in the case described.

Every letter must be signed by the full name and correct address of the person sending it. If it describes the cure of some person other than the writer of the letter, it must also be signed by the person whose cure is described as a guarantee of the truth of the statement made.

The writer of each letter must state the name and date of the paper in which he or she saw this announcement.

Fine writing will not win the prize unless you have a good case to describe. The strength of the recommendation and not the style of the letter will be the basis of the award.

It is understood that The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. shall have the right to publish any letter entered in this contest if they desire to do so whether it wins a prize or not.

The contest will close on March 20th, 1911, and the prizes will be awarded as soon as possible thereafter. Do not delay. If you know of a cure write your letter NOW. Observe the above conditions carefully or your letter may be thrown out.

Address all letters as follows:

(Copyright, 1911, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

Elijah's Victory Over the Prophets of Baal. I Kings xviii: 1-2, 17-40.

Golden Text—Choose you this day whom ye will serve. Joshua xxiv: 15.

(1.) Verses 1-2—How long had the famine lasted in the land?

(2.) Did the Lord speak to Elijah in any different manner to what he speaks to those who serve him today?

(3.) Why had God kept Elijah away from Ahab for three years or during the continuance of the famine?

(4.) Would the suffering caused Ahab, by the famine have put him into a better frame of mind to realize his sin, and whether or not does suffering as a rule bring about repentance?

(5.) Verses 17-20—What law in sinful human nature did Ahab demonstrate in the way he accosted Elijah?

(6.) Why is it that sinners when they suffer for their sins generally put the blame on some one else?

(7.) In what respects was it true that Ahab and his house were the troublers of Israel?

(8.) Verse 21—What test did Elijah propose to Ahab and the people?

(9.) Why did not Ahab slay Elijah when he was in his power and seeing he had been hunting him for that purpose?

(10.) Verse 21—Which is the most harmful condition, to be almost persuaded to be a Christian or to be definitely decided that we will not? Why?

(11.) Why had the people of Israel been halting between serving God and Baal?

(12.) Why could not the people answer the challenge of Elijah?

(13.) What can you say about the value of Elijah's advice to the people?

(14.) Verse 22—Was Elijah correct in his opinion that he he was the only prophet remaining true to God? (See Chap. xix. 18.)

(15.) In what sense is the proverb always true that "one man and God are always a majority?"

(16.) Is it always God's plan to give the victory to every man of God, no matter if he is alone and all the people are against him? Give your reason.

(17.) Verses 23-25—Was the plan Elijah adopted to prove that Baal was no god his own, or had it been given to him by God? Give your reasons. (See verse 36.)

(18.) Why would it be either wisdom or folly, in this day for any good man to adopt, the same sort of test to prove that those who opposed Christianity were wrong?

(19.) What is the supreme test, or proof to-day, that our God is real; and a present help in trouble, and all other gods are false? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the Club.)

(20.) Verses 26-29—What reason is o fBaal believed that these prophets o fBaal believed in their god?

(21.) How much value can you get for the truth of any cause from the evidence that its advocates are willing to suffer or even die, to prove their faith in it?

(22.) Verses 30-39 — What proof have we to-day that the Lord if God, fully as convincing as this miracle?

(23) How much value do you place upon conversations produced by such wonders as were here displayed?

(24.) Verse 40—What evidence is there that the wholsale slaughter of four hundred and fifty men, by Elijah, was done at the command of God?

Lesson for Sunday, Feb. 19, 1911. Elijah's Flight and Return. I Kings xviii: 21.

PRINCE AND LECTURER

Hitherto absolute ruler, the Prince of Monaco has granted the 20,000 subjects of his eight-square-mile kingdom a Constitution. The Prince is one of the most interesting personalities in Europe. He is a millionaire, drawing ample resources from the Casino at Monte Carlo, the authorities of which pay him about $350,000 a year for permission to run the place. And, like the Duke of Abruzzi, he has frequently lectured before learned societies; for the Prince is an authority on marine biology, and over a score of volumes record the results of his deep-sea dredging. At Monte Carlo he has built an oceanographical museum, at a cost of $1,500,000, which is the largest of its kind in the world.

A FOUR-FOOTED PATIENT

A dog was brought to the West London Hospital, Hammersmith, for treatment. Its owner, a young woman, stated that the poor animal had been run over, and she feared the bone of its foot was broken. Being unable to pay for the advice of a veterinary surgeon, she had brought it to the West London. The hurt was carefully washed and dressed by the casualty officer, and the patient was then allowed to be taken home. The owner left full of gratitude for the care and attention bestowed on her pet.

The Care Of The E--Y--E--S

A person in good health, at the age of 45 years, will ordinarily notice a change in the sight, requiring more effort to read fine print, or to see small objects.

It would then be advisable to have the eyes examined by a Competent Eyesight Specialist and fitted with "Preserving or Rest Glasses".

This would give great comfort and prevent eye-strain, which is the cause of much trouble in after years.

Glasses should be changed usually once in two years.

First, to fit changed conditions of sight, and Second, Glasses lose their transparency by wear.

Headaches are often warnings that the eyes need help and they should not be neglected.

The Eyes are the most important organs of the fine senses, and generally the most abused.

Many Eyes Are Ruined by wearing cheap and imperfect glasses.

"THE INNOCENT MURDERERS"

By Wm. Johnston and Paul West

The teller began ot count out the money, and Ernesta took each bill as he laid it on the counter. Sullivan could not, of course, tell what the total amount was, but yellow-backed bills predominated in the lot that she received, and there was so many of them that he whistled to himself with astonishment.

"Aonther windfall!" he said. Then Gordon thanked the teller, Ernesta being apparently too busy tucking the money away in her purse; and they came out.

Again Sullivan was behind them, this time so near that he heard Gordon say to Ernesta:

"Now, dear, you must be careful of htis money. Five thousand dollars do not grow on every bush."

"Oh, I will, I will," she replied earnestly. Then with a look into his face that showed gratitude and love, she added impulsively "George, dear, you don't know—if you only could know how happy you have made me!"

Gordon made no answer. His head was dropped, his forehead knitted to a frown. The girl noticed this and said:

"George, you don't doubt that you have done right. You trust me, don't you?" He did not reply instantly, and she waited impatiently. Finally he raised his head. The furrows of anxiety were gone. He seemed to have had a struggle with some feeling that he had striven to master and had mastered after a bitter contest. He looked at the girl and smiled:

"Yes," he said "I do trust you!"

Gordon hailed a passing cab and helped Ernesta into it. Sullivan did not try to hear the directions he gave, but leaped into another equipage and ordered the driver to keep the first one in sight. Then he sank back to digest the meaning of what had just happened.

"I think it's very clear," he said to himself. "Old Hopkins gives her a check for five thousand. She runs away from him and tries to cash the check, but can't because they do not know her at any of the banks. Penniless, she sends for Gordon, knowing that he is acquainted in Boston. He introduces her at this bank, and now she has the money. But where now?"

It nevef occurred to him to think that Gordon could have such a sum of money as $5,000. Such an idea would not have entered anybody's head. His position, his economical habits, everything in his life pointed to his being a young man of no fortune. Sullivan's interpretation of the entire proceedings, therefore, was only a natural one.

"They've just gone inside," said the driver. Sullivan leaped out, paid for the cab and rushed into the station. He saw Gordon at the ticket window. Waiting until he and Ernesta had left and started across the big room toward the trains, he stepped to the window and accosted the man in charge.

"I'm a detective," he said, presenting his card. "I want to know where that man just bought tickets for." The ticket seller replied that Gordon had purchased transportation for New York on the 3.30.

"Gimme one," said Sullivan. It was within a minute of the time for the train to start. Gordon and Ernesta were not in sight down the platform. They must be aboard. As the gong sounded and the guard called "All aboard." Sullivan swung himself upon a car, mopping his brow and wondering whether he was doing the right thing.

"I'll take a chance," he said.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

The Blind Fiddler's Vision.

"Dan," was what they called Daniel Hawkins, the blind fiddler of Graydon. Before an anvil had blown up when they were using it for a salute on the playground, one Fourth of July, some five years previous, he had been Mr. Hawkins. But when he lost his sight and with it his dignity, and became an itinerant musician, he accepted the shorter name.

On this Tuesday night Dan had been over to Milltown, a manufacturing village adjoining Graydon, playing at a wedding. It was a beautiful night, the air fragrant with apple blosoms. The fiddler could not see, but he could enjoy nature, and the absence of a moon did not concern him one way or the ohter. So, finishing his work about half-past ten he started to walk home through the woods, the path being as familiar to him in the darkness as it would be in the broad day.

What happened to him on this walk became known a half hour later, when he dashed into the barroom of the hotel, shaking with fright.

In one hand he grasped what was left of his fiddle. Now it was broken and the neck was detached from the body, hanging by the strings. He burst through the swinging doors, proping his way, and would have fallen had not some of the loungers and hte landlord caught him and led him to a chair, where he sat, huddled in a heap, shivering and moaning, his hands clutching the wreck of his violin and beating with it wildly about in the air.

"Here! Here!" said the landlord, when he could make himself heard above the tumult that this astonishing entrance had caused. "Dan! Speak! What's the matter with you?"

"Take it away! Take it away!" screamed the blind man. "It will kill me!" And he beat the air again. The landlord seized the man's wrists and held them, while others tried to elicit something intelligible from him. They offered him liquor, but the landlord quickly pushed it away from the blind man's lips.

"Dan, don't drink," he said. "Here, Dan, come to! What's the matter? Don't you know where you are? This is Sloan, the landlord. You're all right! They ain't going to get you, whoever they are! Who was it! What was it?"

Dan drew the landlord close to him. He raised his face and turned it in all directions. Had he not been sightless they might have thought he was trying to see something. His empty eye-balls seemed to be looking, looking, looking. The crowd was silent. Finally he said, turning to the landlord:

"Mr. Sloan, I'v eseen—I've seen, mind you!"

"Go on, Dan," said the landlord, failing ot notice the emphasis with which Dan had uttered the word so out of place in a blind man's vocabulary.

"Don't you understand I tell you I've seen! My eyes have shown me something."

"You don't mean to tell me you have got your sight back? Is that it?"

"I thought so, I thought so" mourned the man. "It was horrible, Mr. Sloan, horrible!"

He buried his face in the landlord's sleeve and sobbed. Suddenly he again lifted his head and now, slightly calmer than before, continued:

"I was coming through the woods over from Milltown. It was dark, but I know hte way. I had my fiddle under my arm ,and was feeling my way along, perfectly happy. I could smell the blossoms in the hawthorn hedge that grows all around Cedar Hill Cemetery, so I know just where I was when—when it happened.

"All of a sudden I heard a rumbling sound. It seemed to come from the road where the wood path leads into it. You know, the road that leads to the cemetery gate. I stopped a little, because I was sort of afraid. I don't know just why, but it was late, and hte place was kind of creepy. At first I thought of body-snatchers, because the rumbling did not sound like a waggon, and I imagined it was a wheelbarrow they were stealing a body in, like they did once before.

"Well, I waited. I guess I was hidden by some bushes. The rumbling sound came nearer, and then—O God! I saw!

"You don't know what that meant to me, gentlemen! You don't know what it is to be in darkness all these years, always with the hope that some day the veil is going to be lifted. I thought that minute had come, and I wanted to cheer. It was a queer kind of seeing, as though a bright light was coming toward me. I seemed to feel it, kind of. It was not like any light I remembered, brighter even than the day htat anvil exploded in my face. But the next minute I was glad I hadn't cheered, because what I saw was—Mr. Sloan, it was a body! Yes, I swear it was a human body, and it was dead!"

The crowd looked at one another in gasping astonishment.

"Go on," whispered the landlord.

"At first I couldn't make out just what it was. It looked to be something long and all wrapped up, and it was. It was a body wrapped in a shroud. The face was just as plain though, right through the shroud, and everything. And it looked at me!"

"Was it—was it walking?"

"No; it was floating along a couple of feet from the ground, like a ghost. And I heard voices! Yes, I heard voices!"

"You say you saw the face," asked the landlord. "Did you—had you ever seen it before?"

The blind man again clasped the landlord's sleeve and drew him down nearer.

"Yes," he whispered, so the crowd could not hear him, "I knew the face. It was old Professor Hopkins!"

"Hush!" cautioned the landlord. "You're crazy!"

"Say what you please," the blind man insisted, "I tell you I saw him; saw him just as well as you see me now. Oh, don't try to convince me. You can't!"

"Why, I'll leave it to anyone—"

"Don't," pleaded Dan. "Don't tell naybody. They wouldn't believe me. I konw what they think about Professor Honkins, that he's run away with Ernesta Frost. Oh, yes, I've heard all the gossip; but I tell you, Mr. Sloan, I saw him. If I didn't I hope I may never see again!"

The blind man's tone was meant to be convincing. But the landlord could not believe him. When the crowd of loungers endeavoured to find out what the whispered part of the conversation had been he would have told them, but Dan pleaded so earnestly that he kept silent.

"Don't bother about it, boys," said the landlord. "It's a dream of Dan's. I guess something snapped in his eyes. Dan, you'd better see a doctor to-morrow."

"Don't laugh," begged the blind man.

"All right, Dan," sai dthe landlord, winking at the crowd "I won't." Then in a whisper to one of the loungers: "Take Dan home. I don't believe he's just right."

The man led Dan out, protesting that he did not need any escort, and saying:

"I tell you I saw it! I hit at it with my fiddle and struck it. Look at my fiddle!"

Nor was Dan Hawkins the only resident of Graydon to see strange things. On the following evening, no less reliable a person than a deacon i the Baptist Church, chancing to glance out of his dining-room window, about eight o'clock, observed a peculiar glow in the heavens over Cedar Hill Cemetery, situated in the southeastern part of the village. He rubbed his spectacles and looked again. There was no doubt of it. The sky was suffused with a glare such as that caused in northern climes by the Aurora Boreulis, and, occasionally, in New England, when these northern lights are particularly strong.

AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her.

Midgie Station, N. B.—One can hardly believe this as it is not natural, but it was my case. For ten months I suffered from suppression. I had different doctors, tried different medicines, but none helped me. My friends told me I would go into a decline. One day a lady friend told me what your medicine had done for her, so I wrote you for advice and received your reply with pleasure.

I started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and at the second bottle showed improvement. Now I am regular and never was so well in my life, thanks to Mrs. Pinkham's medicine.

Please publish my letter for the benefit of others.—MRS. JOSIAH W. HICKS, Midgie Station, N. B.

Indian Head, Sask.—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is indeed a boon to women who suffer from female ills. My health is better now than it has been in my five years of married life and I thank you for the good your advice and medicine have done me. I had spent hundreds of dollars on doctors without receiving any benefit.—MRS. FRANK COOPER, Box 448, Indian Head, Saskatchewan.

The most successful remedy in this country for the cure of all forms of female complaints is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

A SUBSTITUTION OF CHEAPER FEEDS FOR OATS

From Farm and Dairy.

The substitution of cheaper feeds for oats for work horses has been studied at the Ohio and Michigan stations. W. J. Kennedy, E. T. Robbins, and H H Kildee, of the Iowa Station, report the results of some experiments along the same line. The feeds used were corn, oil meal, cotton-seed meal, and gluten feed.

The first experiment covered 100 days in the summer of 1907. Three teams of horses were included. One horse of each team had a ration of corn and oats in equal parts and his mate had a ration of corn and oil meal in the proportion of 15 to 1 by weight and with practically the same nutritive ratio as the corn and oats ration. The hay used was for the most part timothy, occasionally having as much as 25 per cent. clover.

The horses were used for teaming and field work practically similar to ordinary farm conditions. After five weeks the amount of protein in the ration was increased. In the case of the corn and oil meal the proportion was then 10 parts corn to 1 part oil meal. This proved too laxative, so some oats were added, and the ration for the balance of the period was corn 12 parts, oats 4 parts, and oil meal 1 part by weight. The results with the last combination were excellent and in general indicated that corn and oil meal maintained weight as well as corn and oats.

The second experiment was a comparison of oil meal and gluten feed and continued 91 days. Corn and gluten feed were fed in the proportion of 8 parts to 1, and the corn and oil meal 15 to 1 by weight. It was found that the gluten feed was not relished by the horses, and so was not as valuable a supplementary feed as the oil meal, though otherwise satisfactory. The work was light during the second and third experiments.

The third experiment was begun in the latter part of the winter of 1907-8, but was cut short at the end of 35 days by the sale of some of the horses. The experiment was resumed May 11, 1908, and continued 154 days. In this experiment cotton-seed meal was compared with oil meal as a supplement to oats and corn. The oats and corn were ground. Every 100 pounds of grain fed contained 79 pounds of corn, 15 pounds of oats, and 6 pounds of cotton-seed meal for one lot, and for the other 77 pounds of corn 15 pounds of oats, and 8 pounds of oil meal. During the latter half of the time the proportion of oats was increased about one-third

CONCLUSIONS OF EXPERIMENTS

The more important points brought out in these experiments were:

The health, spirit, and endurance of work horses were the same when fed corn with a moderate amount of oil meal, or gluten feed, or cotton-seed meal as when fed a corn and oats ration supplying a similar nutritive ratio.

The ration of corn and oil meal maintained the weight, flesh, and appearance of the horses fully as well and with less expense than the one of similar nutritive value composed of corn and oats

With corn at 50 cents a bushel, oats at 40 cents, and oil meal at $22 a ton, the average saving in the daily expense of feed for each work day amounted to 1.6 cents by the use of oil meal in the place of oats.

A brief trial of 91 days with gluten feed indicated that while it was capable of giving good results the ration containing it was not as palatable as the oil-meal ration and cost a trifle more per pound when gluten feed was worth $28 a ton.

Cotton-seed meal gave somewhat better results on the whole than oil meal. The ration containing it was fully as palatable and as efficient in maintaining the health and weight of the horses, it was less laxative, and a little cheaper with cotton-seed meal at $30 a ton.

With corn at 50 cents a bushel and oats at 40 cents, oil meal had a value of fully $30 a ton for feeding to work horses, with cotton-seed meal worth a trifle more still. At the usual prices of these feeds their use resulted in a substantial lowering of the cost of maintaining the horses.

Suffered Greatly From Heart Trouble.

NERVES WERE VERY WEAK.

Mrs. John Farrell, Rose Hill, P.E.I., writes:—"It is with the greatest of pleasure I write you stating the benefit I have received by using Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

"About five years ago I suffered greatly from heart trouble, and my nerves were very weak. After seeing several doctors and using their medicine, I got no relief until a friend told me of your Heart and Nerve Pills. I took two boxes and they effected a complete cure. I can recommend them highly to all nervous and run down women.

"I have advised many others to try them and they have all been cured of the same trouble."

The proper action of the nerves, so important to the well-being of the heart, depends entirely upon the general condition of the nervous system. If there be nerve derangement of any kind, it is bound to produce heart derangement.

In Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills is combined a treatment that will cure all forms of nervous disorders, as well as act on the heart itself, and in this is the secret of their success in curing so many cases of heart and nerve trouble.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co. Limited, Toronto, Ont.

COWS OF TEN YEARS AGO

Hy. Glendinning, Ontario Co., Ont.

We frequently hear the statement made by farmers that the cows of 10 years ago were, on the average, better milkers than the cows of the present time. If this is true, we may well ask ourselves the question, "Why is this so?"

Some nine or 1 0years ago a great demand sprang up for stockers to be placed on the western ranches. Many farmers crossed their dairy bred cows with bulls of the beef breeds with a view of producing steers for the western trade. In this business venture they were disappointed. They failed to raise a cross bred calf that would command a price that was remunerative. About one half of the calves were heifers. They were raised for dairy cows. They were not equal to their mothers as milkers. For the past five or six year a large number of these cross bred cows have been producing milk. Some of them when fresh give a good flow of milk for a couple of months, then shrink rapidly in yield. This lack of persistency in milking accounts for their low average during the season.

Another cause of low production in recent years has been the two or three dry seasons that prevailed prior to this year, which lessened the amount of feed. The past season has been an improvement from the standpoint of crops in most sections in Eastern Ontario.

INCREASED PRODUCTION

During the factory season of 1910 the reports so far as obtained from the instructors show an average increase in production per cow of about 20 per cent. This is gratifying, but is far below what we expect in the near future. The greatest factor in the increased milk production has been the good pastures that prevailed during the season. Anther reason for this favorable increase in production per cow was the shortage of feed during the previous three years. This led to the weeding out of the poorest cows from the herds, which has helped greatly to increase the average milk production per cow. If more systematic work was done along the line of weeding out the poor cows and better feeding of the proper kind of feeds to the good ones, we would in a few years double the average annual production per cow.

I believe we are on the eve of a great development in dairying in this country. The work that is being done by the agricultural department at Ottawa through the cow testing associations shows that without increasing the number of cows we might in a short time double our output of milk by better breeding, better feeding, and weeding out the poor cows.

A GRAND MEDICINE FOR OLD PEOPLE

"Fruit-a-tives" Restores The Health and Strength of Youth.

GRANDE LIGNE, QUE., Jan. 2nd, 1910.

"I heartily recommend "Fruit-a-tives" to all who suffer from constipation and the painful consequence, Piles. I am now over 80 years of age and suffered for more than 10 years with Constipation and Piles. I tried all kinds of remedies, but nothing cured me.

About four years ago, I received a sample of "Fruit-a-tives". After taking a few doses, I felt that "Fruit-a-tives" were doing me good. As "Fruit-a-tives" were not sold here then, I wrote to Ottawa for several boxes.

After taking four boxes, I felt well—my Bowels were regular—and the Piles had disappeared". N. JOUBERT.

By taking one "Fruit-a-tives" tablet half an hour before meals—or one or two at night—old people can correct all Stomach, Liver and Kidney Troubles.

"Fruit-a-tives" the famous fruit medicine is mild and gentle in action—pleasant to the taste—yet no other remedy has been found to be so effective in keeping old folks in good health.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

IN DUTY BOUND

A Short Story

There was a pause for a moment or so.

"Where are your two friends?" asked the man on the floor.

"Gone to the goldfield to seek their fortunes," replied Strong with a sigh.

The man smiled, but was silent for some time, then he said suddenly:

"You will do the last thing I ask you, I am sure. There are two trees in the front garden. Short trees both; one I think is dead, but I'm not sure. I want you to bury me exactly between these two trees, and four feet deep—four feet deep, mind you."

"I will do exactly what you wish," answered Strong.

"Four feet deep, and exactly between the two trees," repeated the man faintly; and a minute later he drew his last breath.

John Strong rose immediately. He realized the task before him—two graves to dig, and the ground as hard as iron, and the sun burning like a furnace, and never a breath of wind to cool him, or a soul to help him.

Some men would have fled the place with horror, but not so John Strong. He was in duty bound to see the whole business through to the fearful end.

He was surprised at his own strength of character, surprised at his own strength of arm, for it was terribly hard work; it took him hours to dig the first grave, but it was done at last, and Rivers, the man who had done him so much injury, was laid to rest for ever. Strong said a prayer over him, and then taking his spade, went to the spot between the two trees.

If anything, the ground was hard er here, or was it that he was growing so very weary! Four feet: was it possible for him to arrive at such a depth? It seemed not, for he had not dug a foot down when he fainted. When he came to himself, he was unable to stand, so he dragged himself along the ground out of the heat of the sun, and lay in the shadow of the house for some hours.

"I look like digging my own grave," he said to himself grimly; but when the night came he felt much better, and was able to resume his task. He worked slowly but steadily, and at length came to three feet down.

"Three feet, surely that's enough," he muttered ,and he leant on his spade. "I'm half a mind to let it go at that."

After a moment or so he put the spade aside, and walked towards the house. He was anxious to get it all over. The moon was shining brightly, and to his fevered imagination everything seemed unreal; it certainly was all very uncanny and gruesome, while the solitude and silence were appalling.

"But he made a point of four feet, such a point," he said to himself, hesitating, "and I gave him my word; I will go on."

And he went on.

"Damn the stones," he cried suddenly and savagely, as he stooped down to pick up that which the spade had struck against.

It was a remarkably heavy stone for its size, remarkably heavy. He held it to the light, and noticed that where the spade had struck it there was a long glistening line.

"My God," cried John Strong hoarsely. He turned hot and then cold, his heart beat so hard and fast that it was positively painful. He held the stone, it was large, again to the light.

Stone—it was no stone, but a lump of gold! The man shrieked aloud with excitement. He laughed, he danced, he threw the nugget beside him, and seizing the spade went on digging with strong, powerful arms. Dig, he could not; it was only a matter of picking out the gold; some nuggets were large and some were small—but all pure, all pure and bright.

He understood it now—the space between the two trees, the depth of four feet, and the reward he was to receive.

When dawn broke it found John Strong a rich man. He had found a fortune, while his revenge had turned to loving kindness!

Having performed his duties to the dead, Strong with a little of the gold in his pocket, wandered forth to procure assistance. After some hours he came to a homestead, where he was able to purchase a horse and cart, and some much needed food. He drove back to the cottage, and from there, with his wealth, to the railway.

* * * * *

About three months later, John Strong strode along a country lane. He was humming a tune as he went, his ruddy cheeks glowed with health, his bright eyes shone with happiness.

As he turned suddenly to the left, and came on to the high road, he could see a house in the distance. With what anguish in his heart had he last looked at that house!

And was it chance—or could she be waiting for him? She was there at the garden gate. He shouted to her and waved his hat, and a few moments later he held her in his arms.

Muriel's father had heard from John Strong, and heard of his riches. He came smiling down the garden path, and before the day was out gave his ready consent to the marriage—as, of course, he was in duty bound!

WHAT CAN I DO FOR MY SKIN-TORTURED BABY?

In the Despairing Cry of Thousands of Mothers. A Scotchwoman Tells How Her Child was Cured.

"What can I do for my skin-tortured baby?" How many worried, worn-out mothers, whose children are suffering with eczema, tetter or other torturing, disfiguring humor, have asked themselves this question! Through neglect or improper treatment, some minor eruption has developed into a distressing and unsightly affliction. Simple treatments fail, and stronger ones are tried, sometimes so harsh that the suffering is increased rather than allayed. Even professional aid has proven useless, and the fear is ever-present that the skin disease will become chronic, turning the child's future into a nightmare of physical and mental misery.

Such mothers, who have witnessed their children's suffering and who have spent the long, sleepless nights and days of anxiety which they alone can realize, will understand the gratitude that prompted this letter from Mrs. John Ewan, 5, Victoria St., Inverurie, Scotland, and will read it with keenest interest:

"I use Cuticura Soap steadily for my baby's skin. She had the eczema when she was three months old. She was in an awful mess all over her body. We never thought she would get over it. We sat with her night and day for about a month, expecting every minute to see her die. The doctor gave me an ointment to rub her with but it did her no good. My mother was home from America and she told me to try Cuticura Ointment and to wash her with Cuticura Soap. There was a great difference when I used the first box. It seemed to soothe her and she slept. I used three boxes of Cuticura Ointment and she was quite cured. She has the purest skin and is the fattest baby now! She is a miracle, the doctor declares. I am glad to tell anybody about it."

And that the success of the Cuticura Remedies is not confined to the treatment of eczema, is amply proven by Mrs. A. Schwerin, 674 Springwells Ave., Detroit, Mich., who writes:

"When my little Vivian was about six months old, her papa had a boil on his forehead. At that time the child was covered with prickly heat and I suppose in scratching it her own hand became infected, for it broke out in boils, one after another. She had about sixty in all and I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment which cured her of them entirely. We do not think any one can praise Cuticura Remedies too highly."

That mothers may test the efficacy and economy of the Cuticura Remedies for themselves, the Potter Drug and Chem. Corp., 121 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass., will send free on application, a generous trial box of Cuticura Ointment, sufficient to afford immediate relief in the most distressing forms of eczema, rashes, itchings and soalings of the skin and scalp. Under the influence of Cuticura Ointment, the itching and burning stop, the child falls into a refreshing sleep, the mother rests, and for the first time, perhaps, in many weeks, peace falls on a distracted household. The Cuticura Remedies are sold by druggists everywhere.

The first carnival of the season was held in the skating rink here on Friday night.

"Bronchitis"

This is an acute inflammation of the mucous membrane lining the air tubes in the lungs.

The disease begins with a tightness across the chest, difficulty of breathing, hoarseness, and there is a dry, harsh, croupy cough.

After a few days mucous begins to be raised. This is at first white, but later of a greenish or yellowish color and is occasionally streaked with blood.

Cure the first symptoms of Bronchitis by the use of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and thus prevent it becoming chronic and perhaps turning to Consumption.

Mrs. D. J. McCormack, Cleveland, N.S., writes: "My little boy, two years old, caught a bad cold which developed into Bronchitis. He was so choked up he could hardly breathe. Reading about your wonderful medicine, Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, I decided to try a bottle, and with such good result I got another which completely cured him, without having a doctor. I cannot say too much in its praise and would not be without it in the house as I consider it a sure cure for Colds and Bronchitis.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents.

Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Mrs. A. P. Brown of Peterborough, spent Sunday at the home of her brother, Mr. K. G. Thomson.

Misses Flora Mills and Emma Redden of Campbellford are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Mills.

Mr. Douglas Pettigrew of Chicago, is visiting his father, Dr. G. A. Pettigrew.

WHY SO SLOW?

From Farm and Dairy.

Why is Eastern Ontario so slow about taking up the work of the cow testing associations? In the whole of Eastern Ontario there are only about five cow testing associations, they being located in Peterboro, Perth, Prescott, Morewood and Alexandria. In Western Ontario, in the county of Oxford alone, there are 18. Dairying is carried on much more extensively in Eastern Ontario than it is in Western Ontario.

This subject was discussed at some length during the recent convention in Perth of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association. "We have not been able as yet," said Mr. Geo. H. Barr, Chief of the Dairy Division, "to find a single herd in Eastern Ontario through our cow testing associations with a record sufficiently good to warrant us in drawing attention to it on our Government charts. This is the case, although Eastern Ontario produces more milk than any other similar area in the Dominion. Instead of having only four or five cow testing associations we ought to have 25 or 30 cow testing associations at least. It must be because so few farmers in Eastern Ontario take any interest in the subject that we are unable to find any good records of individual herds."

A farmer in the audience suggested that the trouble was not with the cows as much as it was with the man who fed the cows. "We will have," he said, "to improve our breed of feeders."

"RECORDS HAVE HELPED HIM

"I have," said another farmer, "been testing my cows for several years, and I have learned some valuable lessons. For instance, by the use of my scales, and the Babcock test, I found that one cow cost me $7.00 a year less for feed than another cow standing right beside her. It is not always the quantity of milk that a cow produces that determines the net profits she returns. The cost of feed needs to be considered also.

"I have found, too, that my best producing cows have the faculty of transmitting this quality to their progeny. The poor cows transmit their poor qualities. When we are watching the feeding of our animals we soon find that if they are to do their best and return us the greatest profit, we must feed them well and give them good care."

Another farmer stated that in a new factory to which he belonged there were 345 cows. The patrons were interested in the matter of feeding and caring for their cows better and in keeping track of their production. The first year their cows had averaged 4,946 pounds of milk. The next year these same cows gave 279,000 pounds of milk more as a result of the better care and attention they received. This farmer thought that this was a good method for factories to adopt to increase their supply of milk.

THE DAIRY COW

From Farm and Dairy.

F. D. Shaver, Lambton Co., Ont.

In the selection of the dairy cow lies one of the essentials of success. The wise dairyman will select his cows from among those breeds which are characterised by dairy qualities, rather than those noted for beef making. When selecting cows for breeding, as well as for milking purposes, it is important to have animals which belong to milking families or strains as well as belonging to one of the dairy breeds. A cow's milk yield depends not so much upon her breed as upon her own characteristics, her food and management.

If butter-making be the chief object we should select cows that give as large a flow as possible of rich milk, or milk rich in butter fat. For cheese making and general dairying, quantity of flow is as important as richness.

The dairy cow should have a good constitution, as indicated by plenty of width between the forelegs, combined with a full heart girth, giving plenty of room for the heart and lungs. She should have a large paunch or middle showing that she has the power of consuming food in large quantities, and also a large mouth, strong lips, good appetite and a general appearance of contentment. The nervous power for the transformation of food into blood; and for the elaboration of milk, in indicated by a high broad dishing forehead, bright prominent eyes and a prominent spinal column. A large well-balanced udder, which is not fleshy and shows elastic quality; udder and mammary veins prominent; large milk wells and good-sized escutcheon, these indicate power to produce milk. "No udder, no cow" may serve as a guide in selecting cows.

If possible the dairy cow should have combined with utility qualities those of beauty, which consist of a fine, clean-cut head, fine horns, bright eyes, medium length of rather thin neck, fine shoulder, large barrel, broad loin and hips, long rump rather long fine tail with good switch and short limbs. No one part should be unduly prominent unless it be the udder.

It has only been within recent years that we have come to really know about the white corpuscles of the blood or the phagocytes and what their function is.

That they are the policemen or scavengers of the body.

Devouring every disease germ that enters the body when they are strong enough or in sufficient numbers.

Or being devoured in turn by these disease germs when inferior in strength.

It has only been within the last few years that scientists have found out that certain herbs strengthen and increase these white corpuscles, or bodily scavengers.

* * *

And these herbs largely compose Psychine.

For thirty years Psychine has been strengthening and increasing the white corpuscles of the blood.

For thirty years Psychine has been building up run-down vitality, curing many of apparently hopeless diseases.

We have sold millions of bottles of Psychine in that time.

We have cured hundreds of thousands.

And we have received hundreds of thousands of unsolicited testimonials.

All due to this marvellous power of strengthening and increasing the white corpuscles of the blood.

La Grippe	Bronchial Coughs
Bronchitis	Weak Lungs
Hemorrhages	Weak Voice
Sore Throat	Spring Weakness
Anaemia	Early Decline
Female Weakness	Catarrhal Affections
Indigestion	Catarrh of Stomach
Poor Appetite	Night Sweats
Chills and Fevers	Obstinate Coughs
Sleeplessness and Nervous Troubles	Laryngitis and Dyspepsia
After-effects of Pleurisy, Pneumonia and La Grippe.

Now, we don't ask you to take our word for the tremendously beneficial effect of Psychine. Fill out the coupon below, mail it to us and we'll give your druggist an order (for which we pay him the regular retail price) for a 50-cent bottle of Psychine to be given you free of cost.

We will undoubtedly buy and distribute in this manner hundreds of thousands of these 50-cent bottles of Psychine.

And we do that to show our entire confidence in this wonderful preparation.

A confidence that has been based on our 30 years' experience with this splendid preparation, with a full knowledge of the hundreds of thousands of cures it has made.

BEAUTIFUL MUSIC FOR CORONATION

Draft of the Suggested Form of Service Made by Sir Frederick Bridge.

BY ENGLISH COMPOSERS

Westminster Abbey Choir Will Be Augmented by 400 Voices from Other Organizations.

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

THERE is promise of some exceptionally fine music at the coronation of King George, and, from what one can learn, it will in every way be equal to that chosen for the coronation of King Edward.

Already a draft of the suggested form of musical service prepared by Sir Frederick Bridge, the organist of Westminster Abbey, has been submitted to His Majesty by the Archbishop of Canterbury, who, by prescriptive right, is responsible for the details of the religious portion of the ceremony.

It will, of course, be impossible to overload the service, which is naturally long, on account of the solemn ritual associated from time immemorial with the English coronation of Kings; but it can be stated that there is every possibility of some beautiful original items being included in the service.

Sir Frederick will, it is understood, include another of his own works, which will be specially prepared. He was responsible at the last coronation for the anthem "Kings shall see, and Princes also shall worship," which was entitled the "Homage Anthem" and was sung by the enlarged choir at the point when his late Majesty was receiving the homage of members of the royal family, the Bishops, &c.

It is proposed, also, that the work of other representative English musicians who are now living shall be given. Concerning these final arrangements particulars cannot be stated until His Majesty has approved of the outline suggestions made.

One thing is certain, however, and that is that the Westminster Abbey choir will be augmented by 400 voices from the choirs of St. Paul's Cathedral, the Chapels Royal of St. James' and Savoy, and several provincial cathedrals. The orchestra will consist of about eighty performers, with, of course, the trumpeters using their silver trumpets.

AN ANCIENT HYMN.

A part of the service, it is expected, will be similar to that arranged for the crowning of the late King. For instance, as a processional for the Abbey clergy at the commencement of the last service Watts' well known hymn, "O God, our help in ages past" was sung. The works of two living organists, Sir Walter Parratt and Sir George Martin, were selected. Just after the crowning of the King and before the Bible was presented the former composer's anthem, "Be strong and of good courage," was sung. Later on Stainer's "Sanctus," which had been arranged by Sir George Martin, was rendered. As the royal procession left the seat of coronation the organist played, but, owing to the tumultuous applause that greeted the King as his procession passed down the Abbey, few of the spectators could appreciate the beautiful music.

An absurd statement is going the round just now that both Queen Mary and Queen Alexandra and other royal ladies have exact imitations of their most valuable jewels which they wear on many occasions. Since one is assured that it is a matter of the utmost difficulty to tell the real and imitation jewels when they are placed side by side, it is suggested in contradicting the unfounded story that their Majesties have no need to remain the real stones at all.

As a matter of fact, there is not the slightest foundation for the statement, since neither of the Queens possesses an imitation jewel of any kind. In each of the royal palaces there are burglar and fire proof strong rooms fitted up for the reception of the Queens' jewelry, and only very few of those about the court are even aware of the position of these rooms. In the case of Queen Mary's safes, these can be opened only in her presence, and the keys to them never leave her. Queen Alexandra, on the other hand, entrusts the care of her jewels to the Honorable Charlotte Knollys, who alone possesses the key that will open them.

HOLYROOD PLANS.

A statement that King George and Queen Mary will hold a drawing room at Holyrood Palace some time this year has caused a deal of commotion in Edinburgh, where a similar function was held by King Edward in May, 1905, the year after his coronation. That a drawing room will take place in Holyrood in the future is certain, but whether this year or next is not definitely arranged.

Holyrood has not been used as a royal residence for close on forty years, with the exception of a flying visit his late Majesty paid there in 1905. Queen Victoria stopped at Holyrood on several occasions, but the last time she slept in the ancient palace, the history of which is as stirring and romantic as that of any old building in the three kingdoms, was in 1871.

Until King Edward and Queen Alexandra held a drawing room at Holyrood close on eight years ago, no such function had taken place there since 1822, when the "First Gentleman in Europe" received his Scottish subjects attired in full Highland costume and wearing a wig so overpoweringly scented with patchouli as to cause the high born

HARRIET'S IDENTITY BLOW TO BRITAIN

"Fair Play" Writers Shocked to Learn That Scandal Buyer Is Not American.

JUMP AT CONCLUSIONS

Some More About the Bombshell Exploded When the Young Woman's Plans Were Made Public.

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

IN one letter "Harriet" almost equalled the fame won by Junius. For two weeks all England has been discussing the barefaced attempt to bribe servants of the aristocracy and society leaders to reveal the secrets of the lives of their employers for "the delectation of American (?) readers," who, if the English newspapers are to be believed, must sit up o' nights waiting to hear the latest bit of gossip and scandal from Mayfair.

That "Harriet" is an American catering for Americans was the conclusion jumped at by some writers who are continually harping on British fair play. Imagine their feelings to-day when they learned through an announcement in the Times, which first gave publicity to "the letter to the butler," that the woman in question is a "Miss Harriet Churchill, of Chestnut Cottage, Ladywood Road, Birmingham," who has been at work in the city of Joseph Chamberlain for years.

While the Times says this is not the woman's real name, an investigator sent by the Daily Mail discovered that she is a newspaper writer, and that she and her relatives are members of a hunting set in the Midlands. In fact, the Mail says this purveyor of doubtful "good things" for the American news market is a guest at an English country house at the present time.

Before this second bombshell was exploded by the Times the newspapers of London and the provinces, with few exceptions, declared that on the American side of the Atlantic "the liberty of the press has descended to unbridled license," and that "no reputations are safe there if a good story can be hitched to a noble or a public name."

A SAD SHOCK.

Unmindful of the truth that only very yellow newspapers of America, whose clientèle are usually callow youths and silly girls, furnish the market for the drivel which "Harriet" sought to buy, the English press and the English letter writers were at one in condemning the journalism of the United States for retailing the gossip and scandal current in what may be termed usually well informed and select English scullery circles.

Now that the bitter truth is out that "Harriet" is an English journalist, the matter probably will be dropped without correction of the many unpleasant things printed about America and the American press.

It is exceedingly amusing to read the exalted editorials written by purely pro-British pens, in which Americans are held up to public scorn as the only customers of the stories supplied by Mayfair butlers, when one realises that here in England there are scores of nasty publications, with tremendous circulations, which publish stories that would not be permitted to appear in any American newspaper.

SERVANTS ARE LOYAL.

There is no doubt that the exposé of "Peeping Tomy" in society here will have a salutary effect. Men and women of the "upper world" will profit in that they will be more circumspect in their behavior and more careful in weighing their words when servants are about.

That servants are not the only persons approached by irresponsible journalistic scavengers is evidenced by a letter which a West End physician writes to the Times, in which he tells of a proposal from a woman who writes for American journals, but furnishes no proof that the woman is an American. The letter is as follows:—

"As a West End physician you are doubtless au courant with all the latest on dits and society scandals. I represent several leading American papers, and am anxious to purchase any amount of this scandal, for which I pay most liberally. • • • I am anxious to purchase in advance rumors of any cause célèbre, divorces, &c., and also to know of the financial shifts and difficulties of any well known people. At present I am particularly anxious to obtain racy stories about Lady —— or any trouble in the Duke ——'s ménage.

"The reason why Prince —— has never married and who are his chère amies. The love affairs of Lord ——, Lord ——, the Earl of ——, &c. Also of any friction between any members of the royal family [mentioning two]. The class of public for whom I cater are particularly interested in any scandal affecting the royal families. I am also anxious to know of the social successes or otherwise of leading Americans in London, &c."

This physician says he happens to know that the reputation of one lady whose name was mentioned in the letter to him has suffered from malicious scandals for which there is no foundation whatever, and that he hesitated to make public this letter because such names are mixed up with those of persons who perhaps have not kept their reputations above reproach.

Skating on Real Ice Pleases London Despite the Craze for the Roller Kind

MRS. HALL-WALKER

THE DUCHESS OF WESTMINSTER

PICTURES FROM THE TATLER.

Society Women Are Making Prince's a Rendezvous and Enjoy the Sport There.

[SPECIAL DISPATCH.]
LONDON, Saturday.

DESPITE the craze for roller skating, and the Sunday Club at Olympia, of which many society women and theatrical stars are members, it has made no effect upon Prince's Skating Club, where skating on real ice can be indulged in almost all the year round.

A very select society rendezvous is Prince's, and the Duchess of Bedford will always be remembered as the founder of one of society's most enjoyed and most lasting recreations.

The Duchess of Bedford is not to be seen so often on the ice as she used to be, but has frequent parties of young persons with her there, while the more elderly sit around in the boxes sipping tea as they watch the animated spectacle.

The Duchess of Westminster is reckoned one of the most skilful skaters to be seen there, though her many social engagements prevent her being so regular an attendant as she has been in former seasons. Lady Helen Vincent is another whom it is delightful to watch. So are Miss Lister Kaye, Mrs. Hall-Walker and Miss Daphne Fitzgeorge, who is a daughter of the late Colonel Fitzgeorge.

A regular habitué is Mrs. Syers, who is considered in England the best woman skater in the world. Be that as it may, her figure skating is a treat to see, and when she and her skilful husband cut figures or execute fanciful dances on the ice every one stops to look on.

AT 100 TRANSLATES GREEK FOR WORK

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

ISAAC C. JOHNSON, inventor of Portland cement, who on January 28 reached the age of one hundred years, is now living at Gravesend, his occupation nowadays being translating from the Greek.

"This," he said to a visitor, "is the only occupation I have now, and I cannot do very much of that. I cannot take much outdoor exercise, but when I was eighty-seven-years of age I took up bicycling for the first time. I attribute my longevity very much to the fact that I have been a total abstainer for eighty-two years."

It was while Mr. Johnson was manager of a firm of cement manufacturers at Nine Elms, London, that he invented the cement which afterward became world-famous, though credit is also given to Joseph Aspdin, of Leeds.

ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR AND HIS BUSY LIFE

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

The venerable William MacDonald Sinclair, Canon of St. Paul's, has resigned the Archdeaconry of London, the resignation to take effect on June 30 after King George's coronation.

The Archdeacon, who is a benignant bachelor and one of the best after dinner speakers and raconteurs in the Church, is a very popular figure in London life. He is known to thousands of Americans who have visited the great cathedral in which he presides, and is looked upon as the "first aid" to English newspaper men whenever anything ecclesiastical is up for discussion in the English press.

So popular is he with newspaper men that he was made an honorary member of the London Press Club and is a striking, genial figure at all gatherings of that organization. He was a great friend of Lady Burdett-Coutts, and it was to the vicarage of St. Stephen [illegible] which she built and endowed that [illegible] served under [illegible] Bermondsey.

MRS. ASQUITH HAS POINTED THE PRICE

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

MRS. ASQUITH'S notable epigram uttered when giving testimony in the West slander case has made her almost as famous as her husband, the Prime Minister, who in his reply to a question in the House of Commons uttered the not yet forgotten "Wait and see."

"Extravagance," she said, "is usually a passport to society."

Now a writer in The Tattler takes up the matter, and tells what the life of the modern society woman means and how costly is her life if she means to keep "in the swim."

"The demands of the smart set," says the writer, "need a purse of Croesus, the powers of a quick change artist and the juggling abilities of a Chancellor of the Exchequer.

"For a society woman's life is vivid and various; there are forty-eight hours to her day, and she goes to Paris to fit a frock and to New York for a new face treatment. The London season is a costly campaign, and to carry on, say, from the middle of May to Goodwood a woman in the swim must have at least six sumptuous evening gowns, with a couple of little frocks to act as accessories, and of course the usual lot of Ascot and garden party gowns, with a correct get-up for bridge, days on the river, short journeys and motoring. And all this without mention of the court gown and train which every year or two are demanded by her position.

"Then, with August, come yachting trips and Cowes, followed by Aix, Homburg or Marienbad. September brings Scotland, with the fashionable race meetings later on. Next runs over to Paris, while November has the country house parties and shoots. Then London again, with its Christmas, followed by visits to the Riviera or Egypt.

"As for the price paid for pet dogs—really a veil must be drawn over these proceedings. Three or five hundred pounds is often given, and some weird specimens are priced at £1,000."

"THE MANCHESTERS" TO ENTERTAIN MUCH

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

The Duchess of Manchester is now beginning to take her place among the leading Anglo-American hostesses in London. An entertainment which is much talked about is the grand dinner and dance she gave to celebrate not only the Duke's recovery from the operation he had to undergo for appendicitis, but what was virtually her début as a London hostess.

Following this function, as cabled to the HERALD, the Duchess had to undergo a slight operation, from which she is rapidly recovering.

Over in Ireland "the Manchesters," as they are called, entertain a great deal at Kylemore, but in England, probably because the late Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester, was such a prominent hostess, the Duchess of Manchester has never really entertained at all.

Judging by the inaugural success she is expected to figure prominently as a hostess during this, the coronation

LORD FISHER AND HIS BOGEY SPEECH

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

ADMIRAL LORD FISHER, who is affectionately known as "Jacky" to his intimates, retired a few days ago from the active list of the navy as Admiral of the Fleet upon the completion of his sevintieth year. His withdrawal renders vacant the important post of first and principal aide da camp to the King.

Lord Fisher, who entered the navy in 1854 and rose to the rank of rear admiral in 1890, has held many important commands, and was gazetted for gallantry in the Crimean War in 1855, the China War of 1860 and the Egyptian War in 1882. He was knighted in 1902 and was raised to the peerage in 1909.

The outcry over his famous Guildhall speech in 1907, when Englishmen, unsettled by their constant nightmare, voiced their apprehensions of a German invasion, is still remembered. He said then:—

"So I turn to all of you, my countrymen, and I say, Sleep quietly in your beds. Do not be disturbed by these bogeys of invasion which have periodically been resuscitated by all kinds of leagues."

Sir Arthur Wilson, with the same object in view, repeated Lord Fisher's words a few weeks ago, and there was no outcry. When some one asked Lord Fisher to which party he belonged he replied in this impromptu couplet:—

"Sworn to no party, of no sect am I—
I can't be silent, and I will not lie!"

A witty Englishman—believe me, there are many of them—commenting on this couplet, said that those who knew him best were persuaded that the first half of the second line was as true as the whole of the first.

GORILLA RECEIVES AT NOTED HOTEL

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday

A GORILLA, said to be the only one living in England, held a reception at the Hotel Cecil recently. It is only a baby, and in the opinion of Mr. Maxbridge, an official from the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park, is between a year and eighteen months old.

"In the last thirty years," Mr. Maxbridge told those assembled, "I have had four gorillas under my charge, but none of them lived many months. There can be no doubt about this one being a gorilla," he said, pointing to the little ape, which was fondly embracing its female attendant, as he drew attention to its semi-webbed feet and other parts of its anatomy which distinguished it from other apes.

The little anthropoid belongs to Mr. Frank Bostock, who purchased it a week ago in Liverpool immediately on its arrival from Lagos, and Mr. Bostock says it cost him one thousand guineas. Asked how he came to pay such a big price for an animal that would probably die on his hands in a few weeks, Mr. Bostock remarked that he was actuated by the fact that he knew of no other live gorilla in any collection.

"I have now the trinity of these quasi-humans apes in a chimpansee, an orang outang and a gorilla," he said. "If the latter lives until May I am going to take it to New York, where there has never been a gorilla, and where people will pay [illegible] to see it."

AMERICANS LEAD IN LONDON'S LIFE

Well Known Hostesses Who Are Playing Important Parts on the Society Stage.

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

AFTER one of the dullest months London perhaps has ever known, society having left the metropolis after the general election to recruit for a long spell before the opening of Parliament, several hostesses are arranging dances for the young people during the next few weeks, and it is quite possible that the ante-Easter season may be a far better one than was at one time anticipated.

Though the outlook of social life in London has been described by an American resident as a veritable "study in still life," a good many small dinner parties are being given, usually followed by a visit to a theatre.

Chesterfield House will soon be re-opened, for the Duchess of Roxburghe will be up for the opening of Parliament, and the Duchess of Marlborough is likely to return to London from the Continent earlier than she first expected, to open Sunderland House, where she will be a very prominent hostess later on.

Mrs. Anthony Drexel is more or less settled at her house in Grosvenor square, and Mrs. Chauncey has returned to her house in Hertford street, where she will probably give one or two big dinner parties before she again leaves for the Riviera.

Americans are very much interested in the reappointment of Mr. Montagu Eliot as gentleman usher, for, as Lady Barrymore's daughter, his handsome young wife has innumerable American connections.

The Servian Minister and Mme. Groutch have arranged to pay a short visit to The Hague, and when they return, Mme. Groutch, who is an American, will probably take her departure for America, where it is her present intention to pay a succession of visits among her many relatives and friends.

Of Queen Mary's new maids of honor, Miss Villiers is, perhaps, the name of greatest interest to Americans, because her mother was by birth an American, and a daughter of Mr. Maquay, who was well known in Rome, where he was one of the leading American bankers. The Maquays are a Boston family and are connected with many prominent Bostonians. Another of the four maids of honor, and the prettiest, has some remote links with America.

Miss Venetia Baring's great-great-great-grandfather found a bride in the States by his marriage to the daughter of Senator Bingham, Miss Anne Bingham. The Bingham family were then Philadelphians and Miss Venetia's far away ancestress was said to be one of the prettiest girls of her day.

THE SUN OFTEN SEEN IN DARKEST LONDON

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

During the first twenty-three days of this year the sun shone for scarcely six hours, but on January 24 Old Sol smiled on this ofttimes foggy metropolis, and Londoners, plucking up heart, insisted on making strangers within their gates acknowledge that the English metropolis is the finest residential city in the world.

Needless to say, there were some who would not concede this, but even these extremists admitted that for variety in weather London cannot be equalled by any other world centre.

Benighted New Yorkers never saw a day that can compare with Sunday, January 22, in London, when at midday the skies were as dark as at midnight. This unusual condition continued until about ten o'clock in the evening, when, paradoxical as it may seem, the gloom began to lift and things became brighter.

So dark was the day that some of the ultra religious—those who know their Bibles by heart—referred to the chapters dealing with signs and portents of the approach of the end of the world.

But London is still here; the fog visits it betimes, and owing to general shiftlessness the sale of the wine of Scotland is again picking up.

WOMEN WHO SMOKE DO SO IN THE HOME

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

It is hard to find any evidence in the leading London hotels and restaurants of the trouble which is said just now to be experienced in like establishments in New York in regard to smoking by women.

The cigarette is permitted in most of them, but it is indulged in by women to a far less extent than twenty years ago, and that not because of any prohibition, but simply owing to the fact that the fashion for women to smoke in public proved only a passing one.

Every tobacconist in the fashionable quarters of London can testify that there is a very great deal, and perhaps an increasing amount, of smoking at home among women, particularly the younger ones; but the desire to "show off" the accomplishment has largely died away.

It is therefore the exception at the most fashionable hotels and restaurants for women to smoke after dinner in the public rooms, but the old prejudice against men indulging in the weed and being compelled to go to special rooms to smoke has almost disappeared, and an anti-tobacco ukase nowadays is enforced in the [illegible]

CH. ROYAL STONE, NOTED DOG, DIES

Animal Sold as Puppy for £800 and Won More Than 500 Prizes in England and America.

[SPECIAL DISPATCH.]
LONDON, Saturday.

THE death has just occurred of that well known bulldog Ch. Royal Stone, from heart failure. The dog was a descendant of the famous Ch. Rodney Stone, for which Mr. Richard Croker, Jr., paid a record price and which afterward made such a great name in American show rings. He was a relative of the bulldogs which Lord Charles Beresford presented to the British fleet.

Bred by Mr. Walter Jeffries, he was purchased as a puppy for £800 by Mr. Stephenson, of Leeds, who won more than five hundred prizes, including four championships, with him.

Royal Stone's late owner was quite unknown among bulldog fanciers until he made his sensational purchase of the dog. At the time he bought the animal from Mr. Jeffries there was a lot of controversy about the big price he had paid for him. Subsequent events, however, proved Mr. Stephenson's judgment to have been sound and far seeing.

KING AND QUEEN RETURN TO LONDON

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

NOW that the Court has returned to London for a brief period, the much talked about changes at Buckingham Palace are found to be remarkably few after all, being confined almost entirely to the private apartments of the King and Queen, very little having been done to the State apartments which were thoroughly overhauled and renovated at considerable cost during the last reign.

Their Majesties occupy the apartments that formerly were used by the late King Edward and Queen Alexandra. These stand on the first floor and overlook the gardens. What used to be Princess Victoria's rooms have been converted into nurseries for the younger children of their Majesties, while a small suite also has been provided for Princess Mary in close proximity to her mother's rooms.

The Prince of Wales and Prince Albert have rooms on the main front of the palace, looking straight down the mall. Some of these rooms were at one time used by Queen Victoria, who preferred that side of the palace to the garden front.

Queen Mary now is busy "receiving" dressmakers and milliners in view of the coronation, and also with regard to her prospective visits to Scotland and the Emerald Isle. In regard to the Irish visit the Queen is insisting on every possible yard of material and every scrap of lace being of Irish make if possible. Even in the matter of jewelry, she is studying national sentiment, and will wear the fine emeralds which formed part of her wedding gifts.

Fail to "Bluff" Him.

King George, while just and fair up to the point of generosity, has a good business head, and does not like being bluffed. He always displayed great acumen in business matters while he was Prince of Wales, and he is equally wideawake now that he is King. Quite recently charges were brought under his notice which were apparently excessive, and yet the officials of the household did not quite see their way to find fault with any particular item.

The King, however, noted the inaccuracy of the basis upon which the charges were framed, and directed that the person making the charges should have the matter pointed out forthwith. Nonplussed for the moment, the tradesman in question took refuge in bluff and observed that if His Majesty did not see his way to pay the amount charged he personally would reduce the bill and lose the difference. That man made the biggest blunder in his life, and from that moment lost a generous patron.

Outside of business King George is equally particular. The recognised time for a preacher to occupy the pulpit when preaching before the late King was ten minutes. King George never quite approved of these short sermons, and it has been intimated to the chaplains in ordinary attached to the royal household, from whom the preacher for the morning service at Buckingham Palace is usually selected, that their sermons may be lengthier than they were customarily in the late reign.

An intimation of this sort amounts practically to a "command," but it is considered doubtful if it will be welcome to several of the chaplains who were in the late King's household, who have during the last ten years rarely preached a sermon of more than ten minutes' duration.

PENSIONS FOR HORSES

An Eccentric Austrian Bachelor Makes a Remarkable Will

The highly-original will of an eccentric bachelor, Emil von Bizony, is reported from Vienna. The deceased, the brother of a well-known Hungarian deputy, was sixty-five years old, detested women, and lived on a war footing with all his relations.

In his will he bequeathed all his real and personal estate, worth about $100,000, to his twelve draught horses. As executors of the will he named the Society for the protection of Animals at Budapest, stipulating that the interest on his property should be devoted to the care of these twelve animals, and that upon the death of one of them another horse was to be taken in and cared for, so that the number of twelve might always be maintained.

Herr von Bizony's relations were naturally amazed at the contents of the will, and the deputy, Herr Alusius Bizony, will dispute it. Negotiations have been commenced with the abovementioned society, and $20,000 was offered it and refused.

FASCINATION OF "MACBETH"

There are not many cleverer linguists than Miss Braddon, the popular novelist. She reads French, German, Spanish, and Italian with equal facility, and the rapidity with which she works is amazing, 1,500 words an hour being her average output. In the earlier days she was a famous horsewoman; now her leisure is devoted to her dogs, her gardening, and collecting old silver, curios, and bric-a-brac. One of her hobbies is a passion for the play of "Macbeth." She will travel a long distance to see it performed, and could sit it out night after night.

FROM CLERK TO MILLIONAIRE

Just over forty years ago the son of a Cologne banker went to England to seek employment as a clerk. It was Sir Ernest Cassel, the famous financier and philanthropist, who has retired from business. Securing a situation in the office of a Liverpool grain merchant, he stayed there for three years, and at the end of that time was only earning twenty-five shillings per week. Then he went to London, entered a financial house, and, before he was thirty, had established an international reputation as a shrewd, far-sighted and successful financier. Amongst his most important achievements are the inauguration of the Central London Railway, the raising of China's big loan after her defeat by Japan, and the negotiations for financing the Nile irrigation works. He was one of the first men to see the immense possibilities of Egypt.

NO DOCTORS' BILLS

In Japan a Doctor Never Asks a Poor Patient for Fees

A Japanese doctor never dreams of asking a poor patient for a fee. There is a proverb among the medical fraternity of Japan, "When the twin enemies, poverty and disease, invade a home, then he who takes aught from that home, even if it be given him, is a robber."

"Often," remarked a recent lecturer on life in Japan, "a doctor will not only give his time and medicine free to the sufferer, but he will also give him money to tide over his dire necessities. Every physician is his own dispenser, and there are very few apothecaries' shops in the empire.

"When even a rich man calls in the doctor he does not expect that he will receive a bill for medical services; in fact, no such thing as a doctor's bill is known in Japan, although nearly all modern practices are in vogue there. The strict honesty of the people does not make it necessary for the doctor to ask a fee. When he has finished his visits to the patient a present is made to him, just as much as the patient can afford. The doctor smiles, bows, thanks his patient, and the transaction is settled."

SHOULD STALLIONS BE WORKED?

Advantage of Developing Muscles in Chains or Cart

The question is sometimes asked: Should stallions be worked? The point is of more than academic interest, for it gives expression to a widely-held belief that it is to the advantage of a sire to be broken in chains and harness. The laws of our roads, at least of our towns, unlike Continental laws, do not permit of the working of stallions in crowded thoroughfares, but there is no law against the use of the stallion in the ordinary operations of the farm, writes an authority in an English exchange. Usually the stallion owner possesses not one, but several horses, consequently there is no necessity for working them, as the ordinary farm work is undertaken either by geldings or mares. Where the individual has a stallion which he keeps for use in the neighborhood the question deserves to be further considered as to whether or not the advantages outweigh the disadvantages. It is clearly an advantage to develop the muscle of a stallion either in chains or in cart. It is this additional advantage which renders his temper more docile and he is more amiable to handle.

Most breeders, however, look upon the subject from a different point of view. They contend that the exhaustive work of a season demands compensation in the form of a rest, and usually paddock life during the off season is the lot of the stud horse. Again, there are stud horses which breeders think are too valuable to take any risks with, consequently they put them where they can get outdoor exercise with the least danger to themselves and at the same time derive all the benefit accruing from fresh air. In the majority of cases, however, it would be an indubitable advantage to exercise the stallion at ordinary farm work and prior to the season to fit him again in appearance as well as in fact for his work.

THE GREAT SEAL

Is Not Used in England as Much as Formerly—Election Echoes

The busiest man in London on Dissolution Day—and probably the least flustered—was Sir Kenneth Augustus Muir-Mackenzie, Clerk to the Crown in Chancery, and Master of the Ceremonies at the General Election.

Sir Kenneth set the election machinery in motion by sending out the writs from the Crown Office. The documents were entrusted to messengers of the Great Seal, who employed taxi-cabs to take them to the General Post-Office, and to the various returning officers for the London divisions. The election being over, all the ballot papers are sent to the Clerk to the Crown, who will store away some thirty tons of them, representing the votes of the nation's entire electorate.

Sir Kenneth Muir-Mackenzie has been Permanent Secretary to the Lord Chancellor for over a quarter of a century, and, says M.A.P., no man knows more than he does about the intricacies of a General Election.

All functions relating to the Great Seal are under his control, and he signed his name on Dissolution Day to the writ for the General Election, to which the Great Seal is appended. Sir Kenneth does not employ the Great Seal quite so often nowadays as formerly, when it was responsible for the use of four hundredweight of wax every month. Only exceedingly important documents pass under it in the present, such as commissions, warrants, and appointments.

A curious feature in its use is that the cords with which it is attached to the documents vary in character according to their importance—silver thread cords for a General Election writ, and silk and woollen cords for parchments of lesser account.

The Great Seal is renewed at intervals, and Sir Kenneth hands on the old one to the Lord Chancellor, who regards it as a valued perquisite.

Every year, also, the Lord Chancellor is entitled to take the richly-embroidered purse in which the Seal is kept, and the wife of one Chancellor had the hangings on her bed made of these beautiful purses.

ENGLISH VOTERS AND CORRUPTION

According to M.A.P. There Was Much Bribery in 1910—It Speaks of "Hooligan" Electioneering

Canada and the United States are popularly believed in this country to have a monopoly of corrupt methods in electioneering, but, according to the great English paper M.A.P., Great Britain is also a victim of the bribe and "hooligan." When the last election of 1910 was over, M.A.P. published the following comments on this subject:

There is probably no time in the history of a nation when feeling runs so high as at a General Election. But while quite admitting that people are naturally liable to be so carried away by their emotions as to be entirely obsessed by the desire that their particular party may triumph, an emphatic protest should be made against many of the methods employed by usually honorable men when a political fight is on in their constituencies.

We do not refer to the candidates themselves, but to a certain class of the electors.

For instance, in spite of the Bribery and Corruption Act, a great deal of bribery still goes on in many constituencies. At a fairly recent election, complaints were made that some well-to-do electors bribed a number of working-men to vote for the candidate by offering them gifts of blankets; and "free beer" is still a trump card to play by unscrupulous people who have allowed party politics to get the better of them.

It is also a fairly common thing in some districts for people to exercise a petty tyranny over the tradesmen by hinting that they will take their custom elsewhere unless they, the tradesmen, vote to order.

Another objectionable practice, quite unworthy of a free country, is the wilful breaking up of political meetings. Surely, if a man has espoused a cause which he is confident is a good one, he should have sufficient confidence in that cause to refrain from preventing his opponents from criticizing it openly.

This country has always been noted for its right of free speech, and there is no more disgraceful policy than to make a rush upon a political meeting with the avowed idea of preventing a hearing.

Another highly objectionable practice is tearing down the posters of political opponents and altering the wording on placards to suit the politics of one's own side. Passing down a certain London street during the present Election, the writer saw a whole hoarding of bills torn almost beyond recognition, while in another instance disgusting remarks were written in chalk all over the pictures of one of the candidates.

Apparently, there is no limit to the lengths to which some electioneering hooligans will go. Quite recently a number of young men entered the committee-rooms of a well-known candidate and deliberately gave false names and addresses in order to obtain some canvassing cards. Having got what they wanted, they did not do any canvassing at all, but deliberately marked all the cards to make it appear that the electors were followers of their own side, and then returned the cards in the usual way to the agent.

Of course, this had the effect of seriously hindering that candidate's chances, for the agent was under the impression that all those electors were opposed to his man, and therefore, little or no effort was made to get them to go to the polls.

Most people will agree that political meanness could hardly go further than this.

It is surely a bad sign for England's greatness when these underhanded methods are resorted to at the time of a great political crisis. It is difficult to know how to prevent this kind of thing, but candidates might themselves do a great deal of good by publicly asking for fair-play for their opponents.

If all candidates for political honors were to do this, they would find that in most constituencies their followers would take their words to heart, and a great deal of unpleasantness would be avoided.

Another effective method of stopping electioneering hooliganism would be to have a better system of policing in the constituencies during Election times, and to impose heavier penalties than exist at present for bribery and corruption.

WEANING THE FOAL

Preparations Should Be Made Weeks Before Separation

Preparations for weaning the colt should be made many weeks before it is to be actually separated from its dam. One of the first things to do in the way of preparation is to halter-break the foal. This is not a difficult thing to do if it is undertaken early in its life, and the earlier it is begun the easier it will be. Another thing in this preparatory course is to teach the foal to eat grain. This can best be done by feeding grain to the dam in a shallow box placed on the ground or the floor where the foal can easily reach it. The little fellow will see its dam. One of the first things to do in her example and begin to nibble at it. Once it has got a taste, it will be on hand to get its share every time the dam is fed.

The best age to wean is five months, but if one has plenty of cow's milk, and it is desired to wean the youngster sooner, it may be weaned at four months or even earlier. In case the foal is weaned early and milk is fed it should be diluted with water and sweetened with a little sugar.

The Chocolates that are Different

There is no such thing as "Chocolates Made Fresh Every Hour". Any dealer, who claims to sell Chocolates an hour after they are made, either mis-states the facts or knows nothing about bon-bon or chocolate making.

All chocolate creams, when first made, are hard, and must be kept at least a fortnight before they become soft again.

Neilson's Chocolates are always matured for at least a month. This maturing brings the centers of the chocolates back to their original creamy state—and allows the delicious fruit centers to blend perfectly with the cream.

"Cherries in Maraschino, Chocolate Dipped" are as different as they are delicious. A plump French cherry in Maraschino, surrounded by a melting cream, enclosed in a globe of indescribably rich chocolate.

Neilson's Chocolates come in 33 different packages —containing something different and delightful for every "sweet tooth".

ANIMAL INTELLIGENCE

Sportsmen Contribute Many Instances Shewing Animal Reason

News dispatches told a story the other day of a swarm of bees that boarded an out-going steamer in England and took passage for Ireland. The bees apparently knew exactly what they wanted and took this intelligent means of accomplishing their purpose, embarking just as the vessel was about to sail and leaving in a very orderly and circumspect manner upon reaching their destination. A noted scientist has just published interesting data on a certain little microscopic worm that builds a dainty little home in which to live, plastering its walls inside and out in a most workmanlike manner to resist all sorts of weather, and providing barred windows to keep out intruders.

If insects possess these qualities of instinct, which seem almost of a human order, it is doubtless true that animals actually do think and act in accordance with their ideas, even to the extent of careful premeditation, adjusted with nicety of calculation, to the intelligent consideration of cause and effect.

Dr. Zell, a German naturalist, has collected many instances to prove that animals learn by experience, and thus become wiser than their uninstructed parents. Game animals of all kinds, he avers, have learned the range of modern rifles. Greyhounds quickly learn to let rabbits alone, and foxhounds pay no attention to either rabbits or hares. Killer whales and gulls follow whaling vessels just as vultures follow an army. Crows accompany the chamois hunter as soon as they have seen the result of his first successful shot, and rough-legged buzzards follow the sportsmen after winged game.

And so through the whole list, to which every sportsman could contribute remarkable instances, convincing testimony would easily prove that human beings do not possess a monopoly in intelligence, and in some cases the predominance of intellect would rest in favor of the lower order of creation.

A NEW PRODUCT

From Farm and Dairy.

A new frozen dairy product, has just been brought out by the Dairy Section of the experiment station at Ames. This product, which has been named lacto, is made of loppered whole or skim milk, with the addition of eggs, sugar, lemons and flavoring materials. Lacto has a more pleasing flavor than sherbets and ices, and contains considerably more nutriment. It contains as much protein as ice cream, less fat and more acid.

The milk to be used in the manufacture of lacto is prepared in a similar manner to the starter which is used for cream ripening. A commercial lactic acid culture is used. This is added to a pint of skimmed milk that has been pasteurised at a temperature of 85 degrees C. (185 F.) for 20 minutes, and after pasteurization cooled to from 20 to 22 degrees C. (68-71 F.). The lactic acid culture is thoroughly mixed with the milk and left at 20 degrees C. (68 F.) until the milk has coagulated. Then another bottle of skimmed milk is pasteurised and cooled in the same manner, but instead of the commercial culture, a part of the coagulated milk is added to insure the souring of the milk inside of 18 hours. This operation is repeated until the final batch of soured milk obtained has lost the undesirable flavor due to the substance in which the commercial culture was preserved. After this point has been reached, which requires from four to six days, the last sample of soured milk obtained is added to a larger amount of pasteurised skimmed milk. This is then treated the same as the former lots. In this way an amount of milk sufficient to work with is obtained.

BETTER THAN ICE CREAM

In an experiment in which 199 persons sampled lacto, 128 pronounced it very good, 37 good, six fair, and eight poor. Comparing it with common vanilla ice cream, 111 reported that they preferred lacto, nine considered it equal to ice cream, and 59 preferred the ice cream. Comparing lacto to sherbet, 123 preferred lacto, 30 preferred sherbet, and 26 considered lacto equal to sherbet.

Scientists have found that there are large numbers of putrefactive bacteria in the intestines, which are very injurious and may even shorten life. Metchnikoff, the famous scientist, claims that old age is the result of a slow poisoning caused by these bacteria. He recommends the drinking of sour milk, so as to replace the harmful putrefactive bacteria by lactic acid bacteria, which are harmless. The trouble with this remedy is that few people like sour milk. To provide these lactic acid bacteria in a more palatable form was one of the reasons for introducing lacto. The lactic acid bacteria are not killed by freezing, and if lacto is eaten frequently enough there is every reason to believe that these bacteria will replace the more harmful ones in the intestines. This will result in improving the health and prolonging life.

BOX PACKING CLASS

From Farm and Dairy.

"Say, have you seen our box packing class at work?" said Prof. J. W. Crow, of the Ontario Agricultural College, recently to an editor of Farm and Dairy who called on him at his office. "It is the greatest thing we have started here yet.' Just at that moment, the professor opened a letter from a prominent fruitman in the Hood River Valley, Oregon, informing him that the instructor who is carrying on the classes in apple packing at the College is one of the best box packers in the Hood River Valley, which is noted all over the world for its high class box packed apples.

Mr. Bradley, of Georgetown, a fruit grower who is taking in the course in box packing, at this juncture remarked: "I have gained information about box packing that will be worth many dollars to me in years to come. The whole trend of apple packing, particularly of fancy and No. 1 grades of fruit is in the direction of the box package. It has to come, and I want to be in on the ground floor. I should say that this school in box packing is one of the best things that ever happened."

Other fruit men attending the course, in conversation with our representative, expressed themselves similarly in appreciation of the practical instruction they were getting in box packing. Classes similar to this one are conducted by the British Columbia Government in all of their fruit sections, and they have had not a little to do with the perfection which British Columbia growers have obtained in the art of box packing. Classes for instruction in box packing held in all the leading fruit centres of Ontario would be of incalculable value to Ontario apple growers. The extension of this work should be encouraged. We in Ontario have fruit of first quality. With skill in packing gained by expert instruction and some practice we will be able to market not only as good fruit as our western competitors, but fruit packed just as attractively.

DRINKS FOR HIS NERVES

You Who Never Touch Liquor Cannot Understand a Strange Nervousness in Some People Which Nothing Else Will Allay.

Nine-tenths of all those who drink liquor would gladly stop if their nerves would allow them to. Very few men like liquor, and yet fewer drink it because they are naturally vicious.

There is a kind of nervousness that no sedative in the world will have the least effect upon—nothing will allay it but alcohol. That is why men keep right on drinking when they know just as well as you do that it is ruining them mentally, physically and financially. They simply CAN'T STOP.

The condition of nervousness is due to accumulated alcoholic poison in their systems. Before they can or will stop drinking liquor every trace of this poison must be driven out. The Gatlin treatment is the only one in the world that will eliminate this poison; other methods of treatment will not because EFFECTS are treated instead of CAUSE. The Gatlin does away with the CAUSE, and with it go craving, desire, nervousness and all other effects of alcoholic poisoning. But THREE DAYS' TIME is required to cure any case by either Institute or Home Treatment.

Come to the Gatlin Institute for three days and you will return home with no more desire for liquor than you had the day you took your first drink.

You will be treated under a legally-executed contract to cure in three days or the full fee paid shall be refunded on leaving the institute.

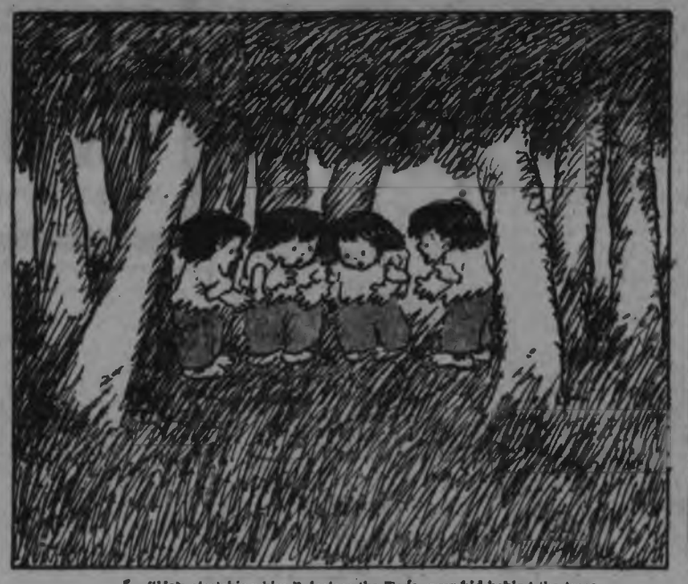
THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS

1—This horrid Rubberbandit thinks that he will rob some one,
To pounce upon some traveller he thinks is lots of fun.

2—Go back, go back! you Tiny Tads; oh, do not come so near!
There's danger lurking in the woods, and bloodshed, too, I fear.

3—"Halt!" cries the Rubberbandit. "Up with your hands!" cries he
As toward the Tiny Tads he steps from out behind a tree.

4—A Cowboyster is passing by, he sees the dastard deed.
"Who harms the Tiny Tads," says he, "had better have a head!"



5—"He's stretching him," declare the Tads, now hid behind the trees.
"He's hooked his neck around a stump, he's pulling on his knees."

6—Snap! goes the Rubberbandit, and the Tinies laugh, ho-ho!
"It elastickles us," they say, "to see that rascal go."

JACK and JILL in FAIRYLAND

Here are Jacky and Jill so fly
In a new sort of airship right up in the sky.

1.—You see they'd come across the basket and broom of the old woman who'd swept the cobwebs out of the sky, and off they went.

2.—But when the old lady missed her broom and basket she was furious. She rushed to old Mother Goose's goose right away.
"Why sure, I'll help you out," said the goose.
"Jump right on my back and I'll sure cut loose,
"I'll catch 'em, ha! ha!
"Before they get to the nearest star!"

3.—Well, off went the goose with the old cobweb lady on his back. Whee! what a pace they went! They almost caught up with Jack and Jill before they'd gone a million miles or so.

4.—And Jack and Jill were really getting desperate, when what do you suppose happened? The old lady caught sight of the man in the moon and it was a case of love at first sight.

5.—For, you see, he was so handsome and she was the first lady that the man in the moon had ever seen.

So they started to spoon
On the edge of the moon

6.—And that was the reason that Jill and Jack
In high delight to the earth came back
And didn't they just chuckle, for at last they'd played a prank
And really got away without a great big spank.

The thing to consider in purchasing a sound-reproducing instrument is the fidelity with which it reproduces the human voice in songs, or speeches and the musical notes of instruments. Until you have heard the

Edison Phonograph

you cannot appreciate how far Mr. Edison has carried his invention in this respect.

Every note of music and every syllable of a speech is not only clear and distinct, but also a perfect reproduction of the singer, band, orchestra or speaker who made the original Record.

There are Edison dealers everywhere. Go to the nearest and hear the Edison Phonograph play both Edison Standard and Edison Amberol Records. Get complete catalogs from your dealer or from us.

"The Lottery Man"

BY RIDA JOHNSON-YOUNG

As a matter of fact, the two young people their heads very close together, were very busy making the punch's various ingredients in an ancient berry bowl in the tiny cubby hole that served as the Wright's culinary department.

"What a jolly little kitchen this is," Helene was saying, "or is it a kitchenette?"

"It's a kitchen nit," answered Jack. "Thank you for not laughing," he added. "I can see now that the joke wasn't really worth a hand."

"Do you know, Mr. Wright," said Helen, "ever since I came to live with Aunt Fannie, six weeks ago, Foxey has been promising to bring me here. He has told me so much about you both."

"He has told me all about you, too," chimed in Jack.

"He has?" queried the girl with sudden curiosity. "What?"

"Oh, that you are so rich you have financial indigestion, that you are an orphan, and that your various poorer relatives have always been scrapping among themselves as to which of them you should live with. That there are a regiment of men who are always bursing about you. Those are the main things Foxey told me. I've always wanted to meet you."

"Why?" she asked, perversely.

"Because you're so rich."

"Oh!"

"Yes," he went on, ignoring her exclamation of pained surprise, "I always wanted to meet you to tell you how sorry I am for you."

"Sorry? I don't understand. I have everything I—"

"You have nothing. Except what money can buy; you girls who have so much money are hedged in by walls of gold that shut you off from all the real things of life. You know the price of everything—and the value of nothing. Do you wonder I am sorry for you?"

"No man ever talked that way to me before," she faltered.

"I'm glad I'm making such a sit. I like you."

She swept him a mocking courtesy. "Thank you, kind sir!" she laughed.

"Now, that's meant for sarcasm, isn't it?" he asked. "But I'm in earnest. I never met a girl just like you. And I've been all over the world. You're the first woman who seems to compare favourably with—"

"With whom?" she asked, with reluctant curiosity.

"With my mother," he answered simply.

The mocking retort died on her lips. "I think I can appreciate that," said she, "and I thank you."

"Not that I think you have all mother's good points," he blundered happily on; "but, then, mother has improved a whole lot since I took her in charge. I think you'd do the same, if only—"

"The punch is all ready," she interrupted, suddenly. "Shall we take it in? I'm glad you think I have—possibilities."

"Oh, I do. Lots of them. Now, if some one would only take you in hand—a large, firm, steady hand — like mine, for instance—and—"

"Oh, you think that, do you?" she scoffed, half angry, half amused.

"Yes I do," he returned with all seriousness. "Of course I can't be certain, but if I were to undertake to—"

"You are the rudest—and the oddest man I ever met?" she broke in. "If you are joking, it is in very bad taste, I think. Perhaps, though, you only don't know any better."

"Perhaps," he agreed, vaguely. "And I'm the rudest, oddest man you ever met? I—I begin to think you are—the—one—girl—I ever met. You see I—"

A loud scream from the next room broke in upon his foundering speech. Catching up the punch bowl, Jack hurried, at Helen's heels, in the direction of the sound.

CHAPTER III.

A Queen's Proposal.

Hurrying into the little living room, they found Mrs. Peyton lying back in a chair that was sorely taxed by her generous weight. Lizzie and Mrs. Wright were fanning her.

"Thank you," panted Mrs. Peyton, feebly. "It is a sudden attack of faintness, such as I sometimes have after a long course of dieting. At the dance to-night I ate nothing—absolutely nothing—except two or three plates of lobster Newberg and some Nesselrode pudding. Yet I feel as if I were suffocating. If only I could loosen this girdle I might be better."

The combined efforts of the four others sufficed to unfasten the cruelly tight girdle clasp. Mrs. Peyton drew a long breath of utter relief.

"Let me help you into my room, suggested Mrs. Wright. "If you will lie down for a few moments I'm sure you'll feel much better."

"And just as the punch was made, too!" sighed Mrs. Peyton, regretfully "Come, Lizzie."

As Mrs. Wright helped her guest from the room, Lizzie lingered a moment, eyeing the punch longingly.

"Wait," suggested Jack, filling a glass. "Have one on the house."

Lizzie glanced furtively toward the doorway through which Mrs. Peyton and the two other women had just vanished. Then she swallowed the steaming glassful of punch at a gulp, gasped once or twice and scurried off toward the door.

"Have another," urged Jack. "Don't be afraid. It won't do you any good."

He filled the glass again, Lizzie undecided, held out her hand for it. Then, from the next room came the petulant call:

"Lizzie!"

The companion sighed loudly, turned her back upon temptation and followed the voice of duty. Jack sank into a chair by the fire. And the light in his eyes was not altogether a reflection from the blazing hearth.

"The one girl!" he muttered to himself, "and—"

A swish of skirts roused him. Helene Heyer had come back into the room.

"Is your aunt very ill?" he asked getting to his feet. "Shall I telephone for a doctor, or—"

"She'll be all right in a minute or two," the girl assured him.

"Then it's nothing serious?"

"No. Only a case of trying to squeeze a thirty-inch waist into a twenty-four inch—'

"I see. Do you know you've got a sense of humour? Some girls haven't. I congratulate you.' '

"Is that meant for a compliment? Because if it is—"

"Sure, it is. You make an awful hit with me. Honest, you do. I thought maybe you'd like to know."

"Thank you so much!" answered the girl, in exaggerated gratitude.

"More sarcasm, eh? I thought it would please you."

"Oh, it does. I feel I'm unworthy of—'

"Please stop guying me," he begged. "I suppose you have so many men trailing around after you that my being knocked all in a heap doesn't cut any ice at all. Another drawback to having too much money."

"I've never been tought to think of it that way."

"There seems to have been a whole lot of things you've never been taught, I'm afraid. But it's never too late to learn. And with me for a teacher—"

"Sense Taught in Six Lessons, I suppose?"

"No," he contradicted. " Ithink I'd like to make a life-job of it. But after all, perhaps it is too late for you to learn. How can you?'

"Why not?"

"Because you'll marry some empty-headed, bone-brained mut with as many barrels of money as you've already got. And then you'll never learn."

"It's a cheerful prophecy you're laying out for me."

"Yes, isn't it? About as cheery as a funeral on a rainy day in Philadelphia. But I'm afraid it's a true prophecy, for all that."

"And I know it isn't."

"You can't tell,' he argued gloomily.

"I think I can.'

"But how?"

"For this reason; Shall I tell you a great secret?"

"I'm the original Human Question Mark."

"Well, then, I've never had a proposal in all my life."

"I asked you," objected Jack, with an air of injured dignity; "please not to guy me.'

"I'm not. It's the solemn, sad truth. I've been 'out' for a whole season. And in all that time I've never had one single, solitary proposal."

"Maybe the men arent marrying this season," hazarded Jack. "But of course you're making fun of me."

"No; I'm not. And it isn't a closed season for proposals. But not one has come our way."

"Where have you been living? On a desert island?"

"Can such things be!" gasped Jack, with dramatic fervor.

"They can," she replied. "And they are.'

"But,' he protested, "Foxey tells me that when you come into a ball-room she men make a football rush for you."

"They ask for dances,' 'answered Helene, demurely, "not for my hand. I've been lucky enough to have plenty of attention in a way. But not a man has ever asked me to marry him. What do you think of that?'

"I'm not trying to think. It is taking up all my energies to believe."

"My two best girl friends are both engaged," she went on, "and they didn't come out till after I did. What do you suppose can be the matter with me, Mr. Wright?"

"I'm one of the very best of our little guessers," he answered. "But, what's the answer?'

"Thats what I want to know? Do you suppose—?"

"No, I don't. And I'm not going to get snubbed again for flattering you. But—perhaps—"

"Perhaps what?" she insisted.

"Perhaps you treat them as you treat me. Perhaps you freeze them up before they get a chance to—"

She laughed. He retorted in triumph.

"That's it. That's what I was trying to say. You laugh ats them. A laugh has the same effect on love-making that a lost collar button has on an anti-profanity resolution. You guy them. And then—"

"I wonder if you're right," she mused. "Now that I think of it—once or twice—men have seemed to be on the point of—of making love to me. And—and somehow I couldn't let them do it."

"On the point of making love to you?" growled Jack. "The nerve of them! They dared to—"

"I suppose," remarked Helene, in in that sort of thing they—they somehow don't feel well enough acquainted to ask one to marry them. Do you think that can be the reason?"

"You're all right!" he laughed, "Not well enough asquainted to—"

"I didn't mean that for a joke," she rebuked.

"Do you mean you actually feel aggrieved because you have never had a proposal?" he queried.

"Well," she hesitated. "It's an experience, every girl seems entitled to. I—"

"And you actually enjoy having some poor hopeless, luckless chap propose to you?"

"Why, yes — as an experience—I think I should," she said, puzzled at the odd question.

"Very well!" decided Jack, drawing a long breath. "Here goes! Get ready!"

He drew himself to his full height, struck an attitude, took the tiny hand kerchief from her belt and spread it carefully on the floor at her feet. Then, carefully kneeling on the little square of lace and cambric, he placed one hand on his heart and declaimed:

"Miss Heyer, I hereby propose! Will you marry me?"

Despite his extravagant words and jesting tone, there was an undercurrent in his mocking voice and a glint of something behind the laughter in his eyes that thrilled the girl unaccountably. She came hastily to her feet.

"Mr. Wright," she began, battling angrily aginst the absurd emotion that threatened to master her, "I don't—"

No Drinking Man Need Despair

The Neal Cure—Greatest of all Modern Discoveries—Offers a Means of Escape from the Curse of Drink. A Cure of the Drink Habit is Guaranteed in Three Days, no matter whether the Patient is a Hard and Constant Drinker, Social Tippler or goes on Occasional Sprees

MANY SUCCESSFUL CURES IN TORONTO

There was wandering in the streets of Toronto lately, a homeless man, who at one time held a splendid position, but drink was his downfall. To-day his wife, a cultured woman, works out by the day endeavoring to support herself and little family. Think of it, you wives and mothers, who have homes of comfort and all that makes life worth living, what it would be to you to be deprived of these and forced to face the wash tub for an existence, as this poor wife has to do to-day?

But this home which was made a hell on earth through strong drink—as every drunkard's is—may be made into a heaven upon earth, as many have been made, as a result of the Neal Treatment. Three days only—the wonder of it—to effect a cure and make the victim of strong drink a new man physically, morally and mentally.

We undertake to guarantee to effect a cure of the Drink Habit in Three Days, no matter whether the patient is a hard and constant drinker, social tippler or goes on occasional sprees. Are you interested in a poor fellow going down, down, through the curse of drink; then bring your influence to bear on him and bring him to the Neal Institute for treatment, drunk or sober, and we will undertake to remove the awful appetite for strong drink and deliver him to you a new man.

Here is an opportunity for REFORMATION SOCIETIES for INEBRIATES or any institution for the reformation of the drunkard, to test our ability to change the hard drinker into a new man physically and mentally in THREE DAYS' treatment.

We invite these Societies or any institution interested in the poor drunkard and the problem of dealing with him to send us for treatment any victim of the drink habit, it makes no difference how much enslaved, and we guarantee to effect a cure in each and every case. Can you spend your money to better advantage or in a way that will bring in greater returns than in redeeming these victims of strong drink and giving back to their families kind fathers, brothers, husbands and to the country most desirable citizens?

O what a world of vile, ill-favor'd faults
Looks handsome in three hundred pounds a year.
—Merry Wives of Windsor, Act III., Sc. .

Money There is nothing that has been so much reviled, and nothing that is so much sought after. There are more shrines to Plutus than to Christ. The love of money has been described as the root of all evil. This judgment, pronounced two thousand years ago, has not lessened the energy of those who search after wealth. It is not unnatural that such high value should be set on money. Power is pleasant; it makes kings of ordinary men. There is nothing that so readily gives power to mortals as wealth.

Money is an excellent servant, but a bad master. The love of it becomes an o'ermastering passion. To gain it many men have sold themselves body and soul. Fortune-hunters are everywhere, and a father, as in the "Merry Wives of Windsor" has been known to sell his daughter to a witless creature like Slender, whose three hundred pounds a year made him look handsome in his eyes. Eastern potentates are condemned on account of their proneness to purchase beautiful women for their harems, but they are not much worse than Americans or Europeans who get out deliberately to purchase themselves wives by means of their wealth. The Eastern slave has no voice in the matter; her only sin may have been that she was beautiful. Enemies may have seized her and sold her into bondage or parents in their greed may have disposed of her. The semi-barbarous Circassian father in such an act is no more ignoble than the cultured American or European who weds his daughter to moneybags. The refined girl, who deliberately mates herself to some wrinkled old dotard or illiterate boor for wealth and position, is in many instances not as high a type as the slave who has been forced into a harem.

It is surprising what a touchstone money is. It causes suitors to "see Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt," and this admiration continues just so long as the money lasts. Shakespeare has many references to the perverting power of gold. One of his most striking is in "Romeo and Juliet," where he speaks of it as "saint-seducing." Men who would otherwise have lived holy lives have been caught by the glitter of money and seduced from righteousness. Judas was no doubt a man of high moral character save for the one evil trait, the love of money. His tragic death would seem to indicate that it was "saint-seducing gold," and not innate depravity which caused him to betray the Master. For a moment earth and its pleasures seemed fairer to poor Judas than eternity.

Money is a maker of traitors. There is no war in which the authorities have not to be watchful lest their plans be sold to the enemy. Courageous men of noble impulses have yielded to the tempter. The name most abhorred on the American continent is that of Benedict Arnold, who Judas-like attempted to sell the cause to which he was attached for gold.

One of the most disgusting sights in life is when

"The learned pate ducks to the golden fool."

Yet it is a frequent one. In church and state men who have nothing but money to recommend them are raised to high positions. Among the representatives of the people in the nation are many who are chosen solely on account of their wealth. The power their money has purchased them, for the time being gives a false lustre to their character, and, though they may have many vile, ill-favor'd faults, in their millions they seem attractive.

Through the false value put upon money earth is filled with crime and unhappiness. It is the pomp and display of the wealthy that ordinarily makes the thief. Honour and virtue are sold by those who are made ignoble by the deceptive promises of gold. Happy families have been broken and scattered by the greed for treasure which cannot satisfy. Shakespeare has a wealth of phraseology condemnatory of the love of money. In "Timon of Athens" he makes Timon discourse at length on its depraving nature

"Thus much of this will make black white; foul, fair;
Wrong, right; base, noble; old, young coward, valiant.
. . . . . This yellow slave
Will knit and break religion; bless the accursed;
Make the boar leprosy adored; place thieves
And give them title, knee and approbation,
With senators on the bench."

All this is true where the love of money becomes a passion and enslaves the will. However, money is man's best servant. It is the nurse of old age; a medicine and a staff in time of sickness or weakness. The love of it is undoubtedly the root of much evil, but money itself has produced a great deal that makes life worth living. Industry, learning and the state would all be in a very primitive condition were it not for accumulated wealth. It is earth's most useful servant, but should be kept in its place. Set it up as a god and it becomes a Juggernaut crushing its victims beneath its car.

PEOPLE'S CHIMES WILL BE FINEST IN CANADA

WORK OF THE INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS COMMISSION WAS SPLENDIDLY EXPLAINED

Sir George Gibbons the Chairman of the Canadian Section Delivers a Most Interesting and Instructive Address to the Canadian Club

TREAT WAS APPRECIATED

The members of the Peterborough Canadian Club had the privilege last night at their dinner at the Hotel National, of hearing a lucid, interesting and convincing explanation of the formation and work of the International Waterways Commission, from no less an authority upon the subject than Sir Geo. C. Gibbons, of London, Ont., the chairman of the Canadian Section of the Commission. The event was one of the most interesting and enjoyable that the Canadian Club has had the opportunity of attending and the remarks of the distinguished speaker were followed with a flattering attention. He is a bright, forcible speaker, whose sharp, clean-cut, logical sentences bring with them conviction and a vast amount of little known and important information was imparted.

There was a large attendance of members of the Club.

The speaker, in expressing his appreciation of the honour of being invited to address the Canadian Club of Peterborough, remarked that he had been the first president of the Canadian Club in his home city of London, and he firmly believed that the organizations were doing an especially good work, as they taught toleration and the desirability of hearing the views of other people, even if they were not shared in by the hearers.

He, himself, felt that he would be lacking in courage if he did not tell his audience all he thought about the subject he proposed to discuss. He was not going to say anything offensive or partizan, but only to say what he felt it his duty to say as a Canadian, something that would be of service to the Canadian Club and to their common country.

The subject of "Our International Relations" upon which he was to speak, was a very broad one, and perhaps, peculiar. Strictly speaking, Canada was not a nation, and therefore, could not have international relations, but to all intents and purposes, she was a nation. Canada had all the attributes of a nation. She had had responsible government for many years, made and administered her own laws, arranged her tariff as freely against the Mother Country as against any other, and maintained her own militia. She had evolved into a state of what was practically independence. She made her own commercial treaties and even negotiated with Japan. The International Water Commission was engaged in the work of delineating on new maps the boundaries through the lake system as a similar commission was doing on land. Permanent boundaries were being established without any interference from the Mother Country, and yet Canada was not growing away from the Mother Country, but towards her, on account of this independence. Britons were not made more loyal by being coerced but by being given more liberty. Britain had always given liberty to her people, and that was why she had been so successful as an empire. Germany, on the other hand was not a success as a colony builder. Her people did not go to the German colonies. They had had enough of military government and sought rather to get beneath the British flag.

Canada and Her Neighbour.

Canada had grown, in a sense, into nationhood, and had, therefore, to deal with international relationships. She was peculiarly situated, with only one neighbour, the United States, on the south, and in Alaska. There had been difficulties in the east over the fish, and in the west, about the seals, and the Alaskan boundary. There were three thousand miles of a boundary line between the two countries. The speaker had had had the honour to be a member of the International Commission, and because of the information he had been forced to acquire as chairman of the Canadian section of that commission, and as the representative of the Dominion Government in the negotiations on the treaty now in force, at Washington, he had had to deal with the relationships of these people.

The Commission was composed of three Americans and three Canadians. It was in the interests of the Mother Country that Canadians should deal with Canadian affairs. Nobody but Canadians could, or can, deal successfully with their American confreres. The two peoples understood each other. Self respect was an essential in carrying on such negotiations, and in any matter of dealing with the United States in

THE PEOPLE'S CHIMES TO HAVE THIRTEEN BELLS

To the Editor—

Sir,—On behalf of the Chimes committee, we are privileged to make certain announcements which we feel sure will be interesting to our citizens generally.

After placing the order for eleven Bells, we corresponded with the chime-masters of some of the largest cities in the United States with a view to finding out whether by any chance there was any deficiency in our chimes which it would be possible to remedy now while under construction. We were advised that for really effective work, and to secure a large range of tunes, two more bells were highly desirable. While considering which of these was more important to attempt, a generous citizen unexpectedly gave the larger of these two as a memorial bell, thus earning the gratitude of all citizens. We consulted with the three representative musical leaders of the city and with prominent citizens as far as time would allow. As the remaning bell required an extra expenditure of only some $200, it was unanimously determined that we were not only justified, but actually called upon, in the public interest, to risk this outlay and complete the chimes. This action will ,we feel confident, be welcomed by Peterborough people generally.

The situation now is as follows: Peterborough is to have installed next June, a magnificent chime of 13 heavy bells, the largest weighing 3,000 lbs. and the total weight being 15,000. This will be by far the largest and most complete set of chimes in the whole of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and will be unique not only for its size, but also for the multitude of subscriptions of all classes and Creeds, and from the fact that by voluntary resolution of St. John's Vestry it will be operated as a public trust, and the full benefits shared in by all citizens.

The name "People's Chimes," first suggested by the Peterborough Examiner, has been stamped upon the largest bell, and we may confidently expect that it will prove a bond of union between all citizens, as well as bringing happiness and cheer to all; in fact it will be a public instrument for the pleasure of the whole body of the people. The chimes should further exercise a strong influence in developing a healthy national and religious sentiment in the city. The lines of public use have not yet been fully worked out, and this can only be gradually done with the help and suggestions of all interested persons.

Believing that the magnitude andimportance of this work will commend it to all.

Yours truly,
J. C. DAVIDSON,
Chairman.
G. O. WAINWRIGHT,
Treasurer.

Peterborough, 11th Feb., 1911.

Rev. Canon Davidson,
Chairman Chimes Committee,

Dear Sir,—Your enquiry as to the advisability of adding an E. bell to complete the Peterborough, chimes, permits of only one answer and that decidedly in the affirmative. Such a well, weighing about 400 pounds, would be of great value in chiming, as well as giving greater scope for patriotic airs and hymn tunes. In short, if any bells above the octave were added the higher E becomes an essential, and as we understand that C sharp and D are decided upon, the addition of upper E will make the Peterborough chime, the finest in Ontario, if not in Canada.

Yours respectively,
JOHN CRANE,
RICH. J. DEVEY,
R. GLIDDON.

NORTH MONAGHAN MAN WAS HEAVILY FINED

On a Charge of Holding Up Dr. Cameron on Aylmer Street ---Defendant Made the Plea That He Was Intoxicated, But This Was Held to be No Excuse---Story of Fight.

Wm. Dunlop, of North Monaghan, was this morning fined $14.15 in the police court for a rather serious offence. He pleaded guilty to the charge of holding up Dr. Cameron on Aylmer street on Monday evening last. He pleaded that he was drunk and did not know what he was doing, but this did not excuse him. Mr. Castle, who resided near the C. G. E. works got into the cutter with Dr. Cameron down at the Aylmer street crossing of the C. P. R. and when they got up as far as King street two men ran out and one grabbed the horse by the head, and pulled it to one side. The prisoner pleaded guilty of doing this. Mr. Castle jumped out of the cutter, when they were stopped and proceeded to settle the two culprits. "The prisoner came up to me and said, 'I'll give you all you want,' and I told him to come on," said Mr. Castle. "He came on and I gave him one and knocked him down, then the other fellow came up and said "I'll put it to you.' I told him to put it up to me, but before he could do anything I gave him one and knocked him down." During the conflict the doctor got hit in the eye with an onion, and a very sore eye resulted. Dunlop stated that he was a son of Darcy Dunlop. His companion in the scrape, has not yet been rounded up.

Used Aeroplane To Make A Reconnaisance

EL PASO, TEX., FEB. 11. — The honour of the first aeroplane reconnaisance in real warfare belongs to Chas. K. Hamiltoon, the aviator, who though warned that the Mexican government troops might use big guns on him, sailed quickly over the scene of the battles around Juarez last evening making observations which he was not permitted by the United States officers to divulge for fear of international complications. Hamilton suffered no interference from the combatants on either side, although at times he dropped within a few feet of their long range guns.

MAN WAS BURNED

Sofa and Curtains in Residence of John Heean Caught Fire From a Match or Spark From Pipe

MR. HEEAN INJURED

The fire department was called out twice yesterday. The first call came in by telephone at 5 p.m., to a chimney fire at 14 Brock street, the home of Mr. W. Boyd. The house is owned by Mrs. Hollis, East City. There was no insurance.

The second call came in by telephone also from 114 London street, at 7 p.m., the home of Mr. John Heean. Mr. Heean had been enjoying his after dinner smoke and in some awy a spark from a match or pipe set fire to the lace curtains and the sofa on which Mr. Heean was lying. The damage to building and contents will not exceed $25. The fire was easily extinguished, but Mr. Heean is suffering intense pain from the effects of burns received while trying to put out the fire. Th exact extent of the injuries could not be ascertained up to a late hour.

THE INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION SELECTS ITS COMMITTEES AT A VERY BUSY SESSION

Directors Deal With Many Matters---Not Satisfied With the Services of the Band at the Horse Show---Question of Permanent Grounds Was Under Discussion.

A meeting of the Industrial Exhibition Managing Committee was held last night in the Council Chamber. President Leary occupied the chair. Secretary F. J. A. Hall opened the meeting by the reading of the minutes of the last meeting, the same being formally passed upon and adopted.

A communication was read from J. Lockie Wilson, in which he expressed his willingness to come to Peterborough in the interests of the farming community. His views were also in accordance with those of the Industrial Exhibition officials regarding the owning of their own Fair Grounds property.

A letter was also received from a party offering the Society a block of thirty acres of land for Exhibition purposes. The property was considered to be too far away for the purpose intended, so no action was taken in the matter.

The expenses in connection with the horse show recently held in Peterborough, was the next subject taken up. There was a bill of $48 for sundry expenses incurred in getting the building into shape for the show, and for the Band. The Band's engagement was governed by an agreement whereby they were to receive two-thirds of a collection to be taken up for their benefit the night of the Show in consideration of which they were to muster up a full Band and give their services during the course of the show.

President Leary contended that as the Band had failed to live up to the agreement, they having failed to muster a full band and also had left the building before the last three classes of horses were judged, they were not entitled to any consideration whatever. A lively discussion took place, during which Mr. J. J. Turner expressed his approval of letting the matter stand until the Band saw fit to present their bill. Mr. Brown thought that the failure of the Band to do business on business principles was no reason they (the committee) should do the same. He also moved that the two-thirds of the collection, which was about $41, be paid over to the Band, making their share about $27, and that the Secretary be instructed to write to the Band and explain matters more fully.

Accounts covering the expenses of sending two delegates to the Fairs' Association convention were next presented. The delegates were Mr. J. J. Turner and Mr. Collins.

Dr. King moved that the accounts be received and paid.—Carried.

In the Province of Ontario, during the year 1910, there were 340 Fall Fairs. A few years ago the call for the services of department judges were few. Peterborough had two last year, and expected to have five this year, out of the 290 Judges sent out by the Department last year, only nine complaints had been recorded.

ANNUAL CONCERT OF ST. ANDREW'S SUNDAY SCHOOL

Most Enjoyable Event was a Great Success---Programme was Featured by an Exhibition of Camp Life by the Boy Scouts---The Attendance was Large.

The annual entertainment of the St. Andrew's Sunday school was held last night in the school room. The occasion was featured by a large attendance. The programme was of a choice nature, with the items all of a very high order as follows:

Instrumental Duet—Mrs. G. Stephens and Miss Grant.

Chorus—Mrs. Lang's class.

Song—Miss B. Hill.

Dolls chorus by a number of little girls.

Butterfly drill by the following girls: Jessie Rollins, Alice McFarlane, Olive Kennedy, Eva Innis, Grace Cox ,May Reid, Bessie Matners and Helen Brodie.

Song—"Annie Laurie" by Miss A. Robinson. This was an exceptionally well given item and drew forth well earned applause and an encore from the enthusiastic audience. The encore was "Ye Banks and Braes," which was also much appreciated.

Swing song—A chorus by a number of ladies.

Instrumental duet—By the Misses Kennedy.

Chorus—"Johnnie Smoker" by the following boys: Gerald McClelland, Gordon and Stewart Henry, Gordon Hill, J. Gillespie, Harold Devey, E. Wegg, Harry Gillespie.

Song of Nursery Days by the following: Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy, child impersonations by Mr. Kennedy.

Rainbow drill by the following little girls: May Henry, Jessie Rollins, Grace Stephens, Mary Atkinson, Myra Evans, Olive Wade, Rose and Annie Cowan, Eva Tremain, Annie Spenceley, Lizzie Thompson, May Shearer, Birdie Henderson, Annie Wingate, Hazel Eaton, Stella Ray, Stella Young, Myrtle Kennedy.

Midsummer Fairies, by a number of little girls.

The above numbers were all well presented, and much credit is due those who took part, also those who had the training of the children in the different drills. Each number was appreciated to a degree of satisfaction which was displayed in no uncertain manner.

The feature of the evening was a camping scene and manoutevre by the Boy Scouts.

The item contributed by the Scouts was exceedingly well acted. They were trained by Miss Currey, assisted by Mr. W. J. Miller, who acted

THE PEOPLE'S CHIMES.

The announcement made on the seventh page of this issue of the Examiner is significant in that it practically gives completion to a splendid public enterprise, which represents the possession by the city of Peterborough of the largest and best chime of bells in the Dominion. It is more significant in another and more appealing sense. While the bells represent musical harmony and coordination of a variety of tones, so the bells themselves represent something far more important — harmony of sentiment and harmony of action, illustrative of the highest type of citizenship. It represents the cooperation of citizens of all creeds, which though diverse in their details of manifestation, can and do harmonize with each other and with the dominant note of one common Christianity. This is a condition much needed at a time when influences are at work that tend to create dissonance and even discord among our citizenship, subversion of the harmonious co-dwelling and civic cooperation essential to the highest development of citizenship relations. The People's Chimes in the process of their acquirement have proved themselves an effectiveagency of consolidation of our citizenship, which will long operate. For years and generations their dignified resonance, sweetly and strongly voicing devotion and praise and patriotic sentiment will be eloquent in extolling and recalling the beauty of brethren dwelling together in unity.

SPELLING "REFORM."

Sir Allen Aylesworth in the House of Commonse the other day, added to his successful championship of British and Canadian interests in the matter of fisheries, what is to be hoped will prove successful championship of British and Canadian interests in the matter of spelling. The subject came up in connection with the consideration of the proper spelling of Canada's great inland sea—whether it should be Hudson Bay or Hudson's Bay, which latter Sir Allen defended as the English method, and hence sanctioned by the highest authority, usage. Incidentally he stood out strongly for the orthodox spelling of honour, favour, labour, etc. Sir Allen was not only patriotically sound but orthodox in demanding "the good old English method" of spelling rather than the corrupted form of spelling, which, like forms of corruption in mode of speech, in morals and in principles of honour and ideals, we have too largely adopted in this country from our nearest neigbours, to the exclusion of many good things of which they have given example.

Our neighbours across the line began by "reforming" the principles of constitutional government which originated in, and found their highest expression in, Great Britain, and he will be a bold man who will say that "reform" was an improvement and not a distinct degeneration from the noblest form of constitutional and representative government to a democratic autocracy, which makes for four years, and, in effect, continuously, the executive of our neighbours as autocratic in the matter of power to give effect to self-will independently of the popular will, as that possessed by the Czar of Russia. In the matter of constitutional and representative government Canada has adopted in principle the British method, with unessential modifications, adapted to the differing local and other conditions.

In the matter of form of government and national policy Canada has nobly refrained from following the "reform" of the United States; but in the matter of corruption of spelling and forms of speech has far too liberally adopted the divergencies originating in and adopted by the United States. In form of government and in political institutions Canada has kept intact the British method, adogical impulsion of retaining unimpaired, the bond of British and Imperial connection.

In the matter of spelling and forms of speech, and consequently in sentiments, ideals, laxity of moral perception, in freedom, not to say looseness, of social habits and individual standards of conduct, we have too largely abandoned the British method and adopted the corrupting innovations of some of our neighbours.

What is the plea urged, for the corruption of our spelling? Laziness; that and nothing more. We are told that we must violate precedent, outrage the usage made venerable by long employment of the greatest men of literature, the undisputed authority and standard of proper English spelling and modes of speech, to save time by writing "honour" without the "u"—the birth certificate, the trunk of its etynological genealogical tree. If that is to be accepted as a reason to be acted upon in regard to the spelling of other words in the English language — if it were put into practice, in all ways, which could be done as logically in one case as another, our noble English language, the language of the English Bible, of Shakespere and all the great genii of English literature would speedily be reduced to a jargon, a patois, a bedraggled dialect, fit only for the use of savages.

The English language has undergone modifications in forms of spelling and modes of application and employment and will undergo similar changes hereafter. But the change must be legitimately brought about, as it has been in the past. Usage and custom must be the rule of change and modification. When the recognized authorities in the use of pure English, give precedent for change then there is warrant for its popular adoption. But if every man is to become his own spelling reformer, to change according to his will, and the caprice of intellectual mediocrity, literary anarchy will speedily come. We shall not have language reform, but language corruption. We must have some recognized standard to proceed by, and that standard should not be the shallow bumptiousness of self-constituted literary mentors, literary hacks, or penny-a-liners, or even the man with "the big stick." Sir Allen Aylsworth is right in his belief that "we in this Canadian parliament in all our official writings do well to maintain the English standard, whatever the newspapers or other people see fit to do."

The proposed spelling "reform" is not as bad in itself, as in the evil influence of the spirit behind it, the spirit that leads each literary dauber with untempered mortar to be a law unto himself; the self assertion that ignores literary standards and authorities, which are the only legitimate source of developmental change. Beginning with spelling the spirit of self-law, spreads to corruption of language forms, and thus we have the shocking prevalence of what is called "slang" as odious in the mouth of any of one aspiring to a single claim to education and culture as thieves' argot. This disregard for precedent, this lack of veneration for what is venerable, brings about the laxity of habits of thought and manners, leading to laxity of morals or deterioration of the moral sense. The old ideals, of respect for authority, respect for superiors, has two largely given place to a spirit of self-pleasing each a law unto himself or herself. This begets a spirit of desire for change for something new, an uncontrollable thirst for amusement and change, that accounts for the prevalence of modern frivolity in the hunt for pleasure to the exclusion of sober, elevating and ennobling pursuits. With this spirit of permeating society so thoroughly, it is no wonder that the Board of Education has occasion to deplore the insane pursuit of frivolous pleasures that in our school children destroys the sense of serious responsibility, of steadiness of purpose, bringing development of morale and habits that will clog to them and clog their progress all through their lives. Spelling "reform" is responsible for this to the extent that it is the manifestation of a spirit of insubordination and disregard for legitimate authority—literary lynch-law. Loose ideals in spelling lead to loose ideals as to, and in, the employment of words; our words corrupted, influence our thoughts and laxity in standards of thought, makes easy the step to looseness of moral ideals; and these are the fathers of our actions, giving them tone and character.

Change in word forms and orthoepic significance, have marked the development of the English language, but as with the British constitution, the development has been gradual and based upon recognized and undisputed authority, not upon the caprice of those who can assert no claim to be regarded as authorities.

VANCOUVER'S EXAMPLE.

(Ottawa Citiezn)

The Tenement House commission of New York, an organization devoted to the betterment of conditions among the dwellers in the crowded districts of the big city, has reached the same conclusion that taxation is largely responsible for much of the misery of the poor and for the insanitary herding of the people in wretched dwellings.

Mr. Jacob Riis, one of the foremost workers in the cause of social progress among the poor, declares that when landlords charge tenants one-fourth or one-half their earnings they must let space to others more miserable than themselves in order to pay the rents. He instances the case where one landlord cut a window to make a dark room a better paying proposition and increased the rent accordingly. Dark tenements are the curse of the big cities. In some dwellings in New York, overcrowded with poor tenants, the passages are so dark, according to Mr. Riis, that it would be impossible to raise potatoes therein—but boys and girls are raised there. So is disease, vice and crime.

That the New York organization is doing excellent work is revealed by the fact that during the short period of its existence it has caused to be lighted and ventilated some 230,000 dark rooms in tenements. Half as many again exist which the commission cannot interfere with, owing ot legal complications, and on an average 150 cases a day are looked into.

On top of ll this comes the remarkable statement that only one-fifth of the entire area of Greater New York, not counting park space, has been built upon. Here is in reality the crux of the whole problem of overcrowding and its attendant evils. The remaining land is practically held at prohibitive prices and as improvements are, of course, taxed, there is no incentive to make living conditions better in tenements already constructed. Mr. J. J. Murphy the Tenement House commissioner, in commenting on this phase of the situation at the meeting in question remarked:

"Vancouver exempted improvements from taxation and improvements increased 86 per cent. in a year. In New York we have capitalized congestion and built the city's credit on that insecure foundation."

As the results of Vancouver's decision to tax land values and exempt improvements become generally known the Canadian city's example is more and more likely to be followed by other enterprising municipalities. Even New York is not ashamed to admit that Vancouver has taught her something.

In so far as Ontario municipalities are concerned Vancouver can teach them nothing of which they can avail thtmselves for the reason that the Ontario Assessment act makes it obligatory to tax improvements at the same rate as land values and Sir James Whitney refuses to amend the act.

WELL KNOWN MINISTER

Restored to Health by Vinol

Rev. D. Schneider, who is a well-known minister in Rice Lake, Wis., writes:

"I had a very severe stomach trouble last year from which I was kept in bed three months. I had engaged the services of a doctor, but to no avail. I then read of Vinol and determined to try a bottle. Before it was used up I was out of bed, and four bottles made me a well man. Vinol is a splendid medicine and I can gladly recommend it."

Prominent men from all over the country do not hesitate to indorse this wonderful tonic.

For twelve years Vinol has been sold on the "money back" plan and every year strengthens it's popularity and proves by continued tests that it will do what we claim for it. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte street (also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe Sts.

Wants Treaty Cancelled.

Washington, Feb. 11.—Claiming that Russia has violated the treaty of 832 with the United States by denying Jewish citizens of this country passports to extend it to other American travelers, Representative Herbert Parsons of New York introduced a resolution in the House yesterday calling on President Taft to declare the treaty void.

May Be Man's Body.

Erie, Pa., Feb. 11.—While the police and detectives were working desperately to discover a clue to the identity of the ghouls that robbed the Scott mausoleum in the Erie Cemetery, new mystery was thrown about the case by a report that the body taken was not that of Mrs. Anna M. McCollum, as at first reported, but that of the late Congressman Wm. L. Scott.

The main hunt for the ghouls is now being directed in Black Hand channels as a result of a conference between detectives and Charles H. Strong, brother-in-law of the late Mr. Scott. Men who attempted to blackmail the Strong family two years ago by means of Black Hand letters are now in the Washington penitentiary, and it is believed that their friends or companions may have been responsible for the grave robbery.

Mr. Scott, who was a wealthy railroad man, was a close personal friend of the late Grover Cleveland, during the latter's first term.

Charged With Admitting Burglars.

New York, Feb. 11.—James P. McKinney, jr., son of a well-to-do advertising man, is locked up in a police station here, charged with admitting two burglars to his father's home in Bensonhurst, and aiding them in looting the house. The two men also were captured, but not until one of them received a dangerous wound from a policeman.

Crippen's Will Is Filed.

London, Feb. 11.—The will of Dr. H. H. Crippen, hanged for the murder of his wife, Belle Elmore, was entered for probate yesterday. The property has a gross value of £208.

J. J. Warren Coming Back.

Toronto, Feb. 11.—J. J. Warren, manager of the Trusts & Guarantee Co., included in the conspiracy charge concerning the securing of a charter for the Farmers' Bank, will be in Toronto on Monday or Tuesday of next week at the latest.

Mr. Warren wired yesterday to the company that, although he was not quite through with his western business, he was on his way back to Toronto because of the fact that his name had been drawn into the bank's affairs.

Child Badly Scalded.

Kingston, Feb. 11.—Roscoe Scott, aged 12, was badly scalded at the Louise school, when he attempted to take a pail of boiling water off the stove.

Given a Chance.

Kingston, Feb. 11.—The Bank of British North America will not take any action against Sergt. G. Harrison of the Army Service Corps, for forging a check for $20. Harrison is in the barracks, having returned to answer for his doings. The accounts are short, but it is understood friends will help him out, and that he will be given a chance to make good.

Power For Kingston.

Kingston, Feb. 11.—In a week's time, Hon. Adam Beck, chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission, hopes to have a proposition ready for cheap power for Kingston. This is the encouraging report Ald. Toye, who was sent as a delegate to interview Hon. Mr. Beck in Toronto, brought back with him yesterday.

Changed Their Time.

Paris, Feb. 11.—The Senate yesterday passed a bill modifying the legal time in France and Algeria, which now is nine minutes 21 seconds slower than that in use in Western Europe. This action is to be taken so as to bring France within the same time section as England, Belgium, Holland and Spain.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"PASSAIC, N. J.—The diamond engagement ring, as a symbol of plighted faith is a 'symbol of inferiority,' according to Dr. M. O. Kershet, a physician whose engagement to Miss Gertrude Risker has just been announced.

"At the reception where the announcement was made Dr. Kershet surprised the guests by giving Miss Risker a set of elegantly bound books by Victor Hugo, Balzac, George Bernard Shaw, Ibsen, Tolstoi, Zangwill and others, instead of an engagement ring."

So announces a newspaper item.

A most interesting and intellectual departure, surely, but it seems to me that the very reason Dr. Kershet urges for his innovation is the reason that will make it unlikely to become a custom.

This is his argument—

"In times long ago a man either captured his female partner or purchased her from her parents with presents. When she was his, he placed a crude ring upon her finger. It was regarded as a symbol of inferiority and made the wearer appear in the light of personal property. Miss Risker will not be my chattel, but my equal, my companion and helpmeet."

I am afraid that Dr. Kershet is reckoning without feminine instinct in his desire to dispose of the ring because it is the mark of possession.

For whether she admit it or not, the average woman, however clever, however intellectual, however superior to her masculine acquaintances she may be, WANTS TO BE POSSESSED.

I was reading in some biography the other day—I can't seem to think just whose it was—of a woman to whom her fiance offered a choice between a diamond locket with their pictures in it, and the conventional ring.

"She liked the idea of the locket very much," says the biography, "because it would be different, but she finally chose the ring because it seemed to mark her as more peculiarly his."

For the very reason, you see, for which Dr. Kershet would condemn it.

Woman wants to be pursued.

She wants to be captured.

She wants to be marked "my property."

There's no use blinking it. There's no use trying to theorize it away. Whether it's the best way for her to feel or not, that's the way she does feel.

The woman who is lonely without her drunken husband to beat her has plenty of "sisters under the skin" in all ranks of society.

No, Dr. Kershet, you may be right in your ideal, but you are miles, or rather centuries, away from actual conditions.

We may be capable of being companions and helpmeets but I am afraid we are likely to love best the lovers who have enough of the caveman left in them to want us to be property, too.

Ruth Cameron

THE REASON WE HAVE CHEAP POWER

The Toronto World is usually out fighting against industrial corporations—at least, as a rule, it pretends to be performing that service in behalf on the consumer, the poorman and the muncipality. A striking change of attitude in this respect, on behalf of the Toronto World, is to be found in its issue of Monday last, when it devotes several columns to a review of what is being done towards developing power along the line of the Trent Canal. The article in the main, however, is evidently prepared with a view to advertsing the Electric Power Company of Belleville, the concern which now controls, perhaps, 80 per cent. of the power along the Trent Canal, between Buckhorn and Trenton. The form this fine of advertisement of the Electric Power Company takes is most amusing, in as much as it endeavours to picture the company in question as a great big hearted generous concern, anxious to supply the various municipalites of the district with cheap power! And for all this cheap power, who is given most of the credit thereof? The Hydro-Electric Commission of the Ontario Government.

As a matter of fact the Hydro-Electric Commission has had no more to do with the supplying of cheap power to the people of this district, than had the late General Cronje, and in its attempt to give credit to the Hydro-Electric Commission in this respect, the Toronto World's article becomes a joke to anyone who knows the facts. Of course, the article which gives every appearance of being inspired by certain interests, has an object in view in its attempt to hoodwink the people of the district, by giving credit to Mr. Beck for the cheap power that is now, or may be in the future, offered to the various municipalities of this district. It is important to the Electric Company, Limited, no doubt, that the municipalities should feel kindly towards them, and if the public, which appears to have a great deal of faith in the Hydro-Electric Commission, believes that this Commission and the Electric Company are working in harmony, there will be clean sailing for the Electric Company Limited, in the matter of obtaining franchises.

It is not my desire to work injury to the Electric Power Company. So far as I am personally concerned, I shall be glad to see it prosper and see the stockholders receive a reasonable return on their investment. What I do object to is, however, the method whereby they seek to cultivate the good feeling of the people of the district by soft-soaping and purring over the Hydro-Electric Commission.

The fact of the matter is, that the cheap rates for power now prevail, and shall prevail in the future in this district, are due absolutely to the action of the Dominion Government, as represented by the Department of Railways and Canals, and to no one else. The benefits of cheap power that are now being enjoyed by the people of this district would have existed had Hon. Adam Beck and his commission never been known. The road to cheap power was being paved by the present Dominion Government long before the Hydro-Electric Commission came into existence. The fact that we have cheap power in the Trent district, and the fact that the Electric Power Company is delivering it to municipalities, throughout the Trent district at unquestionable cheap rates, is due to the aggressive policy that has been pursued by the Dominion Government in completing the Trent Canal, thereby making available for development many valuable water powers which otherwise would have remained undeveloped for years to come.

However, there is a much more important feature bearing upon the matter of cheap power, to which credit alone is due to the Dominion Government. The Department of Railways and Canals, has leased the surplus water at these dams to various individuals and companies, at annual rentals of $2.00 per horse power, a really reasonable rate. These leases contain the provision that the rates for power to be changed, the consumer must be subject to regulation by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. Here, then, is the very true reason that the people of this district have cheap power. The Dominion Government first made possible the development of the power by building dams, and secondly leased the surplus water at these dams at a low rental, with the stipulation that the rates to consumers shall be subject to the control of the Dominion Railway Commission. The Electric Power Company have taken over certain of these leases. They are then offering cheap power to the people of the district, not, I am sure, out of any kindness of heart on the part of the financial interests involved, but because they are obliged to, by reason of the terms of their leases.

The fact that the various dams along the canal were the property of the Dominion Government, removed from the Hydro-Electric Commission every vestige of control over them. The commission did not have an opportunity to saddle upon municipalities the expenses of installing transmission lines and sub-statons. The company developing power at the various dams, is in a position to deliver power to the towns throughout the district, and the consumer for all time to come is by the action of the Dominion Government, and the power of the Railway Commission, guaranteed power at the cheapest possible rates, after allowing for any reasonable return upon the money invested.

If the Electric Power Company desires to cultivate the friendly feeling of the people of the district, they can do so by giving credit for the cheap rates for power, to the Dominion Government, to where it properly belongs, and not endeavour to credit the Hydro-Electric Commission with having also been instrumental in bringing about the present satisfactory state of affairs. The best card this company can play is to point out that their rates are subject to the control of the Railway Commission. It will go better, and is more to the truth, than attempting to "jolly" the people with the idea that the Hydro-Electric Commisson and the Electric Power Company, Limited, are heavenly twins working together like white-winged angels, for the good of the community.

NO MORE DISTRESS FROM THE STOMACH

No Dyspepsia, Gas, Heartburn or Indigestion Five Minutes Later

Every family here ought to keep some Diapepsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of Indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time, day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a distressed, out-of-order stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you, or lies like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin, and take a little just as soon as you can. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odours.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for out-of-order stomachs, because it prevents fermentation and takes hold of your food and digests it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Belief in five minutes from all stomach misery at any drug store, waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to cure almost any chronic case of Dyspepsia, Indigestion or any other Stomach trouble.

SONG OF COURAGE

If the world has gone wrong and life is a song,
Where the minor chord's given to wailing,
If the skies have wept tears, and at trouble and fears
The soul sin our bosoms are quailing;
If we look through a mase unto desolate days,
When our hearts shall be weary, so weary;
If we've thrown and have missed, and are dropped from the list
Of the ones who are happy and cheery:

Why, still, do you know, we may fight as we go
A battle that's stalwart and onward;
We may rise though we fall, unto error no thrall,
Cleaving upward, and starward, and sunward;
And the light of our eyes, though it flickers and dies,
We may see reappear in another's;
For the God-given light that will scatter the night
To the smile on the face of our brothers.

THE ORDINARY "SALOON" IS UNKNOWN IN MAINE

The writer is not dependent on hearsay evidence, but has made repeated and careful investigation in many parts of the State. Unlawful sales do occur, but the total amount sold is insignificant in comparison to the sales in license territory. The saloon, as known in Boston, New York and Philadelphia, is not to be found in Maine. You may walk the streets of Portland, or Bath, or Bangor, or Augusta, or Lewiston, looking for the screens, the frosted windows, the barrels, the bottles, the beer signs, the external and familiar evidences of the saloon, and you will look in vain. Cultivate a loafer on the street corner, get chummy with a porter in a cheap hotel, make yourself solid with an ill-favored hackdriver, and, for a consideration, you may be conducted, as was the writer, down into a cellar, through a foul-smelling lavatory, and into a "joint," all of whose stock-in-trade could quite easily have been packed into a couple of suitcases.

A keg of beer which had been secreted in an outhouse, a tin can found concealed in a hollow wall and yielding lukewarm "booze" through a rubber tube, a brace of whisky flasks worn under the outer garments of a woman, and a coffin filled with bottles of beer packed in straw, were all exhibited to the writer by a Portland sheriff as most convincing proof that they do not "sell liquor in Maine just as they do in New York."

As these paragraphs are being penned there lies before the writer a letter of recent date from one of Portland's leading manufacturers, E. T. Burrowes, in which that gentleman assures me that it is still true, as on the occasion of my last trip to Portland, that the open saloon and the open sale of intoxicants, as carried on in license States, are unknown in Maine.

No sensible man will claim that prohibition annihilates the traffic; and no honest man can investigate the practical working of prohibition in Maine without coming to the conclusion that, with all its limitations and imperfections, it accomplishes in large measure what it is intended to do, and reduces the evil of intemperance far below the limit gained by the most perfect system of "regulation" ever devised.

KANSAS RIGIDLY ENFORCES PROHIBITION

"The manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors shall be forever prohibited in this State, except for medicinal, scientific and mechanical purposes." So reads Section 10 of Article 15 of the Constitution of Kansas, said section having been adopted by popular vote in 1880. In 1881 the Legislature passed a prohibitory statute which, with various subsequent amendments, is still in force, and constantly increasing in favor.

During the first ten years after the adoption of prohibition the enforcement of the law was attended with many difficulties, and in such cities as Leavenworth, Atchison and Kansas City the open traffic continued in defiance of law and the authorities. But all this has been changed and a new spirit prevails in the Sunflower State. Kansas City, Kansas, a town of 100,000 population just across the State line from Kansas City, Missouri, was the last to fall in line, but now even Kansas City is without a saloon. Attorney-General Jackson, ably assisted by C. W. Trickett, attacked the situation with vigor and won a complete victory over the lawless element. Two hundred "joints" were put out of business. The mayor of the city and the county attorney were both ousted from office because of failure and refusal to do their duty, and, with the full support of the Governor, the law officers of the State administration won a signal victory, to the great satisfaction of the best people of the commonwealth.

Upon a recent visit to Topeka, the capital of the State, the writer spent an afternoon and evening in a fruitless search for one of the "joints" which the trade journals of the liquor traffic tell us are running on every corner. If there is a saloon or "joint" in Topeka it is so well hidden that a stranger is not likely to find it.

During the first three years after law enforcement began in Kansas City its banks more than doubled their deposits, business of all kinds increased, and, in proportion to its size, more new buildings were erected than in any other city in the United States.

In November, 1908, Governor Hoch said that Kansas was free from saloons and was enjoying an era of "wonderful prosperity." During the entire preceding year more than half the counties in Kansas sent no prisoners to the penitentiary, and one-third of the counties were without a prisoner in the county jail, or a pauper in the poorhouse, while the bank deposits averaged more than $100 per capita.

A liquor paper is on my desk upon a single page of which I find three flings at the failure of prohibition in Kansas.

By the side of these foundationless flings, which are accompanied by no attempt at proof, put the report of a great meeting held in Topeka on October 8 ,1910. Judge S. H. Allen, formerly of the Supreme Court, presided. Addresses were delivered by seven gentlemen, including the Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, the author, and Mr. E. L. Copeland, Treasurer of the Santa Fe Railroad. A series of resolutions was adopted, for the purpose of encouraging the campaign for prohibition in Missouri. I quote therefrom as follows: "We, the citizens of Topeka and Kansas, in mass meeting assembled, do hereby proclaim—First, that there is not a saloon in existence within the borders of Kansas. Second, that the prohibitory law is as well enforced in Kansas as any other law on our statute books, and far better enforced than high license laws in any other State."

Then follow declarations announcing the beneficent effects of prohibition upon business, education and morals. Let it be kept in mind that these public announcements were made less than four months ago by 4,000 representative citizens of Topeka, who would scarcely be willing to send out a false report. Whom shall we believe—the hirelings of the liquor traffic or the mass meeting of Kansas freemen?

Governor Stubbs, the present Kansas Executive, in answer to the charge of the liquor men that saloons exist in Kansas, gave out the following reply: "If any brewer or distiller can show me a saloon or open 'joint' in Kansas I will close it at once, or resign."—Dr. Dickie, President of Albion College, Mich., U.S.A.

"When mother prayed, then all the sin
Grew tremulous with music rare;
Love's earnest pleading for its own
Was wafted heavenward to the throne.
'God bless my children,' thus the prayer;

'Keep them unspotted everywhere,
O Father, God!' in softest tone
Echoed the whisper, upward blown,
When mother prayed.

"O, dread the day when mother's prayer
Breathes out no more her heart's fond care;
For blessings rich from heavenly zone
Came angel-like from heights far blown,
When mother prayed."

"ORANGE LILY SAVED MY LIFE"

These words or expressions having the same meaning are contained in hundreds of the letters I have received during the past year. Many were from women who had suffered agonies from falling of womb; others from women who had escaped dangerous surgical operations, as the tumors and ulcers had been removed by the action of Orange Lily; and others who had suffered from suppressed menstruation, leucorrhoea, painful periods, etc. For all these and the other troubles known in general as Women's Disorders, Orange Lily furnishes a positive scientific, never-failing cure. It is applied direct to the suffering organs, and its operation is certain and beneficial. As a trial actually proves its merit, I hereby offer to send, absolutely free, a box (worth 25c., sufficient for ten days' treatment, to every suffering woman who will write for it. Enclose 2 stamps. THE FAMILY HEARTH

Ever yfarm should own a good farmer.

This world is God's workshop for making men in.

A man without self restraint is like a barrel without hoops and tumbles to pieces.

The pursuit of ignoble pleasure is the degradation of true happiness.

The examples set by the great and good do not die; they continue to live and speak to all the generations that succeed them.

It is idleness that is the curse of man—not labour.

Sloth never climbed a hill nor overcame a difficulty that it could avoid.

Even leisure cannot be enjoyed unless it is won by effort, If it has not been earned by work the price has not been paid for it.

Idleness eats the heart out of men, and consumes them as rust does iron.

Power belongs only to the workers; the idle are always powerless.

It is the laborious, painstaking men who are the rules of the world.

Perseverance is the best school for manly virtue.

The greatest misfortune of all is not to be able to bear misfortune.

Method is the very hinge to business, and there is no method without punctuality.

Idle moments are the openings through which the tempter finds readiest entrance into the citadels of the soul.

If a man be gracious to strangers it shows that he is a citizen of the world, and that his heart is no island cut off from other lands, but a continent that joins them.

Nothing is more penuriousness, nothing more anxious than carelessness, and every duty which is bidden to wait returns with seven fresh duties at its back.

To-day is a king in disguise. To-day always looks mean to the thoughtless, in the face of uniform experience that all good and great and happy actions are made up precisely of these blank to-days.

Beautiful Thoughts.

The Countess Irma is one of the characters in a German novel entitled "On the Heights." In her journal are found the following beautifully expressed sentiments:

"Modern culture cannot take the place of religion; religion makes all men equal, culture unequal. There must however, some day, be a system of culture which will make all men equal; then only will it be the right or the true. We are only yet at the beginning."

So long as we can say 'father,' or 'mother,' there is a love on the earth which bears one up in its arms. It is only when the parents are dead that we are set down on the hard ground."

"We only see all the good nests when the trees are bare, and there is nothing more in them.'

"Every man, wherever, he may be, is standing, unforeboded, on a height, from which he does not see the signs of mortality. If one always saw them there would be no more work in the world—no more song.' '

"The most mysterious, dreamy thoughts are like a bird on a twig; he sings, but if he sees an eye watching him he flies away."

"A man who allows himself to alter his sentiments, and permits the hunger of his character to be changed, is conquered by the world, and exists no longer as himself.' '

Hints For Wives.

Perchance you think that your husband's disposition is much changed; that he is no longer the sweet-tempered, ardent lover he used to be. This may be a mistake. Consider his struggle with the world—his everlasting race with the busy competition of trade. What is it that makes him so eager in the pursuit of gain—so energetic by day, so sleepless by night—but his love of home, wief and children, and a dread that their respectability, according to the light in which he has conceived it, may be encroached upon by the strife of existence. This is the true secret of that silent care which preys upon the hearts of many men; and true it is, that when love is least apparent, it is nevertheless the active principle which animates the heart, though fears and disapointments make up a cloud which obscures the warmer element. As above the clouds there is a glorious sunshine while below are showers and gloom, so with the conduct of man—behind the gloom of anxiety there is a bright fountain of high and noble feeling. Thinking of this in those moments when clouds seem to lower upon your domestic peace and by tempering your conduct accordingly, the gloom will soon pass away and warmth and brightness take its place.

The Deadly Cold Bed.

If trustworthy statistics could be had of the number of persons who die every year or become permanently diseased, from sleeping in damp or cold beds, they would probably be astonishing and appalling. It is a peril that constantly besets travelling men, and if they are wise they will invariably insist on having their beds aired and dried, even at the risk of causing much trouble to their landlords. But, it is a peril that resides also in the home, and the cold "spare room' has slain its thousands of helpless guests, and will go on with its slaughter till people learn wisdom. Not only the guest, but the family often suffer the penalty of sleeping in cold rooms and chilling their bodies at a time when they need all their bodily heat, by getting between cold sheets. Even in warm summer weather a cold, damp bed will get in its deadly work. It is needless cpril, and the neglect to provide dry rooms and beds has in it the elemtns of murder and suicide.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

Solves the Problem of Good Hair

After Prof. Sabouraud confirmed the germ origin of dandruff, science was confronted by a new problem which was not solved until the discovery of Newbro's Herpicide. Herpicide being the first successful preparation compounded in harmony with this new theory, becomes the original remedy to kill the dandruff germ.

Since then, numerous preparations said to be "just as good" as Herpicide have been thrown upon the market; others have adopted Herpicide claims, and without making any change in their remedies, but none have ever reached the same degree of popularity. Everywhere this remedy is recognized as the one genuine dandruff germ destroyer. As a result Herpicide has more satisfied users than all other hair preparations combined.

Being the original remedy, users expect more astonishing results from Herpicide than they would look for from any other preparation and they usually get them. So wonderful has been the success of this germicide that it is now recognized as the standard hair remedy of the world.

Herpicide kills the dandruff germ, checks falling hair. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

For sale at drug stores. One dollar size bottles are guaranteed. Applications obtainable at the good barber shops. Insist on having real Herpicide Send 10c. in postage for sample and book to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich.

RIP VAN-PETERBOROUGH

With Apologies to Rip Van-Winkle

By Roy Gilray

In reviewing the public and social functions held in Peterborough during the past year, the casual observer must have been impressed with the small number of people who undertake to carry them through to successful issue. The surprising feature is that the duty invariably falls upon the same group of people, no matter to what organization the affair belongs Either some people are sadly imposed upon, or others are grossly negligent of their duties as citizens of a fair and progressive city; lacking that esprit de corps so necessary in the true and loyal community.

No wonder Peterborough is so far behind in almost every particular; many of the smaller towns in Western Ontario put us to shame on every count.

Have we any organization, any public trust, any example of purely local creation to which we can point with pride and say: "This is the result of our effort"? True, we have several parks, but were they not presented to us through the munificence of the late Mrs. Nichols? We have the Lift Lock, but was it not placed at our gate by the Dominion Government?

Everybody, even nature, has been kind to us, wooing us on, but we, invalid-like, remain in that thoroughly passive mood, meekly accepting what is laid at our door, making absolutely no effort to help ourselves or assert our individuality.

An occasion of recent date, to which we might refer, is the Horse Show held in the Armories. Its success was remarkable considering the limited number that stood behind it. Compare our position with Cobourg, or with Guelph, and her famous Winter Fair, which, from a small horse show, grew to its present envisable position through the enthusiastic co-operation of its wide-awake citizens and the farmers of the surrounding country.

Peterborough possesses marked advantages over other places in Ontario, not only in transportation, both rail and water; in water power, unlimited and close at hand; but also in her extensive and prosperous farming community.

To whom, then, should we look for this "forward movement," to whom should we go for freedom from that inertia, that life-sapping inactivity? There can be only one answer: to our merchants our business men. But we fear the love of acquiring the coin so engrosses their attention that little or no time is left for the cultivation of those mental and moral activities so characteristic of the gentleman of leisure.

With us leisure is called loafing, and a man out of business is not only out of his element, but he is out of countenance with current events. He not only ceases to be a factor in business, but suffers depreciation in popular estimation, unless he occupies his time in some public service. Verily commerce seems to rule the world.

Commercialism occupies a too prominent position in our vision. We are too prone to measure a man by his ability to hoard, rather than by his mental attainments. This is the chief reason why most men continue in business until physical incapability compels abatement; they revel in power and influence which money gives them and hesitate to relinquish the prominence which comes from a hold on commerce.

Our business men ought to break away from trade exactions long before they do—ought to do so as a matter of volition and ethical judgment, rather than of physical necessity. They ought to get and give more enjoyment in life; they ought to live more in books, and more in the open and less at their desks, and realize ebtter health and longer lives as a result. More and more culture in all its forms is exercising a growing influence, which must manifest itself in lessened effort along the lines of money-getting, and the devotion of more time to the pursuits which naturally accompany fortified leisure. Aristotle has wisely said: "the end of labour is to gain leisure."

The only real success worthy of the name is that which comes from the consciousness of growing wider, deeper, higher in mental and moral power as the years go on. It is just as important to set apart time for the development of our aesthetic faculties as for cultivating the hoarding instinct. A man cannot live by bread alone. The fine art of living is for each person to seek their fullest development.

If Peterborough is to assume her proper place; if she is to become the premier city—the leader, not the lagger—there must be more co-operation, more live-wire enthusiasm displayed by her representative men in all things local, till all citizens are charged with that compelling optimism, so necessary in the make-up of a thoroughly progressive people.

The Junior Hockey Team was defeated i na game at Lakefield by "The Grove" team on Friday last. The score was seven to four. This excused matters as the locals were successful in a game played here the week previous.

A hockey game will be played here on Tuesday evening between the Traders Bank team of Lakefield and the home Seniors.

The Grove team from Lakefield play the Juniors here on Wednesday afternoon.

It is expected the Seniors will journey to Norwood on Friday to play a return game with a team of that place.

A carnival, the date of which will be announced later will be held during teh last week of this month.

Mr. Albert McQuaige who is cutting the ice supply for this place shd an exciting experience on Saturday afternoon when his horse got into the water. It appears the animal was driven accidently on some thin ice which gave way and in the effort to save the beast Mr. McQuaige and his helper were both precipitated into the icy waters. Assistance which was near at hand was at the brink in short notice and rescued the trio.

Messrs. T. J. Lillicrap and J. W. Stewart, Lakefield, were in town on Monday.

Mr. Joseph Dought, was here on business on Monday.

Mr. E. Hawthorne was in the city on Monday.

Mr. Stanley Kidd Lakefield, visited friends here last week.

Mair Rev. Dr. Marvin returned from Toronto last week.

A sleigh load of young people from Lakefield attended the Carnival here on Wednesday last.

Rev. A. W. MacKenzie, Lakefield was a guest of Mr. A. F. Choate on Saturday.

Interesting Wedding At Hastings

Examiner Special:

Hastings, Feb. 4th.—A wedding of interest to the people of Hastings was quietly solemnized at Campbellford, when Miss Bertha, daughter of Mr. the bride of Mr. Henry Scriver, of Norwood. Mr. and Mrs. Scriver have a host of friends who join in wishing them a long and prosperous wedded and Mrs. Al. Scriver, town, became life.

The members of the local ledge of C.O.F. are making arrangements for their annual "At Home," which is to be held in their rooms on February 14th. Refreshments will be provided by the ladies and a pleasant evening is anticipated.

Rev. C. W. Barrett spent a few days in Toronto attending the Chapman-Alexander Evangelistic meetings.

A number from this district attended the funeral of the late John Knox, in Norwood on Saturday afternoon.

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered on Sunday morning last in the Methodist Church, the Rev. C. W. Barrett officiating.

A hockey match was played here on Saturday last between the local Juniors and a team from Norwood, which resulted in favor of the home team by 10-2.

Miss Gertie Huycke, of Peterborough, has been visiting friends in town. At the evening service in the Methodist Church on Sunday, Miss Huycke sang a solo which was well rendered and well received.

Miss Jennie Johnson of Campbellford spent Sunday with her friend, Miss F. Tyler.

Mr. Robt. Oakman is confined to his home, suffering from an attack of pleurisy.

As a sequel of the epidemic of La Grippe, which has visited this section, the mumps have made their appearance, and a number are suffering from their effects.

Miss Willena Fife is spending a few days with her cousin, Miss Maggie Hore, of Percy.

Mr. John Carter of Otonabee, was in town on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Buchanan of Havelock have been visiting the latter's mother, Mrs. J. Carter, town.

The return game of hockey between Havelock and Hastings was played here on Wednesday and resulted in a tie. The Havelock boys were escorted by a number of their fellow townsmen who came to cheer them on their way.

Pneumonia has claimed another victim in the person of Mrs. Robt. Wallace, who passed away on Wednesday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. J. Fisher, town. Deceased lady was a native of Port Hope, but had resided in Hastings for the past six or seven years. The remains were taken to Port Hope for interment.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Wilson of Toronto, are visiting friends in town.

SILENT McFOOZLE.

The sleighs were creaking across the snow,
The stars had a frosty hue,
They seemed like potent electric sparks
Of a cold and steely blue.
The wind was stilled and the air was keen,
And it made the Scotsmen wink
When they left their homes in sublime content
To trudge to the Curling Rink.

McFoozle ranked as a canny skip,
He carefully picked his men,
There was Sandy Tamson and Flinders Bruce,
And Malcolm McGhillighen,
Then rising up from his toddy glass
With a faint, regretful sigh,
He led his men to the gleaming rink
And fervor lit his eye.

The stanes went grumbling down the lee,
The handles slowly turning,
But Sandy's stopped at the Porker's Line,
Alas, he was only learning.
And Flinders galloped a-past the tee,
But McGhillighen wiggled through,
And when McFoozle had played the end
His cohorts were lying Two.

But ah, the men on the other side
Braced up and began to play,
McFoozle's Four had the worst of luck,
Though "scooping her" all the way.
Young Tamson "swoor" in a Heilan' style,
And Flinders was full of rage,
But all McFoozle would say was "Losh,"
And his look was calm and sage.

It came at last to the final End,
McGhillighen's granite stane
Was sitting plump on the circled tee.
It looked like a needed gain.
McFoozle played, 'twas a sporting shot,
To better the situation,
Though Malcolm urged him to "throw away,"
He would hear of no cessation.

The shot went curving adown the rink,
In a manner fine and free,
But it struck McGhillighen's centred stone
And drove it across the ice.
Then while the language of Flinders Bruce
Would make an Elder sigh,
McFoozle looked at the mess he made
And woefully said: "Ou, Ay."

WORK OF INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS COMMISSION WAS SPLENDIDLY EXPLAINED

regard to Canadian affairs it was wise to deal with them direct. They would not respect the Canadians if they did not. The Mother Country, on the other hand, would not respect Canadians less because they looked after these things themselves. She was quite willing to be relieved of responsibility in these details, and respected her child a good deal more because it had grown to manhood and was prepared to work out these matters for itself.

The Work of the Commission.

The speaker proceeded with his explanation of the work of the International Waterways Commission. The largeness of the work soon became apparent. The great waterways extending 1,200 miles, formed the natural boundary between the two countries for a long distance. It was a common heritage essential to the welfare and well-being of the North West. Without the waterways, Manitoba would have had to wait many years before it could have been successfully developed. The Commission had been formed in the first place largely on account of the anxiety of the United States with regard to the preservation of the lake levels. He instanced the action of the city of Chicago, whose sewage emptied into Lake Michigan, and who, in order to prevent a typhoid fever epidemic, had pumped water from the lake through a canal into the Illinois river. As a result the waters of Lake Erie were lowered four or five inches affecting navigation and the Lake Freight Carriers' Association was up in arms; but the Commission decided that no more water should be taken out, that the paramount use of the water was for navigation purposes. Chicago complained that they were using the water of Lake Michigan, but the Commission decided against them, and the Secretary of War refused to grant them permission and the injury to the water levels was stopped. Until the development of electrical power no one bothered very much about the water question, but the moment that the water became of use and valuable for power purposed there was a rush to seize it. At Sault Ste Marie, at Niagara Falls it was the same. There were all sorts and conditions of applications from people who wanted to make money out of the water.

When the question was being considered the United States suggested that each case should be dealt with individually, but the Canadians argued that they must first decide upon the principles, upon which such matters were to be settled, and there would be little difficulty. The first principle decided upon was that each country was to have the right to use the water for domestic purposes. The second was that the interests of navigation were paramount over every other intrest. In regard to power, it should be divided equally. The International Commission was a permanent judicial board; it was not appointed for any specific purpose in regard to Niagara or the Long Sault. It had to play the game fairly or get out. The only way to play it successfully was to play it honestly, and the Commission had played honestly. The Commission was only an advisory board; it recommended certain things and these were carried out in an incidental manner, but to give real effect there had to be treaty between the two countries. Without it there was sure to be trouble.

The Provision of the Treaty.

Sir George Gibbons then took up the treaty between the United States and Canada, explaining its provisions carefully and logically. He showed the privleges given to Canada in regard to navigation of the Great Lakes. The boundary waters were declared to be all the waters from main-shore to main-shore anywhere. The Canadian vessels were given the right to navigate anywhere, even in Lake Michigan. The Union Jack could sail through the Straits of Mackinac the same as the Stars and Stripes, and there was no waiting for a pass-port.

The speaker showed how the interests of the two countries were protected under the treaty. There was to be no diversion of any of the waters on one side of the border affecting levels on the other. The only way in which this could be done was by permission of the Joint Commission, which was bound to give precedence to the rights of navigation over the use of the water for power purposes. It was an absolutely fair treaty and the rights of Canada were absolutely looked after. The treaty also dealt with the question of rivers flowing across the boundary. The Canadians proposed that neither country be allowed to interfere with, or divert, the flow of any stream to the injury of people of the other country. The United States representatives refused to agree to this, but proposed a fair agreement as an alternative. That was that if one country wished to divert a stream on their side of the boundary that would cause injury to people on the other side these people should be indemnified for the damage sustained.

Little Danger of Trouble.

The Joint Commission had the authority to hear evidence, summons witnesses and make inquiries into any matter of dispute and by reason of this there was little danger of any serious friction or trouble between the two countries. It was in his opinion the best service that Canada could give to the Empire. If there was any danger from Germany which he hoped was not the case, it was all the more reason that Canada should keep good friends with their neighbours in the South. The man was a poor Imperialist who continually sought to engender by talk, bad feeling with his neighbours.

In conclusion, the speaker touched briefly on the proposal, emanating from the United States of an International Joint Court of Justice, in which the nations were to pledge themselves to stand by and enforce the decisions of the Court by their united armies and fleets, if necessary, acting as a police force to enforce law and good order among the nations. This, he thought, was a consummation devoutly to be wished for," and was coming faster, perhaps than one would believe. The very horridness of war was working towards this end. Everybody loved a soldier, but with the world growing closer together surely there was something for brave men to do—better than killing each other.

At the conclusion of the lecture a hearty vote of thanks was accorded the speaker, on motion of His Honour Judge Huycke and Mr. E. A. Peck. In making the motion the speakers congratulated Sir George Gibbons upon his knighthood and upon the distinguished services he had rendered Canada and the Empire.

HERE'S A SECRET FOR EVERY WOMAN

Madame Joseph Lavallee Tells Of Her Health and Happiness

Was troubled with aches and pains and anxiety till she tried Dodd's Kidney Pills — Now well and healthy.

Notre Dame de Buckland, Bellechasse Co., Que., Feb. 10.—(Special.)—"I am sixty-six years of age and I owe my good health to Dodd's Kidney Pills." That's the answer Madame Joseph Lavallee, the kindly, cheery old matron, makes to all who enquire how and why she is so energetic and active at her advanced age.

"Before using Dodd's Kidney Pills," Madme Lavalle continues, "my head and back ached. I was always trouble with my heart, too, and that made me anxious. Then I heard of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and I sent for six boxes, which did the work. I am well and healthy as you see."

Madame Lavallee simply discovered the secret of health for women. For every woman's health depends on the Kidneys, and there is only one sure cure for diseased Kidneys — Dodd's Kidney Pills. Thousands of Canadian women are healthy and happy because they have used them. Thousands of other women are weak and suffering simply because they have neglected to do what Madame Lavallee has done.

"THE LOTTERY MAN".

"The Lottery Man" has been one of the chief topics of conversation in New York for the past winter. As comedies go, "The Lottery Man," the latest play by Rida Johnson Young, is regarded as one of the purest examples of humour the American stage has seen since the days that one's grandparents used to laugh over pieces which were free from taint. The Messrs. Shubert "led off" this past season by producing this comedy and they were repaid for their venture a thousand fold. Visitors to New York must have brought back the news of the play. A distinguished Buffalonion, after witnessing a performance of the piece at the Bijou in New York, wrote: "I venture to say that if you see "The Lottery Man" in New York you will see it again when it visits your home town."

The original company and production is now being sent on todr by the Shuberts and the first appearance in this city will occur at the Grand Theatre next Wednesday, Feb. 15th. Seat sale opens Monday.

THE INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION

crop competition the first year the contest was held, last year there were 210 entries. He also referred to a couple of competitions, which a prominent speaker at the Toronto convention stated were very popular in England at the various country fairs.

One was a horseshoeing contest, and the other a milking contest. He suggested that they might be adopted here, with success. Reference was also made to the Government grant to fall fairs. Under the present conditions the largest sum that any one society could receive in the form of a grant, was $800. An endeavour was made recently to lower this sum to $500, but had failed.

Mr. J. J. Turner then described some interesting events which took place at the recent Toronto convention. One pleasing feature was the election of two Peterborough gentlemen, Mr. Robert Leary and Mr. Collins to 2nd Vice President and Auditor of the Fairs' Association, respectively.

There were over 400 delegates and a great many interesting discussions took place, one important one was the abolition of the Midway. Mr. J. J. Turner contended that the cutting out of the Midway would decrease the attractive merits of the Fair; also the revenue. Another subject of interest was that of "Grounds and Buildings," the advisability of adopting tents or canvas covered sheds to replace some of the dilapidated buildings which now decorate some of our fair grounds; that is providing a sufficient sum of money was not forthcoming to provide more substantial structures. It was also suggested that Peterborough might adopt the above plan in the event of purchasing new Fair grounds.

Mr. Collins also had some interesting remarks to make regarding the convention.

President Leary took occasion here to remark that one radical change he would like to see take place next year is that they start the programme on time.

Another suggestion which was put forward, and received unanimously by those present was to the effect that a banquet be held at some future date, in which the members of the Industrial Exhibition, the City and County Councils would take part. After a lengthy discussion it was decided to hold the banquet in the National Hotel on Tuesday, March 14th. It was also decided to secure the services, if possible, of J. N. Simmons, President of the Fairs' Association, and J. Lockie Wilson, to speak at the banquet.

The various committee for the year 1911 were then appointed:

Executive Committee — Messrs. J. J. Turner, Conway, Denne, Story, Cruikshanks, Glover, Lang, Moore, Collins, McWilliams, Dr. King, Oke, Elliott, and President Leary.

Speeding in the Ring — Messrs. Munro, Denison and Dr. King.

Light Horses—Messrs. Elliott, Story Cruikshanks.

Heavy Horses — Messrs. Stewart, Denne, Deyell, Cox.

Cattle—Messrs. Collins, Redmond, Staples, Scott, Moore.

Sheep — Messrs. Brown and Milburn.

Swine — Messrs. Vance, Young, Staples.

Poultry—Messrs. Baptie, Lang.

Agricultural Dept.—Ald. Buller, Messrs. Scott and Oke.

Dairy—Messrs. Gillespie, Oke,

Fine Arts—Messrs. Glover, McWilliams.

Domestic — Ald. Buller, Messrs. Phelan and Brown.

Finance—Messrs. Glover, Conway, J. J. Turner.

Subscription committee — Messrs. Cruikshanks, Denne, McWilliams, Leary, Story, King, Elliott.

Amusement Committee — Messrs. Turner, Oke, Glover.

Committee of Renting Privilege — Messrs. Turner, Conway.

Printing Committee—Messrs. Conway, Oke, Glover.

Reception Committee—Mr. Phelan, Ald. Brown, Buller, Mr. Eastwood.

The President requested that the committees present their report at the next general meeting, which will probably be held on the 14th of March, previous to the banquet.

The meeting then adjourned.

A COMPLIMENT

For the Cressman Store from the Dry Goods Review.

The Dry Goods Review contains a very interesting article descriptive of the plan adopted by Mr. J. C. Edwards, window trimmer and advertising manager of A. W. Cressman's in regard to making the store entrance effective as an advertising medium. The Review explains the method used by Mr. Edwards and illustrates the systm by two splendid cuts. The article is vxery complimentary to Mr. Edwards and to the system he has arranged so successfully.

Imitation Cough Cures

Is an Imitation Cough Medicine Good Enough for Your Children?

When you are sick and send for the doctor you don't want him to send a young medical student he has in his office. You would rather have the young fellow experiment on somebody else.

No more do you want imitations of the medicine you know to be of proven value in the cure of disease.

The remarkable success of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine in the cure of croup, bronchitis and colds has proven too great a temptation to imitators. They expect you to take chances with their medicines because the price is a few cents less.

Imitations are never sold on merit, but depend on the merit of the article they imitate. You don't want to be experimented on, and for this reason will insist on seeing the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author, on the bottle you buy.

As it is made of simple ingredients of proven value, it is well suited for as a treatment for children. That it is effective in the cure of croup bronchitis, whooping cough and the most severe coughs and colds is attested by its many years of continued success and enormous sales. 25 cents, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

TO-DAY'S MARKET

The market this morning was largely attended, the fine condition of the weather and the good roads tending to bring the people out. A splendid class and a large quantity of everything was put on. The prices were moderate and the demand was great. The prices were as follows:

MILITARY HAPPENINGS

The semi-annual regimental meeting of the officers of the 3rd Prince of Wales Canadian Dragoons, will be held in the Queen's hotel, Port Hope on Tuesday afternoon next. The reason the meeting is being held in Port Hope is owing to the fact that many of the officers of the regiment reside in the towns along the lake front. Last year the semi-annual meeting of the regiment was held in Peterborough.

o—o—o

The annual meeting of the officers of the 40th regiment of Northumberland was held last night in Campbellford. The meeting was followed by a military ball.

o—o—o

Two important changes in the militia establishment are announced in general orders. The first is the disbanding of the first Prince of Wales Fusiliers of Montreal, with a view to its reorganization; the other is the sanctioning of the creation of a Highland Regiment at Vancouver, to be known as the 72nd Highlanders of Canada.

The first case will involve a very considerable reorganization. It is the fact that the old Sixth Fusiliers and the First Prince of Wales Regiment were some ten years ago in a state of disorganization, and were united in an attempt to secure harmony, but apaprently this did not succeed.

There are now five Highland regiments in Canada, the Vancouver regiment will be the sixth, and it ought to have better promise of prosperity than that at Winnipeg, because they can wear kilts all the year round in Vancouver, and they can't in Winnipeg.

o—o—o

Word has been received that arrangements have been made for the sailing of the contingent of Canadian soldierswho will represent the Dominion at the Coronation of King George. The contingent will leave on the Empress of Ireland on June 2, and will return on the Empress of Britain on the last day of that month.

o—o—o

As far as local military authorities know the contingent will be composed of about seven hundred men, chosen from the different Canadian regiments, from Vancouver to Halifax. The Government is behind the venture, and will stand all the expenses.

o—o—o

The 3rd Dragoons ,the 24th Field Battery, and the 57th Regiment will be represented on this occasion. The selection of the men will be made at an early date.

HARD ON THE GIRLS

Russian Coming to Work in Canada Wants to Know if There are any Good-Looking Girls in Canada

LONDON, FEB. 8—Col. Gartshore, manager of the McClary Manufacturing Company, last week received a letter from Russia, which throws some light on the ways of certain men, and also shows that human nature is pretty much the same the world over.

When the letter was received the Colonel bruhsed up his Russian, but was unable to read the missive with any degree of satisfaction. Then he took it to a number of employees who formerly lived on the "Little White Father," but they could not quite explain it, although they could read it to their own satisfaction.

Finally the Colonel sent the letter to Montreal, where it was deciphered by means of an official of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Here's how it sounded:

HARD ON THE GIRL

"McClary Manufacturing Company, London, Ont.

"Dear Sirs,—I have received letters from some of my relatives and friends in Canada, a number of whom are in the employ of your company, and they all say that they are doing well. Could you give me a position if I went to London?

"There are only two places in Russia where you can live comfortably—in the army or in jail. I make about $12 a month here, and would like to get to Canada.

"Shall I bring my sweetheart with me, or are there any good-looking girls in Canada?

"My girl is pretty, but I won't bother bringing her out if there are any good-looking girls in London, so that I can marry one. We hear a lot in Russia about Canada, and as I have completed my term in the army, I am at liberty to leave the country.

"If I do say it myself, I am good-looking and have always ahd the reputation of getting along well with the ladies; so that I wish you would let me know if I can get a job—and don't ofrget about the girls."

The Colonel did not say what the answer to the letter will be.

NEW TILE FLOOR

In Yeates Brothers' Shoe Shine Parlours

Messrs. Yeates Brothers, the proprietors of the splendidly furnished shoe shine parlours on George St., have just added to the appearance of their establishment by the installing of a very handsome tile floor, which is a great improvement, and has been much admired by those who have seen it. The work was done by the Coughlin Monument Works, and is a credit to that well-known firm.

YESTERDAY IN HOUSE

Col. Sam Hughes Rebuked by Conservative Members—Makes a Tirade Against the Clergy

A WARM DEBATE

Ottawa, Feb. 11.—The chief incident of the Commons' sitting yesterday, was an attack by Col. Sam Hughes on an Ottawa clergyman, Rev. J. W. H. Milne, and the Ottawa Ministerial Association. A fortnight or so ago, Col. Hughes, in the House, accused Rev. Dr. Macdonald of The Globe of being in the pay of a peace society in Boston, whose prepaganda was reciprocity, and the colonel declared that Dr. Macdonald had advocated that doctrine for the association. Col. Hughes objected to this as being inimical to the best interests of Canada. Mr. Milne was alleged to have preached in his church, in Ottawa, a sermon condemnatory of Col. Hughes, although he did not mention him by name. However, Col. Hughes stated that many members of Mr. Milne's congregation had assured him that the sermon was directed against him. Accordingly he retaliated.

He described Mr. Milne as a Liberal party-heeler, that after declaring in 1905 that the Ross Government of Ontario should be defeated, he appeared on the Ross platform in Ottawa; that just before the provincial elections he invited Rev. Dr. Macdonald to preach in his church, but the leading members of his congregation refused to allow him to occupy the pulpit; that Mr. Milne had, supplied to the officials of the Liberal Association a list of his congregation with their political faith designated.

The Ministerial Association took the matter up and passed a resolution declaring that every statement made by Col. Hughes was false, and expressed implicit confidence in Mr. Milne.

This resolution was the cause of Col. Hughes' statement to the House yesterday. He re-affirmed all he had previously said, and offered to produce affidavits in support of his charges against Mr. Milne. He demanded that the Ministerial Association take the matter up again, and in order that there should be the fullest enquiry, he offered to sign the Hansard report of his speech, so that they could proceed against him.

Towards the end of his speech, which lasted for over an hour, Col. Hughes made a somewhat general attack on the clergy of various denominations, particularly the Roman Catholic Church. He said of course he excepted the many noble men in all branches of the Christian Church.

This provoked a warm rejoinder from the Conservative benches.

A. C. Macdonnel (South Toronto), who said he had no concern with the comments that had been made upon Mr. Milne's conduct, but he could not sit and hear the attack upon clergymen generally. Col. Hughes had gone out of his way to do so, and his references to Roman Catholic clergymen were unnecessary and gratuitous. He could permit him to state without challenge that humanity had been cursed by them, and he entirely disassociated himself from the remarks made by Col. Hughes.

David Henderson (Halton), Conservative, concurred in the sentiments expressed by Mr. Macdonnel, and declared that he was not in sympathy with discussions of this kind in the House of Commons.

On the Liberal side, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux and H. H. Miller of South Grey, also spoke in condemnation of the general attack on the clergy made by Col. Hughes. Mr. Miller talked sarcastically of Col. Hughes' work in South Africa, to which the colonel replied that it was the privilege of every coward to sneer at every man who went to South Africa. There the incident ended.

Shortly before adjournment a contretemps occurred between J. W. Maddin (S. Cape Breton) and D. D. MacKenzie (N. Cape Breton.)

Mr. Maddin stated that Mr. MacKenzie had been responsible for the appointment of a large number of fisheries officers in his county, who received pay for the supervision of fisheries on streams that did not exist, at least during a part of the season.

Mr. McKenzie, replying, said that the statement was false, and a lie.

In less time than it takes to relate the circumstance, the few members in the House were roaring at the top of their voices. When the Deputy Speaker called upon Mr. MacKenzie to retract, he said that he would not do so were he outside the House. Subsequently the Opposition members expressed their disapproval of Mr. MacKenzie's form of retraction, and various points of order was raised and debated with heat.

Finally Mr. MacKenzie satisfied the House that he had withdrawn the remark, and peace was restored.

Don't Want Foreign Funds.

Pekin, China, Feb. 11.—Indications are not wanting in these days of the growing hostility throughout the country, not only to the granting of foreign railway concessions, but even to obtaining money from abroad for the construction of these lines which the Government is anxious to build.

The student body of the Province of Kinkiang has issued what amounts to a proclamation practically threatening the Government with war should further loans be arranged with foreigners.

NOMINATION TROUBLES.

School Trustees Are Hard to Get In Some Places.

Toronto, Feb. 11.—Rural municipal and school trustee election difficulties were discussed by the Ontario Legislature yesterday afternoon.

T. E. Bradburn, West Peterboro (Con.), moved the second reading of his bill to amend the School Act in the direction of stiffening the conditions of the nomination proceedings.

Hon. Dr. Pyne, Minister of Education, said that while the present regulations allowed some latitude, it would be unwise to change them as suggested owing to the difficulties in many rural school districts of securing ratepayers who were willing to take the position of school trustees.

Mr. Bradburn, in deference to Hon. Dr. Pyne's views, withdrew his bill. He, however, fared better with his bill to amend the Municipal Act, which elicited a few words of commendation from Hon. W. J. Hanna.

The Provincial Secretary said that Mr Bradburn's motion contained about half a dozen suggestions which might be considered in the municipal committee. The clause which provided that some officer other than the mayor should be qualified to sign debenture coupons was worthy of consideration, as it certainly was a big task to sign innumerable debenture coupons several times a year.

A. B. Thomson, Centre Simcoe, moved the second reading of his bill to place township elections on the same basis as other municipalities.

Hon. A. G. MacKay, Opposition leader, objected to the bill as too drastic for present conditions in many parts of the province, especially in sparsely settled sections.

Sir James Whitney said that he agreed with his honored friend, the leader of the Opposition, with respect to the bill for what might be very nice for the city and town might be very inconvenient and uncomfortable out in the country.

Mr. Thomson said that he did not introduce the bill with any idea of forcing it upon the rural municipalities, but had brought it in at the request of several municipalities in his riding.

Sir James Whitney said that the great Judge Richards once said that "the hard cases make bad laws." Lawmakers were but human, and it was impossible to make a law which would work to perfection absolutely in all cases without exception, but in view of Mr. Thompson's explanation the bill might go to the municipal committee for a consideration of the difficulty complained of.

W. T. Nickle, Kingston (Con.), moved the second reading of his bill to amend the Public Health Act. The bill places the control of locations for the storage of rags and bones in the hands of the municipalities. An outbreak of smallpox appeared to be traceable in one instance to the improper storage of infected rags.

Sir James Whitney said that the bill might be reported upon to see whether or not the matter was already covered by the Public Health Act.

When Hon. J. S. Duff's bill respecting veterinary surgeons was read a second time, Hon. A. G. Mackay repeated the criticism that it raised the witness' fee of veterinary experts to one dollar in excess of other experts.

The Minister of Agriculture said that this would all be adjusted as the other statutes were revised.

Several incorporation bills were on the motion of Hon. I. B. Lucas given their second reading, also Hon. Frank Cochrane's aid to drainage bill.

Sir James Whitney's Factories Act amendment bill was read a second time.

Carload of Liquor Seized.

Toronto, Feb. 11.—The biggest single seizure of liquor ever made in Northern Ontario was made by the provincial police near Cochrane, early yesterday morning. It consisted of a carload of the forbidden goods, 150 cases of whisky and the rest beer. The shipment was obviously intended for distribution among the blind-piggers in the district. The constables had a tip that a large shipment was coming and to get it they had to lie in the woods for two nights with the temperature at about forty below zero.

Word of the seizure was sent to the Provincial Secretary yesterday morning, and he immediately conferred with his deputy, S. A. Armstrong, Eudo Saunder, chief license officer, and Joseph Rogers, superintendent of Provincial Police. The Department is putting up a strong fight against the importation of liquor into the prohibited districts and every possible device has been adopted to evade the police. Liquor has been shipped in as gasoline and every other commodity. The idea of sending in a whole carload, which would be sealed, is a new idea. Only the bare report of the seizure has been sent to headquarters and it is not known where the car was shipped from. Sealed cars like that cannot be examined by the T. & N. O. officials, and it is now the work of the license department to find out who the shippers were.

FRUIT GROWERS AT OTTAWA.

They Demand That Clauses In Treaty Be Reconsidered.

Ottawa, Feb. 11.—Fully 1,500 fruit and vegetable growers flooded the House of Commons yesterday to present their memorial in opposition to the proposed lowering of the tariff barriers against American products. They represented widely separated parts of Ontario.

Although the largest contingent hailed from the Niagara peninsula, there were many representatives also from Halton, Essex and the vicinity of Toronto. The Quebec farmers were also represented.

The deputation was introduced by W. O. Sealey, M.P., and in addition to the Premier and Hon. W. S. Fielding, Mr. Borden and Hon. G. E. Foster with many other members of Parliament were present.

The memorial was read by Mr. Johnston, and after several "whereases," it said:

"We would, therefore, most earnestly and respectfully request that your Government may, after due consideration of the points we have ventured to bring to your notice, and after full enquiry into all the conditions, reconsider the clauses referring to the interchange of fresh fruits and vegetables, and that you may then be enabled to place our industry on a commensurate footing with its great importance to the development of this country."

It seemed, said Mr. Johnston, that, though the interests of the grain growers had been looked after, those of the fruit growers had somehow been overlooked. The agreement as it stood would mean the ruin of this industry.

In his reply to the deputation, Sir Wilfrid said it was impossible to frame a tariff that would please everybody in the country. The western provinces demanded free fruit, and their demand was a reasonable one. All classes and industries had to be prepared to make some sacrifices to the common good. He was afraid the fruit growers had come too late to have anything done.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

James Conmee, M.P., is reported as progressing favorably.

British Unionists cannot agree as to line of action in regard to veto.

Starvation threatens two million Chinese unless immediately relieved.

Engineer Earith was arrested in connection with the train collision near Paris.

Mr. Richard Hazleton, M.P., has been unseated in North Louth on petition of Mr. T. M. Healy, K.C.

It is said the C.P.R. will establish a steamship line from St. John and Halifax to the West Indies, calling also at Boston.

Ford Teeples and John McCoy, two trappers near Charlton, have been missing for two weeks, and it is feared some disaster has overtaken them.

A complete inventory of the goods taken in the robbery of the home of Charles G. Roebling, Trenton, N.J., on Wednesday, shows about $25,000 worth of jewelry missing.

The new 50,000 ton Cunard Line steamship which is being built at Clyde Bank, Scotland, will be named Aquitania. It is estimated that the vessel will cost $10,000,000.

All the fishermen who had been adrift for several days on an ice floe outside Bjorko Sound, Finland, and for whose safety grave fears were felt, got ashore yesterday near Yamburg.

Dr. E. G. Janeway, credited with saving the life of Rudyard Kipling in New York in 1909, died at his home near Summit, N.J., yesterday, in his 79th year. He also attended McKinley at the last.

The Minister of Militia states that outside the appointment of Lieut.-Col. H. H. McLean, as commander, there had been absolutely no names definitely decided upon for positions on the coronation contingent.

Four foreigners were arrested early yesterday in the Italian quarter of Philadelphia on the charge of counterfeiting. It is alleged the prisoners made and circulated spurious silver dollars. They were selling 100 bad dollars for $5.

Shot a Burglar.

Sydney, N.S., Feb. 11.—Louis Sodoisky, a Hebrew, put two bullets into Antonio Arialook, a Polander, yesterday. Sodoisky found a man entering his house through a window early yesterday morning, holding a glittering object like a revolver in his hand. Sodoisky secured his own revolver, and thinking to scare the intruder, fired twice. Both shots took effect, one entering the hand and the other breaking one hand. Sodoisky was the first to acquaint the authorities of the affray. He was released on $1,000 bail.

Seek Power to Extradite Poachers.

Montreal, Feb. 11.—At yesterday's session of the North American Fish and Game Protective Association, Hon. W. C. Grimmer, surveyor-general, of New Brunswick; Hon. C. R. Devlin, Minister of Colonization, Mines and Fisheries for Quebec, and Hon. Dr. J. O. Reaume, Minister of Public Works and Fisheries for Ontario, were yesterday morning appointed a committee to look into the matter of extraditing poachers from one province to another, and to arrange for legislation.

Accused of Infanticide.

Collingwood, Feb. 11.—Pearl Smith, 18 years of age, was arrested Thursday night by Chief Wilde, charged with taking the life of the infant found frozen to death in the west end of the town on Saturday last.

Twenty-Nine Drowned.

CONVENTION TO BE HELD

Liberals Will Meet in March—Platform of the Party is to be Arranged and Revised

LEADERS ARE BUSY

Toronto, Feb. 11.—According to some of those who are discussing the matter, the arrangements are well under way for an Ontario Reform convention at Massey Hall, early in March, says a Toronto morning paper. The promoters expect an attendance of 2,500 accredited delegates.

H. M. Mowat, K.C., president of the Ontario Reform Association, and F. S. Mearns, president of the Toronto Reform Association, are taking an active part in the arrangements, backed by Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Railways, and Hon. A. G. MacKay, Opposition leader in the Ontario Legislature.

If the views of the progressive element among the young Liberals are crystalized into form and adopted, the planks of the new Ontario Reform platform will be:

Proportional representation.

Local option by municipalities respecting the taxation of improvements.

Abolition of the three-fifths clause.

Extension of the present municipal woman's suffrage.

Great activity is being manifested at the new offices of the Toronto Reform Association, in the Forum Building. This has been accelerated by the likelihood of an early dissolution on the reciprocity issue.

A. E. Hacker, organizer for the Toronto district, has a clerical staff busily employed, and there is an evident determination on the part of the association to be ready to put up a stiff fight in the Toronto ridings.

New Hospital.

Berlin, Ont., Feb. 11.—The report of Dr. Bruce Smith, read at the meeting of the Berlin-Waterloo Hospital Board last night, recommended the erection of a new wing in order to provide proper accommodation for the increasing number of patients. Dr. Smith also stated that the operating room was one of the poorest in Ontario. Steps will be taken immediately to have a new wing erected. Berlin Council will be asked to issue debentures to the amount of $10,000; Waterloo Town $3,000, and Waterloo County $3,000. There is at present $1,230 in the bank bequeathed by the late Dr. (I. H. Bowlby, to be used in the erection of a new operating room, and $1,000 raised during the last two years, to be used towards financing the new wing.

Mormon Leader Dead.

Independence, Mo., Feb. 11.—Richard Hill, leader of the "Church of Christ," commonly known as the "Hedrickite" branch of the Mormon Church, died at his home here yesterday. As leader of the sect Hill was guard-in-chief of the famous "Temple Lot" here, which was set apart more than 75 years ago by Joseph Smith, original prophet and founder of the Mormon Church, as the site of a future great temple of the Lord.

The "Temple Lot" passed into Gentile hands, from which it was again obtained by the sub-sect. Hill succeeded Hedrick. He was born in Gloucester, England, in 1827.

New School Board System.

Quebec, Feb. 11.—The Quebec royal commission on education has recommended the creation of a central commission of twelve members, instead of the parochial system obtaining, and a separate English Catholic board. The members also suggest that parents of each district be called into consultation with the central commission at stated intervals.

There are thirty different school commissions in the city of Montreal at present.

Conspiracy to Smuggle Jewels.

New York, Feb. 11.—Wm. Rind, first officer of the American liner St. Paul, and W. C. Warner, formerly a shoemaker, were arrested by special treasury agents late yesterday, charged with complicity in a conspiracy to smuggle jewelry into the United States. The specific charge is that Rind and Warner brought in a five stone diamond ring on Jan. 1 without payment of duty, and sold it here.

A Poet In Prison.

Chatham, Feb. 11.—Thos. G. Morehead, now in Kent County jail waiting trial on three charges of fraud, is a poet. He is busy writing all the time in his cell, and sends out contributions to a number of American magazines.

PURITY FLOUR

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool Wheat Futures Close Higher, Chicago Lower—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 10.—The market was firm at the opening with offerings light and values were ½c higher and following opening there was good support in May. Buying was due to the light shipments from Argentine and especially to the United Kingdom, no increase in the Argentine visible, firmness in Buenos Ayres at the close yesterday and the fact that Plata offers are 2d dearer. Receipts for three days are light and spot markets firm with an improved demand. The continent is making enquiry for cargoes off coast. The firmness in Winnipeg was also a factor for the steadiness.

CHICAGO, Feb. 10.—Advices to the effect that the reciprocity agreement could pass the senate on a forced vote depressed the wheat market to-day. Flattening out of cash demand further discouraged the bulls, and so did poor trade in flour. Closing prices were weak at a net decline of 1⅛c to 1⅜c to 1⅝c. Corn finished ⅛c to ¼c, to ⅜c to ⅝c under last night. Oats off ⅛c to ⅛c, and provisions 12½c to 30½c down.

Decline to Release Him.

Albany, N.Y., Feb. 11.—Unconvinced that Edward E. Grimmell, a third term convict in Clinton prison, has been cured of his criminal tendencies by surgery, the State Parole Board has refused to parole him, although Governor White, before retiring from office, gave the board the authority by commuting his sentence.

Grimmell's skull was fractured when a boy of 14 during a quarrel with a playmate, and the claim was made that the injury was a potent factor in developing his criminal career. In March, 1909, Dr. Dewitt G. Wilcox of Buffalo, with an assistant, went to the prison and performed an operation with a view to restoring Grimmell to his normal state of mind.

Frequenters Will Be Fined.

Hamilton, Feb. 11.—Hereafter when hotel bars are found open after hours, the men caught will be prosecuted as well as the proprietor.

Yesterday morning the magistrate fined Edward Duffy of the Northern Hotel $20, and a dozen men found in his bar by the police last Sunday $10 each.

"I am making the fine in the proprietor's case as low as possible, and raising it on the frequenters, because if they did not patronize these places the law would not be broken," said the magistrate.

Fifteen Miners Meet Death.

Trinidad, Col., Feb. 11.—The bodies of four shot-firers had been removed from the Colsidale Mine wrecked by an explosion on Thursday night, five more bodies had been discovered and six were still unaccounted for last night. A. E. Suton, assistant superintendent, in charge of the rescue work, was overcome with gas and was carried to the surface. He probably will die.

Supt. Baileas declared yesterday he believed the explosion was due to the accidental discharge of blasting powder. Little hope is entertained of finding the remaining six men alive. All the dead and missing are foreigners.

Could Smuggle Diamonds.

Portland, Me., Feb. 11.—An indictment charging Theodore F. Abildgaard of Washburn, a U. S. customs inspector, with scheming to defraud the U. S. Government by a plan to smuggle diamonds from Canada, was reported by the grand jury of the U. S. District Court, which arose yesterday. It is alleged Abildgaard wrote a Chicago mail order jewelry firm suggesting that he could get diamonds across the Canadian border into the United States free of duty. He pleaded not guilty to the indictment, and the case was continued until April.

Ancient Coach Prey to Flames.

London, Feb. 11.—The ancient royal glass coach, used for two centuries in the coronation ceremonies, was destroyed by fire yesterday, together with the queen's barouche, another vehicle used on state occasions, when fire swept the plant of a carriage builder in the west end, where both were being renovated.

The historic old carriages were being furbished up for the coronation of King George in June. The glass coach was 200 years old.

Attempted Murder Is Charged.

Sherbrooke, Feb. 11.—S. Guillemette of Lake Woron was brought to Sherbrooke jail yesterday charged with an attempt at murder. He was trying, it is alleged, to force an entry into a store, and when disturbed by Mr. Brier, the proprietor, shot at the latter with a Snyder rifle. The bullet just grazed his head. The burglar then entered the store and carried away a quantity of flour.

In No Danger.

Washington, Feb. 11.—The crew and cargo of the British bark Caithnessshire, which is stranded off San Salvador, are in no danger, according to a wireless telegram received by the Navy Department yesterday from the scout cruiser Birmingham, which went to the assistance of the vessel. It will be impossible to save the hull of the ship, however, the despatch added.

"Condor Charlie" Retires.

London, Feb. 11.—Admiral Lord Charles William de la Poer Beresford was sixty-five years old yesterday, and by virtue of the age limit clause, is retired from the active list of the British navy. He has held no appointment since his surrender, on March 24, 1909, of the command of the Channel fleet.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA AND BRONCHITIS

Brought Mrs. Baker to Death's Door. Father Morrisey's No. 10 Saved Her.

Of the many hundreds of cures wrought by Father Morrisey's No. 10 (Lung Tonic) few are more remarkable than the saving of the life of Mrs. John S. Baker, of 164 Roskland Road (North End), St. John, N.B. She wrote on Oct. 16, 1909:

"I wish to express my gratitude that I am living to-day, saved from the grave by Father Morrisey's No. 10 (Lung Tonic). This time last year I had pleuro-pneumonia and bronchitis, and had been given up to die, and had my lungs tapped in the City Hospital, and never expected to walk again; I was continually getting worse every day. I came home from the hospital, and everyone was watching for me to die. I tried everything but there seemed to be no cure for me.

"I began taking Father Morrisey's No. 10, and the second day I could eat without pain. I used 22 bottles of No. 10, as I was run down right into consumption, and for six months was just a shadow until I began to use it, and now I am in good health, and surprised most of my neighbors by gaining so quickly. I feel it my duty to publish it everywhere I can, as with all I can say I cannot recommend it too highly—it was a life saver to me, and I am very thankful to recommend it, as it is worth all it is said."

Father Morrisey's No. 10 is very different from the many preparations that simply relieve a cough. No. 10 relieves the cause of the cough, restores the membranes of throat and lungs to a healthy condition, and tones up the whole system, giving strength to resist future attacks.

GRILLERS GAVE FRONTENACS A HARD BATTLE ON THEIR OWN ICE LAST NIGHT

Score was 7-1 in Favour of the Junior Champions who Led at the Half by 3 Goals to Nothing—Peterborough Youngsters Made Fine Showing Away From Home.

COUGHLIN WAS HURT

The Grillers are made of the right stuff. Defeated on their own ice on Tuesday night by the Frontenacs, the local youngsters went down to Kingston last night and on the big rink and before a crowd of two thousand fans, gave the junior champions a better battle on their own stamping grounds than they did here. The score at the finish was 7 to 1 and at half time 3 to 0 in favour of Kingston. This in the face of the repeatedly heard statement that the Frontenacs would win by 10 or 15 goals at home and that they would simply swamp the Grillers. The Peterborough "kids" left with the determination that they would hold the Frontenacs closer than they did here and they succeeded in their object, giving the Easterners the hardest battle they have had this season. The Grillers played fine hockey all through the chapter and with more accurate shooting would have been beaten by a much more narrow margin, as they had a whole lot of the play, and kept the "little" Frontenacs on the jump throughout. The Grillers were weakened too by an injury to Jerry Coughlin, their star rover, who was out of the game for some time and his loss was severely felt. They played good combination and checked closely and consistently with the result that the Frontenacs had difficulty in breaking away. At that two of Kingston's scores were very fluky.

The Grillers deserve the greatest of credit for the hard game they gave the Frontenacs on their own ice after getting beat here. A number of people who bet that the Frontenacs would win by ten or fifteen or even as high as twenty, found their mistake in their judgment in regard to the Grillers costly. It is unfortunate that the local juniors were called upon to play Frontenacs so comparatively early in the season. Had they first been drawn against some of the other teams left in the running they would have been in much better shape to meet the experienced and well trained Frontenacs. At that they earned the respect of the Frontenacs and of the Kingston fans by their good work last night, and by the hard game they gave the junior champions at home. A Kingston despatch says:

Kingston, Feb. 10. — By the score of 7 to 1 the junior Frontenacs won the group here from Peterborough to night. The game was fast and exciting. Owing to an injury to his eye, Brouse of the Frontenacs did not play but was replaced by Leo Williams, a brother of the famous Jack. It was a gruelling contest and the Frontenacs worked hard for all they got. Davidson, Millan and Boyer played the game of the night. Reynolds starred for Peterborough. The half time score was 3 to 0.

Referee, Ed. Wettlauffer, Berlin.

MUCH INTEREST IN TUESDAY'S BIG GAME

The fans have taken a great deal of interest in the announcement that the fast T.A.A.C. team will be here on Tuesday night for a game with the Peterborough intermediates and there will likely be a big crowd in attendance. The T.A.A.C. team is running neck and neck with the Eaton team for the championship of their senior group and will be a pretty awkward proposition for an intermediate team to handle. The Petes however, will have one of the strongest lineups they have had this season, and, as the players are all in good shape again after the strenuous battle with Trenton, they will undoubtedly give the Toronto senior team a hard battle. Heffernan, of the Grillers, will be used at coverpoint for this game. The Peterborough team will practise on Monday night and a full turnout is expected.

PROFESSIONAL TEAM HERE PLAY ON THURSDAY NIGHT

The first game the Pros. will have at the Brock street rink will be on Thursday night of next week when the Port Hope professional team with Bobby Mercer, Andy Kyle and Company, will be seen in action against Manager Nolan's team. The players here now are Willaim Baker, Bill Lane, formerly of the Toronto Eurekas, Charles Lightfoot, formerly of Stratford, Grant Carmichael, N. Crossett, Wm. Chipchase, Mark Toose and Ben Dusty. The latter was not so badly hurt as reported and arrived home last evening. He will be on the line-up next week, and no doubt will get a big reception from the local fans.

KNOCKOUT BROWN HAD BETTER OF ADDIE WOLGAST

Champion Caught a Tartar When He Tackled New Yorker in a Six Round Bout at Philadelphia.

SIX LIVELY ROUNDS

PHILADELPHIA, FEB. 9.—Lightweight Champion Ad Wolgast's light was dimmed by Knockout Brown of New York here late night. It was only a six-round no-decision affair, but the critics all agree that Brown had all the best of it. He mixed it freely with Wolgast, and landed hard blows on the stomach and head. Wolgast sent back some stingers himself but they did not phase Brown, who kept right on boring in and slamming the "Candy Kid" champion. It was a fierce, hard mill, and the 500 New Yorkers who came over and bet their money at 8 to 5 collected on the verdict of the newspapers and other authorities.

Five thousand spectators were in the hall when the star bout began. The men agreed to box under Philadelphia rules, breaking at the order of Referee O'Brien.

Wolgast showed up first. He got practically no applause, but there was a roar when Brown appeared.

Fight by Rounds.

Round One—Brown put left to head Wolgast covered up in a corner and blocked a hard attack. Then Wolgast put a left and right to the stomach. Wolgast ducked away from a hard swing for the jaw. Brown forced him to the ropes and pounded him on the kidney. Brown put a hard one to the stomach, which made Wolgast clinch. Brown's round.

Round Two—Wolgast put a left on the eye and cut loose with body blows. Brown put in a dozen swings to the head. In a mix-up Wolgast roughed it until the crowd hissed. Wolgast stopped a rush by a short left in the face, but later Brown rushed Wolgast to the ropes and did the bulk of the fighting to the bell. Brown had the round.

Round Three—Wolgast mixing it almost pushed Brown through the ropes. Wolgast and Brown traded wallops to a hard clinch. Brown put left and right to the face and a swing to neck. Wolgast was driven to the ropes, but came back and ran into clinch. In a fierce rally Brown outfought his man. Brown had the round.

Brown Strong.

Round Five—Brown swung a left to the eye. Wolgast countered sharply and roughed it in clinches. Brown's nose was bleeding, but he kept on boring in with a fierce assault. They exchanged body blows, and Brown rocked the champion with a left to the jaw. Then he put a left hook in the same place and fought his antagonist to the ropes. When the bell rang Wolgast's mouth was bleeding. Brown's round.

Round six.—Wolgast rushed. Brown stood his ground and slugged him blow for blow. Wolgast roughed it, and the crowd howled. The champion put a hard left to jaw. Brown shook his head and rushed. They got into a rough clinch and Wolgast reached the stomach. Brown bored in, and with a series of swings he made Wolgast hang on. Wolgast then received an uppercut in the mouth and was on the defensive when the bell rang.

It was Brown's fight all the way.

In the preliminaries Digger Stanley, the English bantam champion, and Tommy O'Toole, of Philadelphia, fought six slashing rounds to a draw, while Jim Barry of Chicago bested Joe Jeannette, the big coloured heavy weight.

T. C. S. TEAM WON 5 TO 2

In an exciting game at Brock street rink this afternoon the T. C. S. third team of Port Hope defeated a picked team of local youngsters by 5 goals to 2. It was a splendid exhibition of juvenile hockey and required ten minutes overtime to decide the issue. At half time the Peterborough team was ahead by 1 goal to 0, but they were even up with two goals each when the final whistle sounded. Neither team scored in the first five minutes of overtime, but the Trinity College school youngsters finished with a grand burst and landed three goals, winning the contest. Mr. Will O'Brien refereed the game satisfactorily. There were only three penalties throughout.

THE WEATHER

This date a year ago was the coldest day last winter. Early in the morning of that date the thermometer was down to 26 degrees below zero. To-day is mild and spring-like. Such are the vagaries of our Canadian climate. —W. P.

J. M. GREENE MUSIC CO'S BIG OPENING

"Have you been down to see the splendid new building of the J. M. Greene Music Co., on Charlotte St.?" If not, why not? The new building is certainly a credit to the builders, and to Mr. R. S. Trew, who superintended the work of building. The magnificent array of musical instruments are perfectly in keeping with the splendour of the building. You don't have to buy, you are given a cordial invitation to go and have a look at the building. Mr. Greene welcomes everybody, and takes great pains in showing them around the building. Yesterday and to-day were the two big opening days, and the event was featured by immense throngs of people. There were at least 500 people visited the buildings yesterday, and this morning the exhibitors were actually besieged by hundreds of children, who were there to capture the souvenirs which were given generously to everybody. This morning it was estimated that over 1,000 souvenirs were given away. Besides the regular store staff, there were several prominent music dealers present, who took as much pains in showing the people the different attractions, as did the staff themselves. Among the more prominent of the outside exhibitors were the following: The General Manager of the Heintzman Piano Co., Mr. Pike, assistant manager of the Heintzman Co., F. W. Bull, Secretary Treasurer of the Williams' Piano Co.; and Mr. C. H. Bull, travelling representative of the Williams Co., Mr. H. Y. Claxton, manager of the small goods department of the R. S. Williams Co. Toronto. The New Scale Williams and the different lines of the Heintzman pianos were exhibited.

In addition to the many attractions were a display of eighteen old violins from the R. S. Williams Co. One of these is a genuine old Amati and is valued at $3,500, and another valued at $1,000.00. Several bows were also shown, some valued at $100.00 each. These exhibits were in charge of Mr. Claxton.

Any person who has not already visited this store should do so at once, before the outside exhibitors have gone, and see something that is not seen in Peterborough every day. Go and have a look, and when you go once you will go again. Everybody is welcome, and you don't have to buy. A very large crowd is expected to-night, and preparations have been made to receive them.

PETERBOROUGH BOYS MEETING WITH SUCCESS

It is always a pleasure to record the success of Peterborough boys in their different spheres of labour, but in the case of former members of the Examiner staff it is even more pleasant to note their progress. Word has been received here that Mr. B. T. Huston, who left the city editorship of the Examiner to become editor of the Canadian Grocer, has now been made manager of that paper, and Mr. Harry Theobald, a former Examiner representative, who is now touring the East in the interest of the MacLean Publishing Company, will be recalled to Toronto to take the editorship of the Grocer. Still another former member of the Examiner staff, Mr. M. J. Hutchinson, has resigned from the MacLean Publishing Company and with Mr. Tobin, the former manager of the Canadian Grocer, has been taken into partnership in the Acton Publishing Company.

Mr. Hawkes and the Reporter.

Extremes meet among newspaper men. Either your reporter has the wisdom of the wise or he is ingenuous to a degree. Against one of the latter type there is a pleasant story.

In the course of his duties, this reporter recently went to see Mr. Arthur Hawkes, the genial Superintendent of Publicity of the Canadian Northern Railway, who is leaving railway work to start "The British News of Canada." The reporter wanted some details of the new paper:

"Well," said Mr. Hawkes, "every nationality in Canada except the English is represented by a special newspaper. The German, the Frenchman, the Icelander in the Northwest, each has his special journal, but the Englishman has no paper devoted to his interests. The Canadian newspaper presupposes a knowledge of Canadian affairs which the Britisher does not possess. Now my paper will keep the Englishman in touch with the Old Country, and at the same time help him to become a good Canadian. Yes," said Mr. Hawkes enthusiastically, "my paper will talk to the Englishman in an accent that he will understand."

"What," said the reporter, "are you going to print the whole paper in the cockney dialect?"

Laying Down the Law.

The Transcript bears witness that before compulsory education took up the rod in Moncton, juvenile society was well—just weeds. The youth of the city frequently stood before the beak in the Police Court. They gamboled—there is no proof that they gambled—in the streets without parental restraint. Curfews are not fashionable nowadays. Neither was compulsory education in Moncton till it was tried out in experiment.

Compulsory education has now had a vogue there for some time. Juvenile crime has decreased — ask Chief Rideout; 2,127 more pupils went to school this year than last in Moncton. They do not fake excuses, as in bygone days. They have developed a wholesome respect for authority which to them does not appear so arbitrary as it used to do; they see reason in discipline, and that is a beautiful sum.

A KNIGHT IN SPAIN

The Sequel to the Dream of Little Miss Mouse.

By KEITH GORDON.

The partition was not very thick, and the girl often heard him whistling or singing in the next room. His repertory was extensive and confusing. "She's the bestest girl that is, and I need her in my bis," would float in to her, followed perhaps by the strains of "Samson et Dalila" or some music equally fine.

One knew the sort of man who would sing coon songs with gusto; also the sort that would hum bits from the grand operas. The puzzling thing was to know what sort of man would take an impartial delight in both. So in the intervals of her work she began to speculate about her unknown neighbor.

At the end of two months she tabulated her knowledge of him. He was gay and debonair. Witness the scrape of song that floated in to her. He was carelessly indifferent to women. This she gleaned from the fact that five days out of seven she could hear him tunefully asserting:

If she be not fair to me,
What care I how fair she be!

He smoked inveterately—a pipe, she fancied. Sometimes the faint, elusive spirit of the thing seemed to float about her hall bedroom, and she sniffed again and again, her small head well in the air, but could never be quite sure. The partition bore her startled scrutiny imperturbably, but—well, she was sure she smelled smoke.

He was about thirty. This she divined from the freshness of his voice and his boyish delight in the chatter of the elderly chambermaid, whose Irish wit would send him into peals of laughter.

Also he was a man of the world, since she heard him come in early many evenings and move about his room as if dressing for dinner. Then at half past 6 or 7 he would go out again, leaving her with an absurd sense of desolation.

They never encountered each other in the halls, much to her satisfaction, but she came to have a very distinct idea of his appearance. He was tall, broad and straight, with a clear cut face and an air of knowing his way about.

"Sure, an' he's a foine gintleman," Maggie informed her once; but, though she might have verified her idea of him, she refrained with a fine sense of personal reserve. Sometimes through the open door she caught a glimpse of his room, and her interested eyes took in the dark green walls, covered with handsome photographs, the low bookcases on either side of the fireplace and the low, broad table with its litter of books and papers.

"It certainly looks as if he were an interesting man," she thought to herself, and thereupon she entered her own room, and, taking out a sheet of paper bearing the mystical heading "My Knight in Spain," she wrote:

"Evidently educated—a college man; profession, law, literature or something of the kind."

"Maggie, is there any one in the next room?" she heard him inquire one Sunday morning. Then in answer to Maggie's muffled reply: "Little Miss Mouse, I should call her. I didn't know there was any one there, though once or twice I've thought I heard some one."

The girl blushed guiltily. Apparently he had no idea how plainly she could hear him. Then she smiled to herself. So he would call her Little Miss Mouse. Well, it was fair enough, since she called him her gentleman of Spain.

For awhile after this she noticed a distinct effort on her neighbor's part to go softly. In the midst of a stave he would cease abruptly, only to begin afresh and stop again with an impatient exclamation, as if he were annoyed at not being able to remember to be quiet. At all of which, in the seclusion of her room, Little Miss Mouse laughed immoderately, though in silence.

Then one morning Maggie found her in bed, her usually pale face flushed, her heavy hair covering the pillow in a tossed and tangled mass.

"It's nothing, but perhaps you'd better get a doctor!" gasped Miss Mouse. "My head's so queer, and, oh, I'm so warm!"

Soon after a serene faced nurse in a striped uniform and white apron was installed in the room, and to her Little Miss Mouse, down with brain fever, talked an unending jargon.

"If you can have a castle in Spain you can certainly have a knight in Spain, can't you?" she demanded over and over again.

"Of course you can," soothed the nurse.

"I'd be very lonely if he vanished, as castles in Spain do," she said at another time, with wistful, puzzled eyes. "You don't think he will vanish, do you? Because I'm all alone here. He's the only person I really know.

"Don't you ever tell, upon your honor," she rambled on. "It's very strange. I don't just understand it, but actually I have never seen him! Can you believe it, I've never seen him, and yet I know him so well? I don't understand it, and my head is splitting. Hold it! Hold it!"

The man in the next room was very quiet these days. From Maggie he had learned of the little artist's illness, and from her also he heard of the strange hallucination about the man in Spain. When she told him he shot a quick, piercing look from his deep set eyes, but evidently there was no connection in her mind between the sick girl's fancy and himself.

Instinctively he knew the truth. "Poor little girl," he mused, "lonely, struggling, with nothing to feed her love of companionship and romance upon but the sense of fellowship with the unseen occupant of the next room! It is well that she hasn't seen this ugly mug of mine," he concluded grimly.

So he fell into the way of stopping to inquire about her of the nurse each morning and then of sending great bunches of violets, upon which the sick girl's half conscious eyes rested later on with dreamy pleasure.

"Who picked them?" were her first intelligent words when the fever left her and she became herself. Then, realizing where she was and what had happened, she laughed weakly and corrected herself, "Who sent them, I mean?"

At the reply a faint color crept into her cheeks, and she murmured something the nurse did not catch.

Then came the days when she sat up, feeling like a new creature come to a new world, though in appearance she was more than ever like a frail child.

"Come in; I think she would like to thank you," said the nurse when one day the man stopped to make his usual inquiry, and a moment later he was standing before Little Miss Mouse, his heart thumping at the gaze of two dark fringed eyes that reminded him of violets.

She stammered out her thanks, scarcely knowing what she said, so great was her astonishment, for, in fact, the knight in Spain, whose face she thought she knew as well as her own, was dark and most uncompromisingly ugly. Besides, he was old—forty if he was a day—and—and—

In another moment her surprise was forgotten. A big, strong hand was holding hers, and the voice that she liked so much was speaking. There was a vibrant tenderness in it that she had never noticed before—that seemed personal, that suggested, outlandish as the idea was, that to her of all the women in the world would he ever speak in just that tone.

* * * * * * * *

It was on their honeymoon that, longing to hear over and over again the beautiful truth, he questioned:

"You're sure you don't regret marrying an ugly brute like me?"

She laughed softly, laying her cheek against his, but she did not speak. With quick pain he pulled the face down where he could look into the depths of those dark fringed eyes. His lips touched her hair, and he murmured brokenly, "Oh, Little Miss Mouse!"

The Meaning of Millions.

In astronomical calculations it is most difficult to grasp the meaning of millions of miles, but some idea in this connection may be gathered from the statement of the time that would be consumed by an express train or the shot from a cannon to cover celestial space. Now, the distance from the earth to the sun is about 92,000,000 miles, and light travelling from the solar luminary comes to us at the rate of 186,700 miles a second in vacuo. It traverses this distance in eight and a quarter minutes, but a railway train proceeding at sixty miles an hour would take 175 years to cover the distance to the sun. The circumference of the ellipse forming the orbit of the earth around the sun is about 577,700,000 miles in length, and the earth covers this distance in 365¼ days, travelling at the rate of 65,910 miles an hour or 1,098 miles a minute, or nearly 1,100 times as fast as a train going at a mile a minute. It is therefore clear that a train proceeding at this speed would require nearly 1,100 years to accomplish the journey around the earth's orbit.—London Tit-Bits.

Hard Penance in Mexico.

The Mexicans are extremely religious, and their faith enters into their daily lives to a remarkable extent. During Holy Week the native women who are anxious to do penance for their sins go on their knees from one shrine to another, devoting hours to the painful task. At this time temporary shrines are set up, and in the remote villages it is no infrequent sight to see half a dozen parties of penitents traveling in this manner over the sharp stones and gravel from one shrine to the other, apparently oblivious to the burning rays of the sun and the discomforts of their progress. Sometimes an attendant spreads a serape or blanket before them to protect their knees, but this is considered to detract from the merit of the penance, and most of the women—it is always the females who undertake the task—go through with it scorning any such protection.—Wide World Magazine.

The Slaves of the Hoop.

Amusement was to be found in the fashions of three centuries ago no less than in those of today. When the Infanta Isabel traveled from Spain to her kingdom of the Netherlands in 1599 nothing (her biographer, Mr. L. Klingenstein, tells us) diverted her so much as the enormous hoops affected by the ladies of Lorraine. "On one occasion, when the infanta and her hostess were forming a procession of ladies, they remained struggling amid a confused mass of 'those devilish farthingales' for more than an hour, while the infanta and these ladies who were with [illegible] powerful defenses were [illegible] out of shape' by [illegible] sisters. Each had three attendants to help her to move her skirt about, and when they sat at a meal two men held the farthingales over the arms of the chair."

Below the Average.

Apropos of loss of friends somebody was saying one day before Morgan, the great calculator of lives, that they had lost so many friends, mentioning the number, in a certain space of time, upon which Morgan, coolly taking down a book from his office shelf and looking into it, said, "So you ought, sir, and three more."—Thomas Moore.

FORD Motor Cars For 1911

The automobile buying public is waking up to the fact that if they want Ford Motor Cars they must get in their orders early.

The Company report that the day after Christmas they received at one mail, orders for 706 cars, all model "T." While the touring car, selling at $975 00 fully equipped was the most popular car, having the largest number of orders out of 706, the other models of cars were by no means slighted and the rumble seat Roadster, new Runabouts and Coupe came in for a large number.

Think of it!—$688,350 worth of business in one day.

So fast have the orders been coming in since the first of the year, that the Company have increased their output for 1911 from 25,000 cars to 37,500.

A satisfied Ford owner breaks into verse and gives expression to his views:—

A SATISFIED OWNER

The Ford car is the best car yet,
I'll tell you again so you won't forget,
It glides along with a contented purr
Open the throttle to use the spurr.
She is off and away, like a thoroughbred—
Read the number behind, she's always ahead.
I have driven mine for two years past,
Run well the first trip, but better the last,
All I have done is give her gas and oil,
Never in the road have I had to toil,
A turn of the handle—the clock is done,
Away on the pleasure of a country run.
She is always ready and willing to see,
In my Ford, the best car the Model T,
The calamity howlers put up a great spiel,
The country's going to hell in an automobile,
The manager said, "Why do you want this loan?
You are acting unwise, you will lose your home."
This kind of talk would do a few years back,
When to purchase an auto took all of your stack.
To prove to you this people have lied,
A few facts here I have supplied.
I've run two years on the same set of tires,
Had no engine trouble, not changed a wire.
Get 25 miles on a gallon of gas,
The juice costs nothing so let that pass.
Things have changed especially the price,
To own an auto don't cut much ice.
I give you my oath, and take it from me
You can't do better: Purchase a Ford,

as Scout Master, filling that position very acceptably. Much credit is due them for the excellent manner in which they had the boys prepared, and they are to be congratulated upon the brilliant success attained by the Scouts. The scene was strikingly natural, all the lights in the room being turned off except the camp fires. This was well arranged. Sticks were piled up and an electric light was placed inside to give it the natural appearance. The tents were placed around the fire and the boys lay down as if to sleep and the whole scene was very realistic. The Scouts sat around the fire and told stories and cracked jokes much to the merriment of the audience. At the closing of the scene, Mr. Miller sang "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground," while the Scouts joined in the chorus. The bugle call from "Napoleon's Last Charge" was well given by Mr. Miller also, and the audience applauded loud and long. During the singing, two sentinels paraded back and forward past the camp fire, making the scene even more true to life.

The boys were members of the Peterborough scouts and were in full scout costume. Those who took part were as follows: Sergeants Alex. Fortye and K. McClelland, Buglers N. Patterson, A. Sharpe and M. Patterson. The other scouts were: Jack Gibson, J. McClelland, J. Gillespie, V. Thorndyke, W. Evans, O. Moore, J. Batten and G. Henry. Too much credit cannot be given the Scouts for the splendid showing they made, and for the success they attained.

The report of the Sunday school was read by Mr. Lees, Superintendent. It was as follows:

Scholars entitled to honourable mention for general proficiency in 1910 are: In Miss Gillespie's class—Nora Vanzant.

MAKE TEETHING PAINLESS

Teething time is always a time of anxiety to mothers. At this time baby becomes cross and nervous. His gums pain him, he is troubled with constipation or diarrhoea, spasms, colic, or convulsions. His little life is in danger unless a medicine is given him to keep his stomach sweet and pure and his bowels regular. Such a medicine is Baby's Own Tablets. Nothing can equal them during the teething period. They have lessened the worries of thousands of mothers. Among them is Mrs. W. A. Yeadon, Halifax, N.S., who writes:—"I have used no other medicine for baby but Baby's Own Tablets and I would not be without them. Last summer baby was greatly troubled with his teeth until I gave him the Tablets. They helped him and now he is a big healthy child." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SUBSTANTIAL SUM

Reaped by the Kings' Daughters From the Barbara Tennant Concert

The King's Daughters reaped a substantial sum from the Barbara Tennant recital last Tuesday. With this we are pleased for the King's Daughters, with Mrs. Hasen Ritchie at their head, are doing a splendid work in alleviating the distress which abounds even in this prosperous City of Peterborough. Miss Tennant is also to be congratulated for the use to which she has put her splendid talents in helping on the work. It will be of interest to the people of Peterborough that the Governor-General and Countess Grey have given their patronage and will honour with their presence a recital at Ottawa, which will be given at an early date.

To Preach At Mark Street

Rev. Jas. Northy of Belfast, Ireland, representing the Irish Protestants, will occupy the pulpit of the Mark St. Methodist church to-morrow morning, and his sermon should be of more than usual interest. No doubt a large congregation will avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing this famous divine, who has been lecturing and preaching in many different cities of the Dominion.

WE DON'T BLAME YOU.

Possibly that friend who smiles at the idea of 30-Day stenography knows no other system, but his or her own. We, too, doubted 30-day Shorthand. Even when convinced that it could be learned in that time we wondered if it was really a good, practical workable system. We don't blame you if you doubt. We know a rigid investigation will convince you, and we think our catalogue will interest you. Moon College, 282-286 Yonge street, Toronto.

ODD CLAIMS

LONDON, FEB. 11.—When a few years ago British employers became liable at law for injuries suffered by employees in the course of their work cartoonists got busy depicting the hired girl gleefully tumbling down stairs with the tea tray or the coal box, secure in the prospect of a long rest and no loss of wages. Householders, of course, cover their risk by insuring each employee against accidents. English courts, as a rule, place a liberal construction on the word accident, and accordingly on the books of the insurance companies may be found many odd claims. Here are a few:

A farmhand was stung by a bee.

A manservant sprained his leg through stamping on a rat.

A coachman coming out of a stable was struck on the face by his master's boot, intended for a cater-wauling cat.

A servant was pricked by a rusty needle while sewing on a button on her employer's clothes.

It is somewhat difficult to imagine that success could attend claims like these.

A servant received a shock through seeing a large Teddy bear when the room was only dimly lighted.

Seat Plan for "Il Trovatore" Opened big This Morning

There was a great demand for seats at the box office this morning for "Il Trovatore,' 'which is to be presented by the Sheenan English Grand Opera Co., at "The Grand" next Tuesday evening, Feb. 14th. Local theatregoers are promised an excellent production of this famous opera as Mr Sheehan has surrounded himself with a company of all star artists from some of the leading theatres of the world. So great was the rush for seats this morning that it was after 11 o'clock before telephone orders could be taken.

Lifting a Child.

"I wish," said the woman who has children of her own, "that women would understand the delicate mechanism of a child. How would they like a giant to come along and suddenly drag them from the ground by one arm, as I have seen so many people do to children? When you're lifting a child lift it evenly by both arms or from the waist. Don't yank it up by a grab at one wrist and then wonder why it cries. It makes me so angry I always want to pull the arm of that inconsiderate woman hard and see if she wouldn't cry too. It's a thing that mothers and aunts and sisters ought to learn."—Philadelphia Times.

THE BADGES FOR THE PETERBORO' BOY SCOUTS

Word has been received from Mr. H. G. Hammond, Provincial Secretary of the Boy Scout Movement, approving most heartily of the system of organization under way here, and further stating that efficiency badges etc., must be obtained from the central office in Toronto, so that a record may be kept of each and to whom awarded. These badges will be placed in stock in a week or ten days. In order to hurry matters the local committee will meet the last of this week and each patrol leader is asked to furnish a list of the members of his patrol, who pledge themselves to act in accordance with the regulations as set down by this committee, to W. J. Neale, Chief Scoutmaster, on or before Thursday afternoon of this week. Mr. Wainwright of the Bank of Ottawa, will deliver the next lecture to the Boy Scouts.

THE MIRTH PROVOKING PLAY

"The Lottery Man" Here on Wednesday

"The Lottery Man" proved to me that I am in the O.K.est condition of juvenile health. Not only did I howl with mirth throughout the play, but I chuckled all the way home. Even in bed I suddenly found myself laughing at Lizzie. I'm laughing now. Nothing so funny as Lizzie has happened in seasons. Lizzie would "break up' a mummy." These are the words of Alan Dale, critic of the American, who, after seeing the premiere of the play at the Bijou Theatre, returned three times.

"The Lottery Man" remained in New York for over six months, and the Shuberts are now sending it to this city next Wednesday, Feb. 15, when it will be seen at the Grand theatre with the same New York cast. The comedy, which is by Rida Johnson Young, takes its name from the fact that a newspaper reporter offers himself as a prize in a human lottery and is won by an old maid, Lizzie.

The seat sale opened this morning.

Millbrook Is Visited By $20,000 Fire--Needler's Flour Mill Is Destroyed

Spontaneous Combustion is Supposed to Have Caused the Most Disastrous Blaze Village Has Known Since 1875 Firemen Fought Hard.

MILLBROOK, FEB. 13.—The most disastrous fire that has ever visited Millbrook since 1875, when the business part of the town was entirely destroyed, broke out at 12.30 Sunday morning in Needler's flour mill, which this morning is a smouldering heap of twisted machinery and charred timbers. When discovered, the fire had already made considerable progress, and before the hose could be laid or the engine pumping, all hope of saving the building had vanished.

The firemen and citizens concerned themselves with trying to save part of the contents and the buildings in the immediate vicinity. The windows of the storehouse, the part farthest from where the fire started, were broken and all the flour that was in sacks was saved, in all about $300 worth.

In a very few minutes after the first sound of the bell, the building was entirely enveloped in flames. It was frame and dry, and as the wind was quite strong from the south west, blowing unobstructed across the pond, the fire made tremendous progress, rendering any further attempt at saving the mill or contents worse than futile.

Had there been no snow on the roofs of the houses to the north-east, there is little doubt but that much of the town would have been in ruins, as burning shingles were carried upwards of half a mile from the scene of the fire and some buildings were showered with a mass of burning material. Owing, however, to the damp snow, no other fire occurred except a dwelling house near the mill that caught fire on account of the intense heat, but was soon extinguished with little damage done. For nearly an hour the flames, fanned by the wind leaped and roared high above the building. Fear was entertained that the flume might be destroyed and the town flooded, so an attempt was made to train the two streams on it, but the heat prevented the firemen getting near enough to use the hose. The pond was lowered by raising stop logs at the dam so the danger of a flood was taken away. By 1.30 the frame work alone was standing, but in a short time it too fell. The safe had not been opened on account of the rapid progress the fire had made, but was now visible. By turning the water on it the firemen hoped to prevent it becoming so hot as to ruin the books. Several vain attempts were made to reach it, but it was not until 6 o'clock that the ruins had cooled sufficiently for Mr. Chas. Needler to make his way through the smoke and debris to the safe. The outside door was open several inches, but the inside wooden door was unscorched. The books, papers, etc., were in perfect condition.

The origin of the fire is unknown. Mr. Alf. Needler was the last man in the mill on Saturday having gone down, as is his custom, about 9 o'clock to see that everything was all right for the night. The only stove in the building had been allowed to go out and no fire of any kind existed. When first seen the fire was at the and farthest from the stove, so any possibility of its originating from this source is at once out of the question. There is a theory that it might have been caused from over-heated machinery, but as the mill shut down before six on Saturday that also is highly improbable.

The loss is heavy. The mill was a valuable three-storey, frame building with a two storey addition at the west end. The machinery was for the most part modern, and in the course of the last few years about $800 worth of new machinery has been added. The total loss with the stock of grain and feed destroyed, is probably between $12,000 and $15,000. The insurance is about 35 p.c. of this.

With the passing of the red mill one of the oldest land marks of Cavan disappeared. It was built fifty some odd years ago to replace a little log one constructed nearly a century ago, when the early settlers first came into this country. It is expected that the mill will be rebuilt, though Mr. Needler says he has no plans as yet for the future.

POLICE TRACED THIEVES BY FOOTPRINTS IN THE SNOW

Found Them in Bed But Snow on Their Boots Gave the Game Away---Search of the House Developed Three Revolvers and Plenty of Ammunition.

Robert Powell, a local man, was this morning charged with receiving stolen goods, namely, a case of eggs, the property of the Wm. Scott Co., East City. The goods were alleged to have been stolen by Bruce Roy and two of his friends. The accused pleaded not guilty. The case was enlarged until Friday, the 17th.

On Saturday, Fred Raymond, Bruce Roy and Albert Lafreneer were charged with breaking into Scott and Company's store house and stealing therefrom a case of eggs. They pleaded guilty and the circumstances pointed to the fact that Powell had received the goods, knowing that they were stolen. He pleaded not guilty, however, so the evidence will be taken on Friday when the other young men are being sentenced. The three young men were also charged with attempting to breaking into the store of Samuel Londry, with an intent to commit an indictible offence. On Friday night Mr. Londry heard some one trying to break into his store and telephoned for the police. Sergt. Adams and P. C. McGinty were quickly on the scene, but the would-be thieves had departed. Their foot-prints could be easily seen in the newly-fallen snow, however, and the two officers tracked them to the home of Mr. Powell, 558 Park street, north.

The officers entered and found the three young men in bed, and they stated that they had been there from 10 o'clock, but the fresh snow on their boots gave the game away, and they were promptly arrested with the before stated results. A search of the house was made, and the eggs, and several other articles, including a turkey and a couple of chickens were found.

A Startling Discovery.

The three young men above mentioned, admitted to the Chief that they had revolvers, but would not tell where they kept them. The Police went to the Powell home and made a thorough search, with the result that they found a box of ammunition. Yesterday, Mr. Powell came to the Police Station with the revolvers and three boxes of ammunition. He stated that he had found the revolvers in the bed tick, along with the ammunition. There were two of them of 32 calibre, and one 38. The 38 was loaded, and was in a pouch on a belt, which buckled around the waist. One of the revolvers was a new one, and had evidently never been shot off. This fact would indicate that the prisoners are amateurs, and were just getting set up in business.

The young men admitted that they had the revolvers with them, when they were at Londry's, also at Scott & Co's. More discoveries are expected to be made.

Chas. Brimble, who was charged with assault, in the Police Court on Friday last, and who was sentenced to one month in gaol, when he could not pay the fine of $20.00, which was to be paid forthwith, has now paid his fine. A local man stated to an Examiner representative to-day, that Brimble intended to appeal the case. No definite information can be found regarding Brimble's intentions, however, but according to reports the above action will be taken.

"Manufacturers Not Always Best Judges Of What Is Best For The Government"

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, FEB 13.—"Our experience with manufacturers is that though they are the best judges of their own business, they are not necessarily the best judges of what is best for the Government." In this terse sentence Hon. Mr. Fielding, the Minister of Finance, concluded a long interview with the representatives of the pork packers to-day. J. W. Flavelle, spokesman, said: "I can assure you if reciprocity prevailed in Canada to-day not a single house would kill a hog this week." The packers departed with no promises.

Why the Optical Institute Succeeds

There are Optometrists in Canada who do a larger business than ourselves. These are Optometrists and Opticians who do a smaller, but the Optometrist who does better work or gives better value has not pushed his head above the Optical Horizon. A strong statement to be sure, but when we point to twenty years of the best training and experience in both United States and Canada and over 17000 persons helped to the best possible Eyesight are we not justly proud of our work? We are even adding to our facilities and studying the latest methods. This is why we succeed.

VETO BILL ON MONDAY

Premier Asquith Makes His Declaration of War

Examiner Special.

LONDON, FEB. 13.—In the Commons to-day Premier Asquith gave his declaration of war by announcing the introduction of the Government's veto bill next Monday. In the meantime the Liberals are getting ready to meet the Opposition leaders by completing the list of men who would accept peerages immediately and vote in the House of Lords for the measure should the Conservative peers prove obstinate. It is plainly indicated that the Government intends to pass the measure by drastic means if necessary.

RECIPROCITY DISCUSSION

Examiner Special.

WASHINGTON, D.C., FEB. 13.—The Reciprocity bill was brought into consideration immediately after the House met to-day. A long and important discussion is expected. All absentees have been ordered into the Chamber to ensure a quorum and full discussion. This is the beginning of a sensational fight.

POOL-ROOMS ARE BLAMED

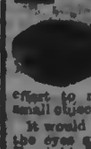
TO CURE A HEADACHE

The experience of Mr. O. Barber, Elmsee, Ont., is of interest to all who suffer from headaches. He writes: "For a long time I was troubled with headaches which came on about once a week with such violence that I could not eat or do my work. Headache powders and quick cures did me no good. I then used six boxes of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food and have not been troubled with headache since. That was eight months ago."

The Care Of The E--Y--E--S



A person in good health, at the age of 45 years, will ordinarily notice a change in the sight, requiring more effort to read fine print, or to see small objects.

It would then be advisable to have the eyes examined by a Competent Eyesight Specialist and fitted with "Preserving or pure Glasses".

This would give great comfort and prevent eye strain, which is the cause of much trouble in after years.

Glasses should be changed usually once in two years.

First, to fit changed conditions of sight, and Second, Glasses lose their transparency by wear.

Headaches are often warnings that the eyes need help and they should not be neglected.

The Eyes are the most important organs of the five senses, and generally the most abused.

Many Eyes Are Ruined by wearing cheap and imperfect glasses.

COMMITTEE PASSES IT.

Reciprocity Measure Sent on to the House.

Washington, Feb. 13.—The Canadian reciprocity agreement was reported favorably, 12 to 7, to the House on Saturday by the committee on ways and means.

The committee adopted an amendment proposed by Mr. Mann of Illinois providing that wood produced in Canada may be brought into the United States free, and that products of wood, as specified in the bill, up to valuation of 4 cents a pound, may be brought in free.

The committee in its final vote to report the bill stood: For—Payne (New York), McCall (Mass.), Hill (Conn.), Boutell (Ills.), Needham (Cal.), Longworth (Ohio) Republicans; Clark (Mo.), Underwood (Ala.), Pou (N.C.), Randell (Texas), Harrison (N.Y.), and Bunkley (Ga.) Democrats—12.

Against—Dalzell (Penn.), Calderhead (Kans.), Fordney (Mich.), James (W. Va.), Dwight (N.Y.), Ellis (Oregon); Republicans, and Broussard (La.) Democrats.—7.

Acting Chairman McCall was authorized to make the report immediately and bring it up in the most feasible and expeditious way. It is probable that a rule will be reported from the ways committee limiting debate and preventing the adoption of amendments, although as a measure of the highest privilege a rule is unnecessary. The present expectation is that the bill will be considered by the House early next week. All reference to wood pulp and paper was first taken out of the McCall bill and contained in the following:

"Pulp of wood mechanically ground, pulp of wood chemically bleached or unbleached, news print paper and other paper and paper board manufactured from mechanical wood pulp or from chemical wood pulp or of which such pulp is the component material of chief value, colored in the pulp or not colored, and valued at no more than four cents per pound, not including printed or decorated wall paper, being the products of Canada, when imported therefrom directly into the United States, shall be admitted free of duty on the condition precedent that no export duty, export license fee or other export charge of any kind whatsoever (whether in the form of additional charge or license fee or otherwise) or any prohibition or restriction in any way of the exportation (whether by law order, regulation, contractual relation, or otherwise directly or indirectly) shall have been imposed upon such paper, board, or wood pulp, or the wood pulp used in the manufacture of such paper or board."

The committee's action upholds in its entirety the agreement negotiated with Canada, but changes the phraseology of the McCall bill, which was drafted as an administration measure to put that agreement into legislative shape.

PREPARING FOR CEREMONY.

Coronation is the Chief Topic of Interest in London.

London, Feb. 13.—Since the beginning of the winter the chief functionaries of the British court have been busily absorbed with preparations for the coronation of George V., which will surpass in pageantry and in historical interest all former ceremonials of the character. While the ceremony of crowning the King and Queen in Westminster Abbey on June 22 will be almost identical in form with that of which has been followed in the investitures of British sovereigns since William IV. and Queen Adelaide, the auxiliary functions, may expected to exceed in pageantry and magnificence anything that has taken place in the past.

These will include the progress of the court through London on the day after the coronation, and a visit to the Guildhall with a reception of the King and Queen by the city authorities, a great naval review, a gala performance at the opera with minor celebrations and pageants, among which will be a "Festival of Empire" at the Crystal Palace.

Business men and transportation companies count on an influx of something approaching 2,000,000 visitors to London during the coronation season. A considerable proportion of these will be foreigners, Americans and colonials probably predominating. Hotels are receiving many orders for accommodations, but expect to be able to cope with the invasion. The best places are being reserved for the regular patrons, and managers say that rooms for the coronation week will not be more than double the regular rates for the best hotels. Boarding housekeepers are likely to be less reasonable in charges to visitors who have not made arrangements for accommodations in advance.

There is every indication that the erection of the stands for witnessing the procession to the abbey, and the progress through London will be on a scale more extensive than for the coronation of King Edward in 1902. Owners and tenants are asking the highest prices ever quoted for building sites and windows. Rates to the ordinary applicants for seats, which usually are held at the highest possible mark until a few days before the event, are apt to go down a withdrawn on the eve of the coronation when speculators find they have frightened away the public.

A lively insurance business has begun at Lloyds against the death of the King or any event necessitating postponement of the coronation and against bad weather.

Dr. Davidson, the present Archbishop of Canterbury, will officiate in the abbey, in succession to the aged Archbishop Temple, who crowned King Edward.

Cunning Hand Of Henri Bourassa Revealed In Reciprocity Debate

(Ottawa Free Press.)

The proceeding s of the House of Commons Thursday, when the two parties came to grips upon the reciprocity issue, commenced with a comedy and ended with a farce.

Between the two there was an impassioned extempore speech from Hon. Mr. Fielding, delievered with a fire that was most reassuring to those who have viewed with alarm his recent illness, a carefully-prepared presentation of the policy of the Opposition by its leader, Mr. R. L. Borden, a stentorian and effective deliverance by Hon. Mr. Paterson, and a characteristic talk by Hon. George E. Foster.

Mr. Fielding indicated emphatically that there is no wavering on the part of the government as to the advisability of parliament passing the agreement with the United States. "We are about to accomplish this great thing for which, we believe, our people have been longing during the last forty years," he said, "and with the prospect of that boon to all Canada I say it would be a great wrong, and a grave mistake to delay this matter." He denounced those who who were "content to beat the big drum of Imperialism and insult the intelligence of our people by claiming that the enactment of trade arrangement with the United States interferes with the loyalty of the Canadian people." Again he said: "We believe there is a happy combination of events at Washington now which is likely to result in success; one thing is sure, we will do our part," which was greeted with loud Liberal applause.

Mr. Borden was equally emphatic in declaring that the Conservative Opposition would do all it could to defeat the passage of the agreement. He elaborated the idea, fortified with statistics, that Canada should continue to build up her trade east and west instead of north and south which he predicted would be the result of reciprocity. He waved the Imperial flag some, and declared that Canada would have wasted millions she has spent on transportation, and that the widening of the Welland Canal, and the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal would be unnecessary, if the reciprocity agreement went through. He also stole some of The Free Press thunder by advocating the establishment of a permanent Canadian tariff commission to collect full information about the operation of the tariff?

These were the serious things — the things that count. The comedy and the farce before alluded to is another story.

The Man Behind.

Henri Bourassa was the man behind the comedy, and the leader of the Quebec Nationalist party watched its development with excited countenance, lit every now and again with a broad smile, from the press gallery, to which he has access as editor of Le Devoir. Mr. Monk, the member for Jacques Cartier, and Quebec Conservative leader, was the medium chosen by the clever Frenchman.

It was known that Bourassa had been in conference with his lieutenant Monk all morning, but they had kept their surprise packet to themselves. It turned out to be a pit laid with craft and care for the Conservative party to fall into—and they fell into it.

Bourassa had persuaded Monk to introduce an amendment to the motion for progress," an amendment which was designed to prevent any further advance with the reciprocity agreement, a step which was absolutely unexpected by any of the leaders on either side of the House. It had been understood that immediately after routine the Opposition would agree to the passage of the formal order to go into ways and means and thus give Mr. Borden the opportunity of once again placing himself in the position of the man who leads a party.

But, as aforesaid, Mr. Monk intervened, and in doing so he caused one of the most peculiar complications which have arisen in the history of the House of Commons for many years.

Tories Fell Into Pit.

At the time he proposed his amendment Mr. Monk had no seconder. At the close of his speech he appealed to his deskmate, Mr. Samuel Barker, of Hamilton, but that gentleman by a vigorous shake of the head indicated that he would have nothing to do with it. However, a French member was finally found to second it. But while Mr. Fielding, who followed, was speaking, some Conservative back benchers noticed that there were quite a few absentees on the Liberal side (was it due to the races-) and they saw an opportunity to possibly reduce the government majority. There was then some hobnobbing among the Whips and it was decided to spring the play.

When the vote was taken the whole Conservative party lined up in support of Monk cum Bourassa and the result was the government, caught napping, had a majority of only 26.

The comedy is the topic of general discussion in the lobbies to-day. It is regarded as one of the cleverest moves yet made by the Nationalist leader. It illustrates to his followers in Quebec that he has in Federal politics a working alliance with the Conservatives as he has in the Quebec Legislature, and it enables him to declare, as he has declared in Le Devoir, that he is not absolutely opposed to reciprocity but that he requires more time for its study. Mr. Bourassa has devoted many columns of Le Devoir to a statement of his views as to reciprocity, but they are so clouded with verbiage that it is impossible to ascertain just what his final conclusions are, save that, as in the case of the "marine de guerre," he requires more time for consideration, and that he would like the question referred to the people. There can be no possible doubt as to the popularity of the trade agreement in the rural districts of Quebec—every mail brings conclusive proof of that to the members from that province—and the Nationalists could hardly afford to oppose the pact in its entirety.

A Terrible Trip.

Halifax, N.S., Feb. 13.—Eighteen days out from Harbor Breton, Nfld., during which time she drifted hundreds of miles off her course, from biting winds of the bleak Newfoundland coast, to the warm breezes of the gulf stream, the schooner Cardinio arrived in port yesterday, after one of the longest trips on record, for a sailing vessel, between Halifax and Newfoundland. Capt. Carroll says it was the worst trip in his 25 years' experience on the North Atlantic. It was a series of gales from the time the schooner left the Newfoundland port, and she was driven nearly 200 miles off her course to the south. For five days she lay to, riding out the gale 30 miles south of Sable Island. The sun was not visible during the entire voyage and Capt. Carroll had to run on dead reckoning.

Forty-seven barrels of herrings were swept from the deck into the sea.

Lloyd-George's Health.

London, Feb. 13.—David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer returned to England yesterday from Naples, where he has spent the last few weeks in the hope of regaining his health. The Chancellor has not yet completely recovered from his illness, and will spend the coming week at Brighton.

Albany Also Approves.

Albany, N.Y., Feb. 13.—The Canadian reciprocity agreement was approved in resolutions adopted by the directors of the Republican League of Clubs of the State of New York at their annual meeting here on Saturday.

MARKET REPORTS.

CHICAGO, Feb. 11.—Extensive profit-taking by shorts in view of the 48 hours' coming holiday acted as an offset in part to-day for stop loss selling of wheat by holders fearful of reciprocity. The close was fairly steady at a net decline of ¼d to ⅝c. Corn finished a shade above last night; oats up ⅛c to ⅜c, and provisions 5c to 7½c to 10c down.

Liverpool wheat futures closed to-day 2-3d lower than yesterday; corn was 1-2d to 2-3d lower. Berlin closed 3-4c lower on wheat. Budapest was 7-8c higher, and Antwerp was unchanged.

Restores Prince to Favor.

Berlin, Feb. 13.—Prince Alfonso of Bourbon-Orleans, who incurred the displeasure of King Alfonso of Spain, his cousin, by marrying Princess Beatrice of Saxe-Coburg in July, 1909, has recently been fully restored to royal favor at Madrid.

The princess remains a Protestant, but Prince Alfonso is now again in full enjoyment of all his titles and privileges at the Spanish court. His official residence, however, is still Coburg. The prince is 25 years of age and his wife is 27. Their marriage took place secretly, with the consent of the bride's mother. The prince and princess have since spent much time in England. Princess Beatrice is first cousin to King George.

Roughly Handled.

Montreal, Feb. 13.—John H. Roberts, the secretary of the Dominion Alliance, had an exciting experience in the early hours of Sunday morning. While conducting a raid on a dance hall at the corner of Montcalm and St. Catherine streets, where liquor is alleged to have been sold, and city policemen in uniforms are said to have been seen drinking, Mr. Roberts and three private detectives, who were with him, were roughly handled. The liquor they had seized was taken from them, and in a row that ensued they were considerably outnumbered and handed some hard knocks. One of the private detectives received a cut from a flying bottle, another had a revolver taken from him, and Mr. Roberts was struck on the head two or three times.

The names and addresses of those implicated in the affair have been taken, and complaints will be laid and warrants issued for their arrest.

English Colonel Suicides.

Porcupine, Feb. 13.—Col. Charles Salkeld, formerly of Yorkshire, Eng., and known all over the Northern Ontario mining camps as an English cavalry officer, killed himself on a street of Golden City yesterday morning.

Col. Salkeld was one of the most popular men in the northern district, and none of those here who knew him can assign any reason for his suicide. He has been in this county seven years, and has been engaged as a mining broker in Cobalt, and later in Porcupine, owning a fine house in the former place at Crossed Lake.

The deceased was a member of one of the finest English families, and a colonel in the Imperial cavalry, being in his 53rd year. He leaves behind him a son, aged 21.

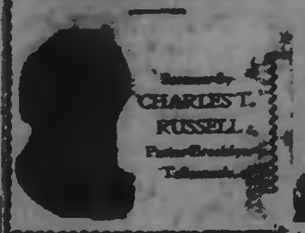
PEOPLE'S PULPIT.



Thousands of Demons Infest the Atmosphere

Bible Shows Their Origin and Their Pernicious Influence on Mankind.

"Giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons" (1. Timothy iv, 1). "Wicked spirits in high positions" (Ephesians vi, 12). "The heathen sacrifice to devils and not to God" (1. Corinthians x, 20).

Trenton, N.J., February 12.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle preached here to-day in the Opera House on the "Hereafter," and subsequently on "Those angels which kept not their first estate" (Jude 6). Excellent attention was given at both services. We repeat the latter as follows:

The Bible's teaching that the earth's atmosphere is infested with evil spirits is now very generally disbelieved. As a result of the disbelief thousands of well-meaning people are being the more easily entrapped by these evil spirits. The blight is both physical and moral. The usual method of procedure is to arouse curiosity. While the quest for knowledge proceeds, an influence much like that of hypnotism affects the investigator, impelling him forward to further investigation. Sometimes the curiosity is attracted through the outer senses at spiritualistic seances, with ouija-boards, etc. At other times it is by spirit rappings. Again, it may be by whisperings in the ear, inaudible to others. At other times the messages come through trance-mediums.

In every instance these communications purport to come from dead human beings. This of itself gives to the communication a special charm to many. They feel honored in being sought out by the dead and in being able to communicate with them. They are curious for information respecting the hereafter. They forget that they have been taught from infancy that the holy dead are far off in heaven, and that the unholy dead are far off in torment.

How fully this is forgotten is shown by a letter which I received on the first day of this month from a Catholic lady. In it she tells how she first obtained clairvoyant powers—the gift of hearing what others could not hear. This, in turn, permitted her to communicate with the evil spirits, the fallen angels. These, representing themselves to her as inmates of purgatory, came to her for help. They solicited her prayers and were progressing to get her more and more under their control. Just in time she was rescued through reading my writings on the subject. Since then she has exercised her will and her prayers against having any fellowship whatever with these fallen angels. Gradually she is becoming more and more enlightened in the Truth of God's Word.

Not infrequently do these spirits personate the Heavenly Father and Christ, urge more prayer, confess of sin, recommend the reading of the Scriptures, etc. This appears to be with a view to gaining the confidence, the relaxing of the will. Later on dishonorable suggestions are made. The Bible is scorned, prayer is laughed at. If, then, the subject takes fright and seeks to break the hypnotic chain, the evil spirits laugh at him, swear at him, and sometimes tell him that they will shortly have him fully in their power to roast him forever. If he attempts to pray, they intrude and interrupt and tell him that God would not hear him now, that he has gone too far, etc.

With some the matter goes so far that the human will is broken down completely and the spirits obsess them and use their bodies foolishly—sometimes viciously, sometimes insanely, until finally they are pronounced dangerous and committed to asylums. We do not claim that all the insane are obsessed of evil spirits, but so far as we can judge, nearly one-half the inmates of asylums are obsessed by demons who live in them while they are mastering their wills.

God, through His Word, has forewarned His people against these delusions. In permitting them, nevertheless, to fall into these traps, He is merely teaching a great lesson. The terrible results of disobedience, of neglect of God's Word, are not eternal.

The Divine arrangement is that ultimately the entire human family shall be released from the bonds of sin and death, ignorance and superstition, and all have full opportunity for coming into full harmony with God. The present lesson will illustrate the necessity for searching the Scriptures and obeying God's voice therein.

St. Paul, in describing our day, declares one of its prominent signs to be that many will now give heed to these seducing spirits, whose teachings and practices lead away from God. St. Paul intimates also that by these misleading spirits many will come to hold doctrines of demons, or devilish doctrines. It is a sad commentary upon our wonderful day of enlightenment that the most enlightened people should hold the most awful doctrine respecting the hereafter.

A doctrine of demons it most surely is which tells, to the dishonor of God's name, that nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand of humanity are to be eternally tortured, either because of Divine incompetence to make better arrangements for them, or because God willed and foreordained it so before creation. This doctrine of demons has enslaved many honorable people who would themselves scorn to make such a plan of the ages as they attribute to God.

Thank God, the time is not far distant when these seducing spirits will be completely bound, restrained, and deceive humanity thus no more. But the deception has so long surpassed that poor humanity is thoroughly under its control. The falsehood leading up to all this error is Satan's first lie to our parents in Eden. There, contradicting the words of God, he said, "Ye shall not surely die." Ever since, for six thousand years, he has worked along this line, and all the fallen angels with him. His message is, "Ye shall not surely die." You do not surely die. When men seem to die, they become more alive than before they died.

On account of these errors, that dead men are alive, Satan and the fallen angels, contrary to the teachings of the Bible, have instilled into the whole world, nonsensical, heathen superstitions respecting heaven, purgatory and hell. The Catholics pray for those who go to Purgatory, to help them out. Protestants do not pray, believing that the saintly few go direct to heaven and all of the unsaintly go as directly to eternal torture.

If this great lie wherewith Satan first seduced Mother Eve and murdered our race could be fully eliminated from our minds and our creeds, it would mean a religious revolution to both Catholics and Protestants—back to the Bible and away from the domination and seduction of the lying spirits, the fallen angels, who personate humanity.

So far as we can learn from those who have once been spirit mediums, the trend of Spiritism is toward unchastity, impurity. And this agrees well with the Scriptural declaration relative to the sin through which these fallen angels first became reprobate.

St. Jude (6) and St. Peter (II. Peter ii, 4), tell us briefly of the fall of the angels—that they left their own habitation and kept not their first estate." Both Apostles mention the circumstance in connection with human lasciviousness. The story of the fall of the angels is given us briefly in Genesis vi, 1-4. After man's fall into sin God permitted the holy angels to have communication with humanity. And because human eyes cannot see spirit beings, God permitted the angels to materialize. For instance, we note the case of the angels who visited Abraham on the plains of Mamre and for whom he prepared a veal dinner. We read that, materialized, these angels were like men, and taken by Abraham to be men, while they ate and talked with him. It was subsequently that Abraham learned that they were really heavenly visitants.

So it was with all the angels before the flood. They were permitted to materialize and to appear in every sense of the word as men. The record shows that the angels became lustful. We read, "The sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair and took unto themselves wives of such as they chose." The angels, with superior powers and superior knowledge to man's acted as the masters of men, who were practically obliged to do their bidding. The result is stated in few words. The children of this mesalliance, we are told, were giants as compared with the ordinary members of our race. And not only were they giants physically, but also intellectually—"They were men of renown." Poor humanity could not compete with this race. The result was that strife and contention and lustful, sinful practices abounded in all the earth, until God declared that every imagination of the thoughts of man's heart was only evil continually.

God had foreknown all this, and a canopy of waters, which then surrounded the earth, similar to Saturn's rings now, was held in readiness to cause a flood, that sinful men and the human offspring of the angels might be destroyed. Only Noah and his family were found worthy of preservation to be the new start of humanity this side of the flood. The declaration of the Scriptures respecting Noah's family is, "Now Noah was perfect in his generation." He was properly genealated or born—so were his children. There was no strain or admixture of the angelic stock in that family. The plain information is that the remainder of humanity were so degraded by the seductions of those fallen angels that they were not fit to live. The entire race had become corrupt.

Of course, the fallen angels were not destroyed in the flood, for they not only had the power to materialize, but also the power to dematerialize. It was at that time, however, that all of the fallen angels were put under restraint—not permitted again to materialize, the limitation lasting "until the judgment of the great day."

Their restraints or chains are not physical, to confine them to a place in Tartarus—the earth's atmosphere. They may roam at will; but are chained, or restrained from materializing. The intimation of the Scripture seems to be that, with the ending of this Gospel Age, just prior to the inauguration of the New Dispensation, these evil spirits may be allowed to break their chains and manifest themselves as men, in connection with the great trouble time incidental to the change of Dispensation.

Separated from God and the holy angels, and unable to assume human bodies, the sinful angels have probably had terrible experiences during the past forty-four hundred years. True happiness is not to be expected amongst those alienated from God. Anger, malice, hatred, strife, "works of the devil," the Apostle says, are not compatible with the love, joy and peace which belong alone to a condition of holiness. Under such circumstances we cannot wonder that these fallen angels would seek association with humanity. Being under the control of Satan as a class, as princes of devils, they have reversed his course and propagated his original falsehood—"Ye shall not surely die." They have conjured to men's minds the hell of the heathen, the hell and Purgatory of the Catholics, and, worst of all, our Protestant misconception of awful and unending torture for all except the saintly few.

These doctrines of demons have increased the gulf between God and humanity and have made the Bible, the message of God's love, a book of terrors—not to be loved, merely to be endured or kept as a fetish to secure possibly a cooler place in purgatory. We may safely say that all the false doctrines of Christendom, represented in all of the creeds of the "Dark Ages," are doctrines of demons. Our minds become defiled—our hymn-books, our creeds, everything.

Thank God that the light of the New Dispensation is now bringing to us the beginning of blessing—release from some of our darkness. The seeing of the true wages of sin—that it is death and not eternal torment—is one of the most important features connected with our enlightenment. When we learn that the dead are really dead and, as the Bible declares, will not know anything until the resurrection, then we begin to see the beauty of God's Plan—the need of Christ's death; the need of His second coming; the need of His Kingdom; the need of a resurrection; the need of an opportunity for all mankind to come to a clear knowledge of the great Truth of redemption through the precious blood and the opportunity then, by God's grace, of attaining eternal life—either during this Gospel age, as New Creatures, spirit beings like unto the angels, or in the New Dispensation during the more general salvation of the world to human perfection in an earthly Paradise.

Our great Redeemer manifested his power by casting out demons from those who had become obsessed. And we read further that he commissioned his Apostles to heal all manner of disease and to cast out unclean spirits. We are told that they did this—and numerous instances, in illustration, are given us. One man was obsessed by a legion of these spirits. No wonder the poor fellow was crazy. But after they were cast out he was clothed and in his right mind and became a disciple (Luke viii, 26-36).

St. Paul and Silas had an experience with an obsessed young woman who practiced sooth-saying, fortune-telling, by the power of the evil spirit which obsessed her. As the evil spirits recognized Jesus and cried, "We know Thee, who Thou art, Jesus," so this spirit knew the Apostles and, through the young woman's lips, cried after them, "These be the servants of the Most High God, which show to us the way to obtain eternal life" (Acts xvi, 16-18).

Neither Jesus nor the Apostles were willing to accept demon testimony and commanded the evil spirits to come out of their victims.

The Scriptures indicate that there will be a wonderful activity amongst the fallen angels in the close of this Gospel Age. The Master declared that the deceptions would be such that, if it were possible, the "very elect" would be deceived. But that will not be possible, because Divine providence stands engaged to protect the elect. The Ninety-First Psalm, which gives a picture of the closing of this Age and its sundry trials and tests, declares that God will give his messengers a charge concerning the feet members of the Body of Christ in all their ways—lest a foot should be dashed against a stone of stumbling (Psalm xci, 12).

As Satan and the fallen angels operate largely through "the children of disobedience," so God and his holy messengers use not only the Scriptures, but God's children of obedience as mouthpieces, as helpers, as God's ambassadors in "building one another up in the most holy faith." Hence the time when "a thousand shall fall at thy side and ten thousand at thy right hand" will be also the time when these enslaving and deceptive errors will "not come nigh them"—not come nigh the members of the Body of Christ, the elect.

If our understanding of the Scriptures be correct, we need not be surprised if the fallen angels may again seemingly gain a victory over the Divine restraints and materialize in broad daylight—personating not only the dead, but also at times personating the living. Spiritists and mediums are claiming such things as already beginning and likely to be accomplished on a grand scale shortly. Should it come it will inaugurate a terrible time of trouble such as has not been since the flood. God's people, while resting confidently and at ease under Divine supervision, should be on the alert to resist everything akin to Spiritism, Occultism, Hypnotism, and to warn their friends respecting these things.

Numerous scientific men are being entrapped by these lying spirits whose doings and powers they are investigating under the name of Psychic Phenomena.

Thank God we are nearing the time when Satan shall be bound and when every evil influence shall be restrained. Not only will there be a full cleansing from a physical obsession, but a still greater cleansing and freeing from the doctrines of demons.

An English Chemist Has Discovered How to Grow Hair

In England the ladies have entirely abandoned wearing rats, which is due entirely to this new discovery.

It has been proven that Henna leaves contain the ingredients that will positively grow hair. That they contain this long-looked-for article is proven every day.

The Americans are now placing on the market a preparation containing the extract from Henna leaves, which is having a phenomenal sale.

This preparation is called SALVIA, and is being sold with a guarantee to cure Dandruff and to grow hair in abundance. Being daintily perfumed, SALVIA makes a most pleasant hair dressing. The Tully Drug store is the first to import this preparation into Peterborough, and a large, generous bottle can be purchased for 50c.

"THE INNOCENT MURDERERS"

By Wm. Johnston and Paul West

The deacon was about to call his wife to see the Aurora, when he suddenly reflected that this could not be it, for this was spring time, and, furthermore, the Aurora does not appear in the southeast. But he called his wife and asked her if she could see the glow.

"Mercy!" she exclaimed. "It's a fire somewhere!"

"No," said the deacon, "that's no fire. It's too white. I don't think I ever saw such a light before. I wonder if Dean Quimby has gone to bed yet."

The Dean resided next door, and the deacon found him in his study, writing. As a matter of fact, the Dean was transcribing to paper a report of the strange occurrences of this week, with a view to seeing what relation they could all bear to each other, and principally to the case of Professor Hopkins. He did not relish being disturbed, but the Deacon's insistence at last forced him to go out on his piazza, and take a look over Cemetery Hill. What he saw greatly astonished him.

"My goodness!" he exclaimed. "What can it be?"

"That's what I've been wondering said the deacon. "Did you ever see a light like it before"

"I never did,' said the Dean. "Let us go down town and see if anybody else has perceived it."

They had not gone far down the street when they found that the appearance of the strange light was already the prime topic of conversation, having superseded even the gossip regarding Hopkins.

"It's a comet,' insisted the druggist. "I remember just before the war broke out I saw one that made a light like that."

"'And in the last times there shall come signs in the heavens,'" quoted the Deacon to the Dean.

"It's a sure sign that something's going to happen!" was the verdict of the women. Of all the prophets they were the nearest to being right.

"Why don't somebody go and find out what it is?" asked someone. Needless to say, he did not add, "I'll volunteer to lead an investigating party!" Nobody in Graydon had any strong desire to pay a visit to Cemetery Hill at night. Graydon was not an oversuperstitious community, but there are things at which the most matter-of-fact people balk. Night excursions to remote cemeteries are in that category.

So Graydon contented itself with wondering, theorizing and predicting for that night. And in the morning, naturally enough, the light was not visible. It was, however, talked about all day, and with the first sign of twilight the town turned its collective eye in the direction of the cemetery again, and said, with eager, expectant lips:

"Will it come again?"

And in the throngs that centred their gaze on the distant hill, crowned with cedar trees and its outline broken with projecting gravestones, were three persons more interested than all the others. These were the colleagues of the missing Gordon, Messrs. Fischer, Rice and Snyder.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN.

The Escape of Ernesta.

Sullivan was morally certain that Gordon and Ernesta had not the slightest idea that they were followed. However, he had been fooled once before in his career by a man whom he was shadowing, and in exactly the same way that they might now be deceiving him. So he did not allow himself to become absolutely sure that his quarry was headed for New York until the train had stopped at the Back Bay station and gone on.

"If they didn't try to give me the slip there," was his comment, "I guess it's all right!" By a glance in through the door of their car—they had not taken a Pullman—he saw them seated, half way down the car, busily engaged in conversation. "I think I can ride easier in the smoker," he said and went back to that car.

The six-hour ride to New York gave the detective more time than he wanted to commune with himself. Speculation on the reason for Gordon and the girl going to the metropolis could result in nothing but more speculation. He tried to get his mind off the subject of the Hopkins case and everything connected with it. He bought a book and tried to read, but it did not arouse his interest. Suddenly he remembered that in his pocket were the papers and memoranda which he had extracted from the professor's black bag, on Monday night, in the laboratory. This was the first opportunity he had found to examine them thoroughly, and he now took out his pocket-book and proceeded to look them over.

They were a mixed lot of papers, notes that meant nothing to Detective Sullivan, and which he put aside as Greek, but which were really algebraic formulæ, scribblings on odd bits of paper, random writings intelligible only to the writer. But there were also some newspaper clippings, and the detective thought these might tell him something.

It was dull reading, however, and only one thing about the lot of clippings interested him. They were all on one subject—scientific experiments, reports, news and dry gossip, all on one subject—the new metal, Radium.

Finally he gave up trying to make anything out of them by himself, though he reached the conclusion that they might be very useful if looked over by somebody who knew more about what they meant. He decided to work his case out on common-sense lines, and not to try to mix science with them.
